NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., May 6.—The city was in complete holiday attire and business is entirely suspended to honor Mrs. Margaret E. Crocker for her many acts of public beneficence, the latest of which was the bestowment upon the city of the E. R. Crocker Art Gallery, valued at $500,000. The demonstration to-day took the form of a grand floral festival at the Pavilion Building, the interior of which was completely hidden by contributions ranging from bouquets to immense sets of pieces from all parts of the State. In the afternoon there were congratulatory exercises by 3000 school children. The formal presentation of the art gallery was made in the evening.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Treasury Jordan says the Treasury count is practically over, and everything was found most satisfactory. Three silver dollars which escaped from a broken package in the silver vault had been found. The only discrepancy is two cents missing from a five-dollar package of pennies in the cash room. Yesterday a heavy square box, wrapped in red tape and securely bound, was found in an out-of-the-way nook of the vault, with the key mislaid. A locksmith opened the box and it was found to contain a bottle of diamonds, a bottle of pearls, a bottle of atar of rosee, and a lump of gold. One of the older employees identified the articles as presents to President Monroe about the year 1823 from the Japanese Government, and which had been stored in the Treasury pending the passage of an act of Congress authorizing their acceptance. Congress failed to legislate on the subject, and the articles were in the Treasury, where they have remained ever since.

SAN ANTONIO, May 6.—The well-known mineralogist of this city, Mr. R. H. McCracken, has just returned from a trip to Mexico, where he went to verify the reports concerning the rich silver fields lately discovered in the Santa Rosa Mountains. He reports that the mines are situated in the Sierra Madre, eastern sub-division, and are there the finest in the world.

PREVILLE, N. Y., May 6.—For more than fifty years George W. Tripp and his wife have lived in this village. Mrs. Tripp has been in ill health for years. On Saturday last the doctor told Tripp that his wife had a cancer, and that she could live but a short time. On Sunday afternoon the old man was found hanging from a beam in his barn, with a note pinned to his coat. It read as follows: "Monroe will die and leave alone; I cannot bear it." He was seventy-nine years old. His wife was seventy-eight.

NEW YORK, May 6.—The eight of a plot of ground, 100 by 125 feet, divided by chalk lines into yard squares, is attracting attention at the Harlem end of New York. The explanation is that an entirely novel scheme for raising the money with which to buy a plot for the Methodist Church is being tried. The land is to cost $40,000. The contributor of $30 will be, nominally, the owner for life of a particular square yard. A certificate will be issued to him, and in the corner-stone of the edifice will be put a diagram showing the purchases. Half the proceeds of the sale will be sold, and the plan seems likely, through its success, to set an example that will be widely followed in new church enterprises.

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan., May 6.—The Oklahoma colonists, under Capt. Crouch, who have been camped here since Jan. 23, struck their tents this morning and have already started for Caldwell, thirty-four miles west of here. Capt. Crouch says the colony will remain at Caldwell for a few weeks, or until it is definitely known what the administration will do toward opening the country. The colony has not disbanded, nor dispersed. The move to-day is made on account of the natural advantages, and with no reference to the army.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 7.—Reports from the Indian Territory state that one of the most fearful storms ever known in that section occurred near Mount Scott on the 6th instant. It began in the evening with a southerly wind with a force of eighty miles per hour, and increased to a gale through the night with terrific thunder and lightning and a driving rain. The forest for miles was swept away by the wind, and the destruction of everything in its broad path is complete. In localities further the destruction of cabins and dugouts occupied by cattle-herds is reported, and several lives are said to have been lost.

CHATTANOOGA, May 7.—A terrible tornado swept over the town of New Market, Ala., yesterday, and left a path of devastation in its track. About dark a cloud of inky blackness passed over the town, when suddenly, without any previous warning, a loud roar, like the rush of many waters, was heard, and the fearful hurricane came upon the place. Its track was narrow, but it swept everything before it. The first obstacle in its track was a large church and Masonic temple. It was picked up and blown into atoms, the timber flying in all directions. The largest store in the town was next blown from its foundation, and the earth a short distance beyond the town. The damage is estimated at $50,000.

NEW YORK, May 7.—The funeral of Mrs. Frank A. Vanderbilt, widow of Com. Vanderbilt, died the church of the Strangers to-day. The church was draped with black. The two pews held by Mrs. Vanderbilt, were draped and covered with black. On the black velvet-covered coffin was laid a bunch of white flowers, and leaning against the side was a large cross of lilies. Dr. Deems, his son, the Rev. William Deems, and Bishop McVey, who is president of the service. The University, white ashes, as did the pallbearers. Bishop McVey, who was Mrs. Vanderbilt's old pastor, made an address. Illustrating her charity, he quoted from a private memorandum book left by her. It showed that she had given $100,000 in 1877, $450,000 in 1878, and in 1881, $250,000. She helped poor students and aged clergymen, and befriended widows and orphans. The large brass-covered box containing the casket was carried to the open door of

"THE ANGEL LEATH."

(Translated from the German.)

Why shouldst thou fear the beautiful angel death?
Who waits thee at the portals of the skies,
Ready to kiss away the struggling breath,
Ready with gentle hands to close thine eyes?

How many a tranquil soul has passed away,
Fled gladly from fierce, pain and pleasure dim,
To the eternal splendor of the day,
And many a troubled heart still calls for him!

Spirits too tender for the battle here Have turned from life, its fears, its hopes, its pains,
And children, shuddering at a world so drear,
Have smilingly passed away into his arms.

Behold! thou faintest will, to ease thy pain,
Lay his cold hand upon thy aching brain;
Will soothe the tenors of thy troubled heart
And bid the shadows of earth's grief depart.

He will give back what either time, nor ought,
Nor passionate prayer, nor longing hope restore;
Dear, as to long-blinded eyes, recovered sight,
He will give back those who have gone before.

Oh! what were life if life were all?
These eyes are blinded by thy tears, or thou wouldst see

Thy fingers wait thee in the far-off skies,
And death, thy friend, will give them all to thee.

"The Spirit Helpeth Our Infirmities."

Much unanswered prayer is accounted for by our neglect of the office of the Holy Spirit, not to mention neglect of the person. This paper does not propose to discuss the error of those who deny the personality of the Holy Ghost; but we must not fail to note the consequence of that denial upon the doctrine of the office. For if there be no person, what is the office? or what is the meaning of the words quoted at the head of this article, or the many other texts which might be quoted? The heresy of dogma is easily seen; but the heresy of practice among the orthodox is not so easily cured. It lies in consciousness, and hence must be a matter of voluntary confession to God. The unpardonable quality of our sin against the Holy Ghost lies largely in a refusal to confess even to God our conscious guilt to him; for our recognition of the spiritual presence is not forced by phenomena or logic, sign or science, but is as direct a consciousness as that of our own existence. Argument or skepticism in either case indicates at least incipient insanity. It may be a presence which we can not comprehend, but the fact of the presence is not debatable, for it belongs to consciousness.

Let the reader pardon yet ponder the above paragraph, which may appear too dry or perhaps foggy. It is a momentous doctrine. Let him study it. Now to the "help."

1. Many of our infirmities lie upon the vain and egotistic side of our natures. We think they are our good points. Many of us come to the throne of grace in a sort of confidential way and think we do the Almighty honor in admitting him to matters which we could very well manage ourselves. Others come very eagerly and persistently—dwelling rather on the intensity of our desires than on the grace of God. Others still come to God, but leave the Holy Ghost, or Christ, or both, out of the petition. We implicitly make this kind of argument. He is a prayer-bearing God. He knows I want the thing asked. He has it. He must give. We are frequently unconscious of the suppression of the important conditions connected with the prayer and the answer. We forget that the fact of an earnest desire is no argument that we shall be heard.

The holiest desires possess no merit. The dog may for aught I know desire to be a man; but that would be no argument that his desire ought to be granted. People often desire to be angels—I think the desire will never be gratified. I should lose faith in Christ if I did. We forget also that if we would be answered we must ask in the proper way. Application must be through the appointed channels. Much feeling and much speaking may accompany true prayer, but they alone or combined are worthless without Christ and the Spirit.

2. We have infirmities of another kind. Self-distrust grows excessive. We are conscious of so many failures and so many transgressions. We have injured our influence by habits of levity, idleness, selfishness, impatience and inattention. We know that we bungle things dreadfully both in act and speech whenever we go to serving God. Our business matters we are skillful. We have skill in managing a social gathering. We never fail in our estimates or appointments for secular matters. But how clumsy, slow and careless in the religious life! We are conscious of coldness and stupidity and at the same time of a thousand lively, suspicious or evil thoughts of others. With all this conscious load we hesitate. What is the use for us to pray? Will God answer us? How can we pray? It looks almost like hypocrisy to kneel down. Many an one, doubtless, says: "I know I am a sinner, and now I shall not add the sin of hypocrisy by appearing so humble," or, "I will not venture where I know I do not deserve to be recognized, much less received." It is the office of the spirit to help our infirmities in these respects and to bring us again to the Father.

3. We have a class of infirmities of a different kind, viz: Deadness of conscience. Often we may recognize our condition by deadness of conscience, but the fact that we do recognize even our danger does not help us to God. I believe it was the King of the Sandwich Islands who discovered himself to be a leper by catching hold of a hot lamp chimney and not feeling the heat. He awoke to a mental consciousness that he was incurably diseased. The thought was horrifying; but the disease was all the same. So often we may grow conscious of the existence of a dreadfully diseased state of our heart and may have a mental horror while the conscience is without sensation. We "delight in the law after the inward man, but the law in our members brings us into captivity to the law of sin." There is this fearfully awakened consciousness of depravity and the dead conscience everywhere among men. They have been led to believe that it is a necessary state of mind and heart for the Christian. They forget that while Paul states it as a fact, he declares it to be "captivity to the law of sin." But Paul says further that the Spirit has freed him from this captivity. So, too, with us. We must not accept the fact as descriptive of a state of things in which we are to acquiesce, but one in which the Spirit will help our infirmities.

4. The manner of help is worth noticing. We have seen that the Spirit is a conscious presence, and hence the question in that respect is not debatable. But there are accompaniments which always attend the Spirit's presence to enable us to render to others a "reason of the hope that is in us." "A miserable superstition" is the ordinary sneer of even many so-called Christians. Our consciousness of the divine presence is not debatable with ourselves; neither is it demonstrable to others directly as a presence. Those who witness the descent of the Spirit at Pentecost said that the recipients were drunk. But Peter's rational talk and conduct went to their hearts. So always to the Christian now is given some grace by which to show to the unbeliever that God has revealed himself to the conscience. In the chapter from which the text is taken hope is the virtue by which our infirmities are helped. Never yet had this virtue been lacking to the person enjoying the Spirit's presence. No matter how strong all the apparent arguments were to the contrary, hope triumphed. Let one read the first five verses of the fifth chapter of Romans and he will be ready to try his own spirit whether it be a superstitious delusion or a genuine afflatus of the Holy Ghost. For if he can show the virtues therein named to the world he has made proof which, if rejected, involves the rejection in a denial of his own conscious estimate of human nature and the ordinary effect of certain influences brought to bear upon it. Every martyr or persecuted person who bore himself as Paul describes, won from the ranks of the enemy the honest opponents of Christianity, leaving only those who for the sake of consistency would lie to their own conscious convictions and thus close effectually the entrance of the Holy Ghost into their own hearts.

5. The Spirit also helps through intercessions for us. Recognized in his office, he then becomes not only our teacher and advocate, but with his "unutterable groanings" he enables us to become partakers of blessings from the divine throne, which otherwise could never have been bestowed upon us. All blessings surely come through Christ and of his merit, but all the apostolicity of his disciples depends upon the intercession of the Spirit. Read John xvi, especially verses 13, 14 and 15. At Pentecost the divine enabling act took effect. Christ would have died and risen in vain had it not been for that. "Tarry at Jerusalem until ye be clothed with power from on high." Might as well. For if not, new formulas and new facts will be but a nine days' wonder. New creeds are useless and absurd. There will be the same practical difficulties to success as before. Human nature as bad as ever. Sin as brazen faced and triumphant. Life as aimless and cheerless. The hopes excited in the human breast by Jesus in the beginning of his ministry blasted. Moral suasion pressing from no higher altitude would yield no grander results. Might would dominate truth. Virtue would still walk the world only to be insulted or enchained. The longings in man's heart for some way to reach and rescue the perishing must forever be abandoned as the pangs of too sensitive a nature for the rough realities of this world. The desire to attain to the ideal of beauty, holiness, love, peace, joy, must be rated as so much of idle dreaming which fate allowed to worry man but forbade him ever to hope to realize. To grow into heavenly dimensions of grandeur and power—to take measurements by the pure spiritual standards that, duly had marked in the conscience must be forever given up. No, no, no! The Spirit helpeth. These infirmities vanish. A second endowment is made to man. The heritage of earth is restored—marred, enslaved, groaning to be set free. But he is free again, and having the Spirit of adoption becomes heir of God and co-heir with Christ. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift!

T. A. S. A.

From Arcadia, La.

At Andrew Chapel, on the Brushwood circuit, there were large congregations at the Saturday services as well as on Sunday. The numbers of young people present was enough to do the pastor's heart good and fill him with the hope of gathering much young, vigorous life into the work of the church. There ought to be a grand work done in that community, and we believe that Bro. C. W. Hodge, the pastor, is the man under God to do it. He is very cheerful and hopeful, and is encouraged to believe that his entire circuit will advance on every line of Christian living, working and giving this Conference year. Sunday began with the nine o'clock love-feast, which proved a precious season indeed to all. The class meetings are held at some points on this circuit, and as we find always to be the case where they are held, God owns and mightily blesses the witnesses to his name. A goodly sum for those important collections, foreign missions and church extension, was realized in subscriptions and cash.

The Andrew Chapel Women's Foreign Missionary Society was organized with a large membership.

The sisters entered with alacrity and real zest into this promising field of "woman's work for woman." The following were elected as officers for 1885: President, Mrs. A. E. Morrison; first vice-president, Mrs. Laura Ellis; second vice-president, Mrs. W. H. Goodwin; recording secretary, Miss Bettie Perritt; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Sallie Robertson; treasurer, Miss Ida Wimberly; solicitor for Woman's Missionary Advocate, Miss Loretta Morrison. We shall look for a good report from this society, and also from the other societies that Bro. Hodge will organize at Brushwood and his other preaching points.

Pulpit Laudation.

BY REV. ANSON DOWLING.

The functions of the pulpit require moral courage. When occupied by men of convictions the pulpit becomes a throne of power. This throne is related to flaming and thundering Sinai. Its law flashes pealing thunder. Sinners are smitten with the vengeance of offended law. To the dying gaze of the sinner the pulpit lifts the "bleeding cross." Black clouds of divine wrath rift into deep blue skies; thunder hushes and sweet sounds of heavenly harmonies fall with entrancing charms upon the listening ears. In all this grand work the pulpit has performed an important work—a heaven-appointed work. While the pulpit, therefore, is entitled to high commendation, it is liable to too high exaltation. Instead of giving glory to God, glory is given to the pulpit—the preacher. Of this bestowment of pulpit praise come divisions among the people—among believers. Even churches are divided and factions formed. Pulpit is arrayed against pulpit. The heavens grow dim and gloomy by the smoke of pulpit powder. The hosts of Zion struggle among themselves, and Satan watches and catches the shattered, bleeding, struggling heroes. They began in the Spirit, but ended in the flesh.

Judicious commendation is as marrow to the bones. It strengthens the weak, emboldens the timid and dispels gloom from the Spirit. It makes days grow brighter, the earth more cheerful, the birds sing sweeter and all nature become the habitation of God. But for judicious commendation many a young preacher had sunk in distress. It even makes old preachers look younger, step easier, talk better, work harder, run faster, preach and pray with moreunction and power. This is the office of judicious commendation.

Commendation injudiciously bestowed works a counterbalancing harm. It inflates the head, contracts the heart, weakens faith, diminishes love and makes an idol of the person. This tends to overthrow the pulpit, enervate the gospel and enthroned Satan. By flattery Satan makes flank movements on the church. In this campaign he employs mixed forces. Among his forces may be found those who cater to popular taste, those who think they know everything and must select and direct for everybody. In this company will be found certain contributors to and editors of a certain rate of secular newspapers. These papers are furnished for the masses, and must, therefore, furnish a dish to suit every appetite. These papers circulate largely among the churches. Hence church news must be put into the papers.

Reporters attend church to take notes. The costly edifice is described, the congregation photographed, especially the beautifully dressed, and sweet women and rich merchants and bankers; and last, but not least, the magnificent organ presided over by a distinguished German, whose artistic touches filled the spacious auditorium with music of "melting splendor." Then the sermon read from beautiful, gilt-edged paper. The sermon was upon the mystically profound science of geology. The sermon smote right and left, and old fogies fell heaps upon heaps. The sermon was pronounced magnum bonum. This magnum bonum sermon is eulogized in the same paper, and in the same column with an elaborate eulogy of the grand performances of the grand French Theatre, and close along by a rose-perfumed pen-and-ink drawing of a stately military hop, in which the chivalry and beauty of the city were equally balanced. Does not such laudation have a tendency to ousting the how of the heavenly archer? Will he shoot at sin with as steady a hand and direct an aim as did William Tell at the apple on the head of his own child?

In these things the man of God needs the courage of the lion and the gentleness of the dove. He needs all this and more that the pulpit may not be an occasion of his damnation. OZARK, ALA., May 8, 1885.

Grenada District Conference.

Mr. Editor: The District Conference for Grenada District, North Mississippi Conference, convened at Wesley Chapel, Water Valley, May 8-10, with Rev. S. M. Thames, P. E., in the chair. The session was very harmonious and profitable. The representation was larger than usual, fourteen of the sixteen charges represented. Bro. Thames is a hard-working, painstaking presiding elder, giving all his time, talent and energy to the work of the district. None of the interests of the church escape his watchful eye. The spiritual condition of the district is good, only a few places reported otherwise. The finances are well up in some of the charges, while others are considerably behind. Water spouts in the spring, dry weather in the summer, early frost in the fall, have a wonderful effect on the preachers salaries and the enterprises of the church. The preachers all seem cheerful and hopeful however, and have faith in their people and believe, with a few exceptions, that all the collections will be met. In fact one of the most hopeful pastors in the Conference is one whose work has not paid to presiding elder and pastor more than forty dollars this year. Says his people can not help it now, but they will come up before the year is out with all claims met.

My opinion is those people will do what their pastor says, but it is a right risky thing to put off. Great prominence was given to religious worship during the Conference; the preaching was of the highest order, no effort to preach "big sermons," but to preach the pure, unadulterated truth, it went home to the hearts of the people and we heard shouts of rejoicing in the camps of Israel that reminded us of the good old times before it became unfashionable for God's people to shout when they were happy in his love. There seems to be a deep spiritual feeling all over this district, and, no doubt, this annual meeting of preachers and laymen will result in great good before this Conference year closes. What a wonderful effect a revival of religion has on a people! It takes but a short while to see and feel the effects of the great revival in Water Valley this year. The Sabbath-school cause is not as flourishing in parts of the district as it ought to be; long, hard winters, open and stoveless churches have much to do with this no doubt.

The Grenada district gives no uncertain sound on the temperance question. I send you a copy of the report from the Committee on Temperance, which was unanimously adopted, and a copy ordered sent to NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE and Water Valley papers with a request that they publish it. The report of the Board of Trustees and of President Newell, of Grenada Collegiate Institute, as to its management, condition, etc., was well received by the Conference. We, as a church, should rally to this institution of learning. It is calculated to accomplish great good, and we ought to give it our support and influence.

The absence of the editor of the ADVOCATE was regretted by all. Some good things were said about his paper. The editor was expected to address the temperance mass meeting on Sunday evening, but his place was filled by Dr. Sullivan, Rev. T. J. Newell and others—all proved themselves to be master workmen.

D. W. Rodgers, L. T. Fitzhugh, R. P. Lake and J. C. Deloach delegates to Annual Conference, Rev. Mr. Bruner and L. M. Lawshe alternates. Next Conference at Tocopola. Blessings upon the presiding elder, his noble corps of assistants in the work, upon Bros. Freeman and Price and the good people of Water Valley and vicinity for the kind hospitality shown us while we were among them.

Latest News from China.

Mr. Editor: One quarter of the year 1885 has passed and this terrible, distressing war has not yet come to an end. The French are much nearer to us now than they have ever been, and yet with all their show of gunboats and men-of-war they do not seem to accomplish their object; that is, compel China to submit to their terms. They have found Chinese armies much more stubborn and determined than they at first expected. The Chinese do not want to continue the war, but would hail with great joy a peaceful settlement of the whole difficulty. I refer to the people, not the officials. Some weeks since three Chinese men-of-war took refuge from the French in the harbor of Ning Po, and since that time the place has been in a state of blockade. There has been a complete stagnation of business, and the people are becoming desperate over it. They have gone so far as to propose to raise the sum of about one hundred thousand dollars to induce the Chinese military officers on board their men-of-war to leave their harbor and thus draw the French away from their city. The people care but little who governs the country, or with whom the authorities are at war, so they are left to enjoy peace and quiet. It is strange to see in our midst in Shanghai the subjects of France going on with their business as quietly as if they were in their own country. I suppose there is no other country in the world where such a state of things could exist. To-day brings us news from Peking of a speedy peace, and yet it is not certain.

The war in this part of China has not as yet prevented us from going on with our work of preaching the gospel to these people. We are able to go in and out among them without any trouble. Though they do not come out and confess Christ by the tens and twenties, yet they attend our ministry in large numbers and listen attentively to the preaching of God's word. This gives us great encouragement to go on with our work looking to God for his blessing. I am truly thankful that I have Bro. Royall and Dr. Duke to assist me in my work of preaching. I want to see many more men come to China with this one aim, to preach Jesus the Savior of men. Brethren of the Methodist Church, South, think of the great responsibility resting upon you and upon Christians everywhere to go and proclaim in every place and to all men that in and through Christ Jesus is salvation.

Oh, that I could see scores of young men coming from our own church, fired with this holy, heavenly zeal for Christ, and willing to come to China to preach the gospel! Shall we not have them? A wave of glad news from England tells us there are hundreds of young men in her colleges ready to come to China and other heathen lands to preach Christ. And they will come. They are coming. Can we not hear the same glad news from America? I trust we shall. Yours in Christ,

SOME TIME.

BY L. A. WHIFFLE.

Some time, when all life's lessons have been learned, And we start for evermore have set, The things which our weak judgment here has spurned— The things which we grieved with lashes wet— Will flash before us out of life's dark night, As stars shine most to deeper this of light, And we shall see how all God's plans were right, And how that seemed reproach was love most true.

And we shall see, that while we frown and sigh, God's plans go on as best for you and me; Now, when we called, he heeded not our cry, Because his wisdom to the end could see, And, 'e'en as sweet to parents disallow, Too much of wisdom to the child to show, No God, perhaps, is keeping from us now, Life's sweetest things, because it seems good.

And if, some time, commingled with life's wine, We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink, Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine, Pours out this potion for our thirst to drink; And if some friend we love is lying low, Where in man's knees cannot reach his face, Oh do not blame the loving Father so, But bear your sorrows with obedient grace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend; And that sometimes the subtle pest of death Conceals the fairest bloom his love can send. If we could push away the gates of life, And stand within, and all God's working see, We could interpret all this doubt and strife, And for each mystery find a key.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart: God's plans, like life's pure and white, unfold; We must not tear the cloistered leaves apart: Time will reveal the mysteries of gold. And if through patient love we reach the end, Where time and pain, and sorrow, may be sent, When we shall clearly know and understand, I think that we shall say that "God knew best."

"Kids" at Church and Sunday-School.

MR. EDITOR: In most Sunday-schools scholars are classified according to size, upon the supposition that those of a size are equally advanced. But if inquiry is made in most cases it will be found that classes are badly mixed. This works to the detriment of the classes, and is a great drawback to the teacher. Upon the suggestion of our superintendent, we have lately held a conference and agreed to rectify this trouble, and properly classify our school. But a little incident the other day suggested to me that there will still be some difficulties to overcome. Upon asking a gentleman, the cause of the absence of two of my scholars, he said: "Well, I tried to get the boys to come, but look here! They say there are too many little kids in your class." Ah! is that the cause; tell them to come, I will try, and find another class for them. In considering what I would do with them, I found myself drifting back into the same difficulty, out of which we had just worked; and in my puzzled condition I began to think about the "kids." First the baby "kids." We see them at Sunday-school, church, and prayer meeting; privileged characters! They can romp all around the school room, and cut up their capers, and make it a play-house. They get all the other "kids" in a giggle and the teacher loses the attention of his class, and also, all chance for good. For you might as well try to impress the audience of a circus with the solemnity of life, while the clown, is getting off his wise sayings. And then we see them at prayer meeting, and in spite of the efforts of the preacher to impress the audience with the uncertainty of life and the danger of procrastination.

We see this baby "kid" the master of the situation. For instead of a spirit of solemnity and worship, there is manifested a spirit of hilarity. Result, preacher discouraged, opportunity lost, devil victorious; and then at church; oh, how interesting they become. Little things that would not be noticed outside, are just the funniest things in the world in church. Old and young love the sight of the grand sermon that is falling from the lips of the earnest preacher, and souls who might be impressed with the solemn message, are preoccupied with this baby "kid," who is cutting up all sorts of pranks during the service; and his parents if questioned, would say, "It had better be doing this than crying." May be it had but it is not at all necessary for it to do either, and I do not know that either one is worse than the other, for the same end is accomplished. The sermon is interfered with. Now what is the secret of this baby "kid's" badness? Why this is it, when it was first carried to church, its mother also took some little truck along, "to amuse the baby," and by example she taught it to play in church.

Now in the same church we see our neighbor's two or three years old baby sitting there as solemn as a judge, and everyone marvels at its good behavior. Why, the difference in these two children; what is the secret of its goodness? Why, this is it, when first it was carried to the house of God, it was informed of the fact, and taught that it must behave, and when it forgot this teaching and acted rudely, it was forthwith carried out, and a lasting impression made upon it. How young can a child be taught to respect the house of God?

Let those who have given the matter no thought, look into it. Will a child who is not taught at first to respect the church, ever respect it in after life? When we consider that the devil is a reality in the world; that he is in the great congregation, and by various means interfering with the divine message, suggesting vain thoughts, leading our minds out into various channels. Using every instrumentality to destroy the influence of the Gospel. And when we consider that the sermon is a message from God to dying men! Who would assume the responsibility of interfering with this message, by becoming or allowing our children to become the instruments of the devil? I have listened to the Gospel long enough to know that one has to labor to hear, as well as to preach it. Oh, the responsibility of those who have the moulding of characters of these little baby "kids."

Second, the "little kids," are a "stumbling block, and rock of offence" to the big "kids." I will mention but one class of these. We see them in every Sunday-school, quick, pert, always ready with an answer when questioned, and more, hardly allowing any other scholar a chance, showing a perfect knowledge of the lesson. Much to be admired for their thorough instruction and general deportment; but they stand in great danger, a danger that is not recognized. If learning constituted the all of religion, then they are on the safe road; but alas, "and though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all knowledge, and have not charity I am nothing." We must teach them that religion is something more than the cultivation of the intellect. That the tendency of knowledge is to puff one up. Hence they are in danger of thinking more highly of themselves than they ought. Egotism is a great agency to evil in the destruction of souls. Nothing tends to more completely blind one to the real nature of his own inwardness. Let us teach them that religion is not a thing which alone can be grasped by the great or learned, but it is "the gift of God," and all alike must come in the same spirit of humility to obtain the gift. Let us teach them, that without the direct operation of the Holy Spirit upon the heart, making it anew, and without the "power of God in us," all their efforts will be in vain, and though they may lead a comparatively successful life, eternal ruin will be their reward.

Third, the big or overgrown "kids." Of all the "kids" this class is the most to be pitied—too large to attend Sunday-school—almost to that age when they will have to meet the cares and responsibilities of life, totally unfit for such obligations. Efficient in nothing save rolling cigarettes or something of that order. Not having the first glimmer of the plan of salvation. Did I say much to be pitied? Yes, because they are in a lost condition already, and with this feeling of pity there is mingled a feeling of anxiety, because of the thought, that something might be done, if done quickly, to save them. This class are numerous, and they are fast passing out from under our control and influence. With just enough education to read and enjoy the low language of the "dime novel" and with just enough ambition to pattern after its heroes, they are candidates for destruction and ruin. Say some of them turn out better and connect themselves with the church, as some do, they may remain on its rolls until "hoary hairs shall their temples adorn," and it is most likely that when "they ought to be teachers, they have need to be taught." In representing the judgment at the great last day of the good and the bad, the good book tells us that the sheep shall go to the right, and the goats to the left. So far all, I don't know that "kid" is so inappropriate as applied to young unregenerate human nature.

May we all realize the great work to be accomplished in having these "kids" to be made lambs, so that they may grow up to be sheep of the "true fold."

Leaving the Church of Rome.

REV. C. CHINQUY.

When, two years ago, I was lecturing in London, England, a French priest came from Paris, France, to see me and ask why I had left the Church of Rome and become a Protestant.

The documents he showed to me proved that he was one of the most respectable priests of France, and in a high position. Before answering his question, I invited him to kneel and pray with me. When we raised from the prayer, his face was bathed with tears and his emotion was uncontrollable. He told me it was the first time in his life he had heard a true prayer from the heart.

We spent two days in searching the Scriptures and speaking of the great mystery of the love of God who offers his only Son Jesus as a gift, asking in return but to believe, repent, and love.

At the end of those two days, I was the witness of a spectacle that no human words can tell. He had, for the first time, understood the gift. He had found it so great! so beautiful! The scales had fallen from his eyes! Opening the hands of his soul he had accepted the gift! Happy in the possession he went back to France, gave up his high position, and made the sacrifice of his revenues at the "good Master's" feet.

Now, poor, persecuted by his relations and former friends, he wants a place in the "Converted Priests' Home," which I have built here. In a few days he will have crossed the ocean, and come to prepare himself with me to preach the Gospel of Christ. I ask your Christian readers to unite their fervent prayers to yours, in the mercy of our heavenly Father may protect and guide this new soul on his way to his Anselm, and that he may also give me the means to support him and the other many priests who want to break their fetters.

No doubt you and your readers may like to know that, by the mercy of God, I have already helped twenty-six priests, monks, and ecclesiastics of Rome to give up their errors and receive the Truth as it is in Jesus, in this "Converted Priests' Home."

You understand that the best way to fight and conquer Rome is by converting her priests. * * * My experience is that, as a general thing, the conversion of a priest is followed by that of not less than one thousand Roman Catholics, whom, sooner or later, he leads to Christ by his example and instructions. * * * I could cite many facts to support this truth. * * * It is not yet twelve months since the Rev. Seguin—one of the priests converted in the "Converted Priests' Home"—went to Chicago; and the Lord has so much blessed our united efforts there, that we, already, do not count less than one hundred converted families from Romanism.

I do not want to beg to support that great and good work of helping the priests who want to give up their errors and preach Christ, but I respectfully propose to the disciples of Christ an easy and honorable way of giving fraternal and helping hand to those priests.

Let every one who has an interest in the conversion of the Roman Catholics send me one dollar and ten cents for the volume of "The priest, the Woman, and the Confessional," or five dollars for the other large book, "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," eight hundred and fifty pages. * * * That money will go, to the last cent, to feed, clothe, lodge, and protect those priests when they are preparing themselves to preach the Gospel to their former co-religionists. Those two books, which have cost me eleven years of labor, are not a money speculation on my part, God knows it. My only intention during the many and long hours of the days and nights consecrated to them, was to enable myself to support the providential work entrusted to my too feeble hands by the Master, in the same time that I would present to every faithful minister of the Gospel, to every father of family, to every legislator and Christian patriot, an arsenal of facts, arguments and weapons to fight Rome, as they never got.

Let the Christian brethren and sisters who grant me favor, be sure that they will receive more than the value of their money in those books, and that they will help one of the most blessed evangelical works of the day.

Why Halt Ye between two Opinions?

BY REV. J. W. HARMON.

What, then, is the difficulty or the hesitation among good men and Christian ministers, in taking the position; that the good and innocent wine which will not make men drunk, is meant in all cases where it is allowed and commended; or that the alcoholic or intoxicating wine is meant in all cases of prohibition and denunciation? I must assuredly take this position or else virtually impeach the Holy Scriptures of contradiction or inconsistency.

What testimony have we from scholars on this subject? Let us begin with Moses Stuart, that prince of philologists. He says: "That facts show that the ancients not only preserved their wines unfermented, but regarded it as of a higher flavor and finer quality than fermented wines. There were, therefore, two kinds of wine in ancient use. The one was sweet, pleasant, refreshing, unfermented; the other was exciting, inflaming, intoxicating. Each was called wine. How natural, now, to say of the one, 'blessing is in it, it maketh glad the heart.' How natural to say of the other, 'Decent is in it, it bringeth woe and sorrow!'"

There is no difficulty now, in the reconciliation of Scripture with Scripture. The Bible does not give a whole-sale endorsement of the use of the alcoholic cup. It puts no weapon into the hands of the drinkers and vendors of strong drink. I am not refused to take this position without impeaching the Scripture. I can not believe that God has given liberty to persons in health to drink alcoholic wine without admitting that his word and his works are at variance.

We feel safe in accepting such testimony as the above, it raises no protest or revolt in our feelings. It endangers no one. Rev. Dr. E. Nott takes the very same position. Author in his Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities; Dr. Smith in his Dictionary of the Bible; and a host of competent scholars and learned divines, with whose names we could fill a large space in this paper, all confirm and support this position of Moses Stuart. Prof. George Bush when asked to refer to the original, keeping in view this distinction, in the connection did so, and with amazement said: "No permission to drink intoxicating wine here. I do not care about wine, and it is very seldom I taste it; but I have felt, until now, at liberty to drink in moderation from this verse. You have the whole ground, and in time the whole Christian world will be obliged to adopt your view." Dr. Albert Barnes takes the same position. He says: "The wine of Judea was the pure juice of the grape, without any mixture of alcohol." Rev. Dr. H. Johnson, of Philadelphia, takes the same ground in answer to Mr. McLean in the Evangelist: "There is no exploit of logic that can make any unprejudiced and sane man believe this to be the very same wine elsewhere called a 'mocker.' It is simply, unfermented juice of the grape, and as such, God says there is a blessing in it. Here, then, is the scriptural distinction between wine and wine. It is not made to suit modern exigency, or (bolster up perverted usage.) God's word makes it. Why should we hold that intoxicating wine is meant in all such cases? Common sense is affronted at the suggestion. There is not one philological reason why we should so hold. There are abundant moral reasons why we should not hold." This evidence is supported by Plato, Calumdia, Piliy, Aristotle, Horace, Homer and Plutarch. And what is more, we had this testimony graven on our minds, by much weariness of the flesh, in translating into good English in the class room in years gone by. Will more testimony be demanded, or must the contest go on, and only to the grand end of absolute prohibition, and total abstinence, be still held in obedience, while immortal spirits are dying from its poisonous sting?

Retrospective.

TWENTIETH PAPER.

CHIEF OF CREEK CIRCUIT.

About one mile from Oakland College, in Jefferson county, Bro. Dougald McCall had a meeting-house built for the convenience of his family and neighbors, to which he gave an appropriate name, "Zoar." For seating capacity, the smallest on the circuit: reminding one of a pleasant family gathering for religious worship. Bro. McCall was one of the circuit stewards, a regular attendant, at quarterly meetings, bringing with him his quarterly collections. He was of Scotch descent, a noble good man. He raised a family of intelligent children. While traveling the Beaumont district, in the East Texas Conference, the writer was pleasantly entertained at the homes of two of his sons, both stewards and prominent members of our church, the elder one has represented his county in the Texas Legislature, both in good circumstances and classed among our very best citizens.

As Bro. H. J. Harris has made favorable mention, in his "Reminiscences," of many of those who were members of the church when he traveled the circuit, I will omit many names which I would otherwise mention. Let it suffice to say that in point of intelligence, piety and love for the doctrines and usages of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Cole's Creek circuit, at the time I was honored with the pastorate, stood at the head of the list of appointments in the Mississippi Conference. How often since then have I thought of the paternal intercourse I had with those dear people, many of whom have passed through the valley of sorrow to the land of the hereafter, and there one left to bear testimony of the sufficiency of the grace of God to sustain under the sore trials of life. In a letter of recent date (from Bro. J. B. C.) is the following paragraph: "Sister Deborah Johnson, relict of Rev. J. C. Johnson, is over 96 years old, nearly blind, very deaf and lame, but enjoys the faculties of her mind in a wonderful degree." So it is, this mother in Israel is patiently waiting by the river's brink, with her natural sight bedimmed, while by faith she can decry the "old ship in Zion" which has landed many thousands, "looming to view, ready to breast the peaceful waves and secure a safe anchorage in the blessed haven of rest. How many eventful years have marked her life's pilgrimage! Why not, like the Apostle Paul, have a desire to depart and be with Christ, when in our Father's mansions there is a better home provided for the weary than earth can afford?"

MARSHALL, TEXAS.

How Many of the Methodist Ministry Are either in Part or Altogether Unemployed as Preachers?

Some may say this is no business of mine. But a little reflection will show it to be a question in which all have an interest. It is frequently stated as somewhat distinctive of the Methodist Church that the number of preachers in its ranks is comparatively large—a pastor for every congregation and occasionally several others within easy reach of the same. This is a fact of great significance. It is equivalent to saying that God in his supervision of the church has selected a comparatively large number of Methodists to preach his word. With this unmistakable mark of divine favor there is lodged of necessity a grave responsibility. To the church is committed the duty of employing this numerically superior force and to it belongs to a large extent the responsibility when they are not employed. This duty and this responsibility becomes manifest when we consider a few facts connected with the subject of preaching. 1. It is God's method of saving the world. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." "And how shall they hear without a preacher?" "And how shall they preach except they be sent?" 2. It is a fact too well known to need proof that when a preacher does not preach he does worse. As with Sam Jones, he had to preach or "lose his religion," so an unemployed preacher as a rule, the only exception is in case of personal disability, becomes cold and spiritless and eventually backslides. A back-slidden ministry is not only powerless for good, but often proves one of the most potent factors of evil known to church or society. The church then and the country have an interest in the inquiry, What part of our Methodist ministry are but partially employed, if at all, in preaching the gospel? I have not the data with which to answer, but believe a little sitting will show the number to be not inconsiderable a larger per cent., perhaps, than with other denominations, with whom otherwise we compare favorably. I know the unemployed belong mainly to the local ranks and this fact, when duly considered, casts strong doubt upon the position, generally taken, that where there is delinquency it is always a case of individual unfaithfulness, because the church provides and directs that all its preachers should preach. The fact that so many of our local brethren who as individuals are as true as any other, do not regularly engage in preaching must be accounted for on other grounds than that of personal unfaithfulness. But my object just now is merely to call attention to the fact that many whom God has called in and for the church do not preach, and this not only cripples its success, but is a constant menace to its harmony and security.

DAY ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Prohibition.

MR. EDITOR: At the last session of the Winona District Conference, held at Winona, April 16, 17 and 18, 1885, on the last day of Conference Bro. R. A. Anderson, of Durant, addressed the people on the subject of prohibition. We desire, with your permission, to give your readers his main points: 1. Intemperance was Satan's piratical craft, sailing under the black flag, with the skull and cross-bones of death; as far back as the days of Sodom and Gomorrah and Noah and Lot it was one of the most grievous evils of earth. 2. The question is not, how are we ruined? but: How may the evil be stayed? The church is not sufficient of itself to accomplish this, because Christianity does not as yet permeate and govern all things. Various organizations, outside of the church, have tried to abolish the evil, but have failed. Various laws have been enacted, but produce nothing tangible or lasting. The best of these laws—local option—is itself, at best, but a blow in the dark, encircling but not stopping. Local option stops nothing but school-houses. 3. Prohibition is, therefore, the only remedy that will prove effective or that will last. Prohibition is legal, and the power to prohibit is in the legislative branch of government. Vide 37, Mississippi Reports, pp. 381 and 382. Vide, also, 43, Mississippi Reports, pp. 161 and 162. Vide, also, Judge Torney's decision in 511 United States Reports. Prohibition is, therefore, legal, and the only permanent cure for whisky. Our people need more enthusiasm. They have not reached the end of their legal remedies. Get the right sort of remedy to the Legislature, have prohibition enacted by statute or amendment, and the Supreme Court will uphold it. Yours respectfully,

W. W. HOSKINS.

Revival at Batesville.

MR. EDITOR: God has visited us with a gracious revival at Batesville. On April 21, Bro. E. G. Kilgore, in compliance with a request from me, arrived in Batesville and we commenced the meeting that night. I had not told any one that I was expecting him, and no one was expecting a protracted meeting at that time. We had a fine congregation the first service, and many became interested. It rained for four or five days, but it was somewhat remarkable that it always stopped in time for the people to get to church, so that we did not miss a service. The meeting continued fourteen days, and after the third day we held four services a day. The congregations were very large at all of the services except the sunrise prayer meeting, and that was well attended. During the meeting forty-four persons were converted and many backsliders were reclaimed. The church was greatly revived. Christians of all denominations and the pastors of the other denominations gave us their hearty co-operation. The churches have all been greatly revived. Twenty-seven persons have united with our church since the meeting commenced, eighteen of whom were on profession of faith. Nine of the converts have united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, some with the Baptist, two with the old school Presbyterian Church and five with the Episcopal Church. Several others will join our church.

We commenced the year with thirty-four members at Batesville, and I have received thirty-four since that time and know of five more to join soon. Nearly all who have joined our church were grown persons and most of them heads of families.

Bro. Kilgore won all hearts in Batesville. Certainly God has bestowed upon him great gifts for conducting revival meetings. He is indefatigable in his efforts to save souls. "God has done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Truly your brother,

J. E. THOMAS.

From the Work.

LAKE CHARLES, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps a line or two from our section would not be amiss. Our Sunday-school is flourishing, and it could not be otherwise with such a corps of officers and teachers. They are worthy of all praise. We have just closed a meeting here which ran through eleven nights. Twelve persons offered themselves as candidates for church membership, and I suppose about the same number of conversions. There were several persons who presented their church letters. Thanks to Bro. Harry, of Sulphur Mine circuit, for faithful service rendered. He promises well for the church. Since my arrival here (January 21) twenty persons have joined by letter and thirteen on profession of faith. And still the good work goes on. To-morrow night we will commence a young men's prayer meeting; this will be in addition to the weekly prayer meeting.

Our town is developing fast, notwithstanding the pressure of the times. Over twenty new houses are now approaching completion and others are building. Mr. J. B. Watkins has nearly completed his bank building again. And when finished it will be as handsome as the first structure. He and Prof. Thomson are building a huge tank above ground, and they will draw water from the lake to supply it, and thus they will be better prepared for fire. So far, the houses are occupied as fast as they are built, and I am told there are no houses now to rent. I know of but few towns in our State which have as bright an outlook as our Lake Charles.

And last, but not least, our business men have agreed to close their places of business from Saturday night to Monday morning. And yesterday it went into effect, and the quiet was wonderful.

Reverence for Place.

BY CHANCELLOR HENRY H. TUCKER, A LECTURE TO THE STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA.

If the material universes were resolved into its original atoms, each one of those atoms would be of the same shape, of the same color, and of the same size, and value, of every other. There could be no reason why one atom should be held in higher estimation than another atom. So if they were arranged in pairs, any one couple of them would be the exact equivalent of any other couple. If they were massed together in large bulk, their value with reference to each other would still be the same, nor would any intelligent being regard one agglomeration of atoms as at all more worthy of esteem than any other. One phoebe, for aught that we can say, is as good as another planet. So also as our own earth, nothing but matter, we can see no reason why one part of it is not as good as another. Certainly there is no reason why we should reverence a particular acre of ground, or any other portion of earth's surface, more than any other portion of it; and in fact, there is no reason why we should reverence any of it. It is nothing but matter, and for spirit to worship matter would be a condescension and monstrous. But this is true only when we regard matter abstractly. When we regard the concrete, that is, in connection with its surroundings, its history and its associations, all is changed. When matter has once been associated with spirit, it becomes subjectively, as to us, something more than mere matter. It seems to partake something of the nature of the spirit with which it is associated. It seems by the association to be elevated to the plane of spirit, or at least to be lifted above the plane of other matter, and to be invested with such dignity and value as to engage our affections, and command our homage. When we look upon the mortal remains of a loved one, whose spirit has fled, and left us nothing but a cold, we will cling to it as to a treasure, and we will weep as we heart-throbs over those calm, still features,

"Ere day's smiling beauty,

To-day the lines were weary fingers."

And although we expect no response from the dead, yet we imprint our love upon them with the same fervor as if they were warm with life, and as if there were a heart beating beneath their full of hope and love. And that with funeral pomp, always commensurate with our mourning, we follow the least term to the grave, and lay the body to rest with a tenderly tearful reverence. Yet we know that it is nothing but dust. The atoms of which it is composed are just like any other atoms. That is to say, philosophy says that atoms are like any other atoms, but there are not like any other atoms. The spirit that dwells within the shrine has sanctified the shrine itself. That dust is not mere dust. It is dust ennobled. It was once identified with a beloved spirit, and having been once identified it is always so to us, and we have a right to reverence it. The philosophy enough to be able to separate between the two, and to lay the body to rest with a tenderly tearful reverence. After this sacred dust is laid away, we mark the spot with a memorial stone, we visit it with reverential step; we weep with it, and we do not weep with tears; the very air of the grave seems to be holy, and when we leave and plunge into the cold world we have a different sense as if we had changed planets.

Why all this should be so, it is needless to inquire. Suffice it for us to know, that such is the fact. We are constituted by the Almighty, we are made in the image of the immortal. Nor is it surprising, for we are compound beings, made partly material and partly spiritual. But what is true of us is true of pure spirits. Holy angels, once guarded over the grave of Jesus, were sent from the dead, but to very place where his body lay had come angels and angels from the skies, dwellers in the heaven of heavens, were sent to watch over that spot of earth. In fact, it was no hotter than any other spot of ground, but it had been sanctified by the angels said to the women who were there, "Come, see the place where the Lord is laid." The exact spot has been brought about in the providence of God, to prevent us from paying to the place, a homage which would have been idolatrous.

Fifteen hundred years before Christ died, Moses died, and the grave of Moses was a place of great reverence. The Lord himself, carried Moses to the land of Moab over against Ba-

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS. REV. J. T. SAWYER.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICOTT.

THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1885.

Missionary pastors make missionary churches. "Like priests, like people."

On our third page this week will be found an admirable, but lengthy article on "Reverence for Place." It will well repay a careful perusal. Irreverence is the evil of these times.

The children's department this week shows what a genuine interest the little folks have in the Advocate. Bro. Drake made hundreds of little eyes "search the Scriptures," and the many answers to his "riddle" already received, evidence their acquaintance with the Book divine. Though many will be disappointed in not securing the prize, none will lose the benefit of the Bible study it occasioned. The first response came from Arbroth, West Baton Rouge, La., and was sent by A. C. Woods. No doubt Bro. Drake will provide something else for the entertainment of the young people.

Our mission field could be amply sustained on the money spent for cigars by Southern Methodist smokers, preachers and laymen. Every dime turned to ashes on the end of a cigar is a bereavement of the Lord's treasury.

The loudest complaints about confectional assessments, do not come from the people, and surely they are not excessive. About seventy-five cents per capita for all confectional objects, foreign missions, domestic missions, church extension and the bishops, is not very burdensome.

The college president who says his is "a Methodist school de facto and de jure" has our hand. A de jure affair that can not afford to be Methodist de facto had better go into liquidation. With the broadest ecclesiastical fraternity, and the truest Christian charity, for every evangelic deaconism, we want our colleges, pulpits and papers to have a distinctive church life.

The retirement of the treasurer of the United States from office and the installment of his successor, necessitated a count of the monies and securities in the national treasury. The labor was performed by a committee of experts, and required about three weeks to complete it. The amount counted ran up into the millions, but the reports of the treasurer were so correct that an alleged discrepancy of two cents was righted, by finding the missing pennies on the floor, where they had been dropped during the count. That was a grand endorsement of official and personal integrity. Millions had passed through that officer's hands, and not a penny had stuck. A like record ought to be the high purpose of every man, whatever his position; and it is necessary to a heavenly inheritance. They that ascend into the hill of the Lord must have "clean hands" as well as a pure heart.

Protestant Ireland is loyal to the English crown and is prosperous, peaceful, and happy. Catholic Ireland is disloyal, turbulent, poor, and is the home of famines, fanatics, boycotters and dynamiters. With the same soil and climate, the Protestant counties prosper, while the Catholic counties are begging bread of the world's charity. But however frequent and terrible the potato famines, "Peter's pence" never fails for Rome. The fact that Romanism is the inspiration of Irish disloyalty was evident in the recent visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales. In one or two Catholic towns there were violent and disgraceful demonstrations, but in Protestant communities there were joyous and generous greetings. The Irish Christian Advocate, thus speaks of their visit to Belfast: "In no city or town in England has a member of the royal family ever been more courteously welcomed or more enthusiastically honored; symbols of loyalty were everywhere; many of them costly and all of them worthy of sovereign approbation, but better than all the pomp of circumstance, was the true reality underneath it. Belfast is loyal, is industrious, is religious, God is feared by its people, and the sovereign is honored." It is Romanism and not land-fordism that burdens and scourges the land of the Shamrock.

Bargains with Belial.

Many of the promises to God are veritable bargains with Belial. When conditions are interjected and times and seasons taken into account, the promise is vitiated and sin is compounded. All approaches to God must be unreserved, and every plighting of faith must be without contingency or compromise. He is a jealous God, and will not share his throne with another even for an hour. He claims the whole heart all the time, and for all time. He listens to no prayer that contains a reservation. No blessing is vouchsafed to a conditional acceptance of his salvation. We must feel it to be the one thing needful, or it can not be granted. Nothing can intervene in time, place or estate without forfeiting the promise of his justifying grace and the coronation of his sanctifying power. So a pledge, however solemnly made, that at some specified time in the future he will be sought with the whole heart, is an offense, and not an acceptable offering. God can not be bargained into condoning sin. He forbids a single hour's alienation from his love and law, and will not hold him guiltless who so offends. He can not enter into a contract with man, allowing him to indulge in sin for a brief season on condition of reformation at a certain date. Such an idea would paralyze the arm of justice and undermine the integrity of God's eternal throne.

But such promises are the common observation of every pastor. Most of them are indefinite as to time; but the purpose is none the less pronounced. All men who, intellectually, accept the Christian system as true expect at some time a real compliance with its conditions of salvation. They have no thought of going into eternity without God and without hope. And these promises are their deadliest enemy. They are the snare that holds them securely and may bind them fast for outer darkness. Why, it is really soothing to conscience to promise reform, however remote the time fixed for beginning. Next to discharging an indebtedness is a promise to pay. And so next to repenting of sin and serving God is a solemn pledge to do so. But such a lulling of conscience is a sleep that results in death.

These promises are rarely performed at the time. The day is forgotten or other cares are so absorbing as to compel postponement. We are not informed that Felix ever found a "convenient season" to call for the Lord or his apostle. Such promises, though plausible, are the subtle devices of the devil by which he lengthens the tenure of his power and makes more sure the death of the soul. One of the most striking and suggestive instances of this dangerous bargaining with the enemy we find in the charming biography of Bishop Edward Thompson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, just issued from the press. When a young man and a physician he attended one day a camp meeting in Ohio, and heard a sermon of extraordinary power. Every faint skeptical thought he ever entertained was entirely removed and conviction seized his spirit. His heart cried out, "O, that I were a Christian!" But, having laid out a vast amount of professional reading for some months, he said to himself, "On the first day of the next year I will serve the Lord." As to how he kept that promise, his biographer tells us as follows: "And fearing he might forget the day so fixed, he concluded to write it in his note-book. Not finding any ink, he took out his lancet, opened a vein in his own arm, and, dipping his quill in the blood, wrote his determination in red letters on the page of his pocket memorandum. The time came, but he had lost the feelings of deep concern which he had when he made the bloody entry in his book. Thus he put off the period of seeking his salvation from month to month for more than two years." How subtle and dreadful must be an enemy who can keep us from paying a vow written in crimson letters from the life blood of our own veins! Let us watch, therefore, that our promises to God be not bargains with Belial.

An association known as The Funeral Directors of Alabama was organized at Birmingham last week. It is composed of undertakers and is designed to elevate and regulate the conduct of their business. If some blundering and grossness we have witnessed can be cured by organization, it ought to be universally approved. One cardinal doctrine, however, is suggested—decrease extortion in burial expenses.

Lord Tennyson has written the following epitaph for Gordon's cenotaph in Westminster Abbey:
"Warrior of God, man's friend, not here below,
But somewhere dead in the far waste bound;
Thou livest in all hearts; for all men know
This earth has borne no simpler, nobler man."

Dr. Palmer's Address.

We will publish next week an address delivered by Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer, of this city, at the Exposition Music Hall, on "Colored Educational Day." It is characteristic of the distinguished divine in its eloquent diction, luminous statement and honest convictions. He employed the auspicious occasion to utter words of serious moment on an intensely vital question. He could not afford merely to fill a place on a programme with empty platitudes or rhetorical fanfare. Dr. Palmer is one of the last men to play with opportunity or trifle with responsibility. His mind is cast in too large and serious a mould to discuss lightly or superficially a great issue involving the welfare of humanity in any race, class, country or community. So on this occasion he spoke "with entire frankness" all that was in his heart.

Dr. Palmer's address is significant as the utterance of a leading Southern man of the old school. His position antedating, during and succeeding the war between the States was pronounced and conspicuous. He followed the fortunes of his section with unflinching devotion, and when her star went down he felt it a pleasure to remain and share with his countrymen their losses and crosses. And while accepting unreservedly the arbitrament of arms and the logic of events, he has never sought a confessional for political or ecclesiastical absolution. With persistent consistency he has opposed all tendencies to organic union between the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches, and has the reputation in the North of being intensely and extremely provincial in his convictions; but from no pen have we read words more generous and fraternal in behalf of the negro than from this typical Southerner. There is an expression of perfect candor and an entire absence of reserve or obscure statement in the address that disarms any criticism of its motives. There is nothing between the lines, and the heart of the speaker is as transparent as the limpid purity of his diction. And when he concludes his eloquent address, he assured the colored people that in all their efforts to advance themselves, whether socially or educationally, they had "the heartiest sympathy and co-operation of all wise and thoughtful men." He spoke by authority and with emphasis for the South. Why this sympathy and co-operation have not found more tangible and monumental expression can he readily explained.

The doctrine of the distinction and the instinct of race is presented with singular clearness and candor. This position is repudiated by certain theorists and pseudo-philanthropists; but it is nevertheless true in fact and inviolable in argument. To ignore or stigmatize a fact so universal and providential is to trifle with history and fight against God. What the Doctor aptly and correctly characterized as "the instinct of race" we are accustomed to hear denounced as the curse and crime of caste. We believe his position to be founded in the truest psychology and in harmony with the Divine administration in all ages. It is entirely consistent with the doctrines of the unity of the human race and the universal brotherhood of man, and in no sense offends against the broadest Christian philanthropy.

Upon this "distinction and instinct of race" the Doctor congratulated the colored people upon their achievements in the establishment and maintenance of their own schools and churches, and made an eloquent appeal for the future. The social and educational development of the negro depends upon the wise conduct of their own institutions. An enforced intermingling of races can not endure to their advantage. Of course individual preferences and tastes will have unrestrained expression; but the attempted abolition of race instinct and distinction by statutory or moral constraint is as idle as it is impossible. We agree most cordially and entirely with the distinguished speaker when he rejoiced in the freedom of the negro, and said: "Providence has brought you, as a people and a race, and put you upon this exalted platform to work out your own history and career. I say from the depths of my breast a hearty 'Amen' to it all." And so say all thinking Christian men, whatever may have been their former relations to the institution of slavery. He is certainly very obtuse and obstinate who has failed to discern a Providence in the history of the negro race in America.

The exhortation to the negroes to "make themselves worthy of a history" was timely and eloquent. They can never achieve eminence without independence of thought and character. So long as they are willing to be the "wards of the nation" to "take tips," receive gifts and be the ever-present and never-satisfied objects of national and ecclesiastical charity—they can only have a parasitic and pitiable existence. We do not deny or deprecate their claims now to our sympathy and co-operation. He has not the heart and hand of a brother who can look indifferently upon the negro's struggling condition. Our liberality ought to be as generous as the warmth of our sympathy is genuine. But everything we do must be co-operative—aiding and supplementing their own efforts to achieve a destiny worthy of a history. The record of the past decade and the creditable exhibit made at our Exposition, demonstrate their capacity for development. But upon themselves almost entirely rests the responsibility of the future. By their own hands they will stand or fall.

As to the consequences, social and political, of this possible development, we need not be afraid. It is our business to discharge present duty, and not be stayed therein by imaginary fears and forebodings. If there are to be delimitations and rectifications of social frontiers, we can safely trust ourselves in the hands of Providence. Dr. Palmer happily stated this position in these words: "When you develop the qualities that are in you, and form a character upon which that history is to be built, unquestionably according to the appointments of him who rules the universe, you will have your own orbit described for you." And this confidently answers the puerile, but common objection against "educating a man out of his sphere." Who and what determine our sphere? The question does not rise to the dignity of an argument.

The agencies that are to help the negro into this higher type of civilization, which may prove to be one peculiarly his own, Dr. Palmer rightly reduced to three—the home, the church, and the school. Special legislation in his behalf is a hindrance, and not a help. It creates a distinction of citizenship and an inequality before the law. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, pronouncing the "Civil Rights Bill" unconstitutional, was a boon and benediction to the American negro. Some have foolishly denounced it, but the future will prove them to be the unadvised and indiscreet friends of their race. Legislation cannot educate the negro, however favorable and liberal, there must be worthiness of character and attainments, and that is only secured in the home, the church and the school. To enlarge and enthrone these agencies, should be our patient care and prayer. Hoping this address of Dr. Palmer's may awaken increased and more intelligent interest in the perplexing problem discussed, we close these observations with his own eloquent words that commanded long and loud applause: "If there are any two classes who should be perfectly friendly one to the other, who should rejoice in their mutual advancement and prosperity, they are the Southern whites and the negroes of America."

The Revised Old Testament.

An international labor of fourteen years was completed on the 15th inst. when the first copy of the Revised Old Testament was given to the London public. An early copy was presented to the Queen and her blessing was pronounced upon the distinguished scholars, whose unremitting toils have made eventful this year of our Lord. The ablest biblical schools and Hebraists in England and the United States, and of all evangelical denominations, have contributed their ripest learning to this monumental work. The vast advance made in the last fifty years, in biblical geography, history and antiquities, has enabled the revisers to clear up obscure passages, and by marginal renderings to throw valuable sidelights upon many difficult and dark places. We rejoice in the completion of this arduous undertaking and shall look eagerly for a copy.

A short history of the work we condense from authentic sources. It was first suggested and inaugurated by the convocation of Canterbury, May 24, 1870. Immediately after the organization of an English committee, a committee of American scholars was formed to co-operate. Of this American branch, Dr. Philip Schaff was chairman. After some delay the first meeting of the American committee was held at the Bible House in New York on October 4, 1872.

The spirit of scholarship rose far above the sectarian spirit, and the latter was at no time manifest. This fact will also bear testimony to the general accuracy of their work. In prosecuting their labors, the revisers adhered rigidly to an early resolution not to make "any new translation of the Bible or any alteration of the language, except where in the judgment of the most competent scholars, such change is necessary, and that in such change the style of the language employed in the existing version be closely followed."

Whether this will displace the authorized version is very doubtful, or if so it will be "the slow work of years. But it will be a valuable aid to a clearer understanding of the Word. Until a copy is received, we will make no reference to specific changes.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, writing from Inka, Miss., makes report of a glorious revival in his church as follows:

We closed, last week a most interesting and profitable meeting in Inka, Miss. We had twenty-eight conversions, and twenty-two joined our church. The church was greatly blessed. Revs. T. B. Malone, of Corinth; J. W. Honnoll, of Greenville; C. H. Owen, of Inka, circuit and R. P. Mitchell, of Aberdeen station, all rendered an efficient service during the meeting, for which we thank them. We have just gained a temperance victory by voting whisky out of this district.

Satan and His Angels.

BY REV. J. B. A. ABBRENS, D. D.

It is Satan's greatest victory when he can prevail upon men not to believe in him. It is true, Christ at one time personified the devilry of Iscariot, saying that he had chosen them twelve, and one of them was a devil; but that certainly does not indicate the nonexistence of a personal devil. After Christ had designated his betrayer at the time of the last supper, Satan entered into Judas, surnamed Iscariot.

Satan's supposed appearance in the society of good angels before the throne of God, according to Job 1, has confused many followers of the Lamb. I hold that Satan, being cast out of heaven, has at no time been permitted to re-enter there. The rebel would not appear, if summoned. Only under compulsion he will present himself at the last day. In Job, aim and end of the inspired historical drama was, to solve the mysteries of the Divine Providence, that

"Angels never from the ground arise;
But of times heaven's celestial benedictions

that God takes particular cognizance of man's individual affairs and arranges, that even misfortunes work together for good to them that love him. In the language of poetry the angel to whom the affairs of Job were assigned, is denominated Satan. The literal meaning of this word is opponent, enemy. The angel who executed the divine programme with reference to Job was apparently an enemy to the worthy patriarch; an enemy, a Satan to his temporal prosperity; nevertheless, this servant of God was no more the old serpent than the angel who at one time smote seventy thousand of Israel.

Whence is Satan? According to Zoroaster's Zendavesta Satan is a deity, eternal, coequal with Jehovah. As the latter had been the originator and was the supporter of the good, Satan had been the creator; and was to this day the preserver of the evil. But evil being, according to its inherent nature, self-destructive, Satan's power and dominion had gradually diminished; and in the process of time would be doomed to extinction. Such is heathen philosophy.

According to the word of God, Satan is not a creator, but a creature. But did God create Satan? Yes, though not as Satan. God created the entity which we denominate Satan, but a Satan he has made himself. As all the other handiwork of God, so also was Satan originally good, presumably a bright, glorious archangel, a fit companion of Gabriel.

To conserve the well being of the angelic hosts it was necessary to enact and introduce certain laws for their guidance. But all law admits of the possibility of transgression, at least all law appertaining to intelligences, who are free moral agents. What induced Satan to transgress God's law, we know not, but that he did so transgress, is plainly taught in Jude 6. Here the apostle says: "The angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation," etc. This certainly means in other words: these angels fell from the lofty attitude of innocence, transgressed the moral boundary which God had set them. In Revelations xii we are taught that Satan with a large angelic following rebelled against the Lord of hosts. Michael and his angels assayed themselves against the celestial traitors, resulting in the latter's discomfiture and banishment from heaven.

The number of devils is great. When in the country of the Gadarenes Christ was about to cast out an unclean spirit from an afflicted mortal, he inquired what was the demon's name. The reply was: "My name is legion, for we are many." Subsequently the plurality of devils appeared and entered into a herd of swine. Satan is called the prince of devils, indicating that there are subordinates and inferiors. The latter are perhaps more numerous than the stars of heaven. St. Paul emphatically says: "We wrestle not only against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of the world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. The manifest ambiguity of the clause; spiritual wickedness in high places, is removed when it is properly understood; wicked spirits beneath the canopy of heaven. Satan and his angels are not a reckless mobocracy where every wicked spirit is bent on mischief, according to his own diabolical pleasure. They have law and order, and a government suitable to their condition. To this the Savior incidentally bears testimony, when he was accused of casting out devils by Beelzebub, intimating that such opposition was absurd; as manifestly a kingdom divided against itself could not stand.

Whence Satan's enmity to the human family? Poor, insignificant mortals would not be noticed by him, but for his unspeakable enmity against God. Arrested in his mad career in conspiring against his Maker, exposed, overcome and excluded from heaven, his hosom is filled with the fire of greatest wrath, fanned into flame by ceaseless chagrin. He seeks for opportunities to wreak his vengeance. Wandering through the Lord's domain, outlawed, pregnant with destruction, he espied our virgin earth, with Adam and Eve domiciled in charming bowers of bliss. Here was an exhibit of God's choicest handiwork. As if earth had been designated as the flower garden of heaven—the charming suburb of the city of God for recreation and delight to the inhabitants of heaven. At once Satan recognized his opportunity of hurting God, by hurting his loveliest production. Well he knew that by precipitating his children in ruin, the father's heart would feel the pang. He came, he saw, and conquered. Our first parents fell and were expelled from their celestial surroundings. The very earth was made to suffer because of the just curse of Delty.

What of Satan's dominion now? He is the god of this world, a glacial slave owner. He entered into Iscariot. This will never happen to the thousands around us; for he has never left them. Christ cast out devils. People now are possessed as they were then; though, seldom, that the devils are cast out. True conversion is tantamount to casting out of devils. Nothing less; even after conversion we are not safe from his attacks. Like a roaring lion he gnaws about, seeking whom he may devour. He tempted Christ, sifted Peter, tempted Paul, and is bent on our destruction. Without valiant resistance we will be overcome. Certainly, we are not ignorant of his devices. What will be Satan's doom? The nature of his fall precludes the possibility of redemption. On the last day he will be compelled, with his followers to appear before the judgment bar of God. Sentence will be pronounced and executed. He will be cast into everlasting fire, prepared for him and his angels. Here the smoke of his torment rises forever and ever. The reign of evil will then forever cease.

The attitude of Catholicism toward our public schools—a problem of grave concern at the present time—is to be discussed from opposite premises in the June number of the North American Review, by M. C. O'Byrne, of North Carolina, against the Roman Catholic Church, and Bishop Keane, of Virginia, in defense of its policy.

The New York Advocate published several weeks ago that fully forty thousand conversions had occurred in the Methodist Episcopal Church during the past few months. The editor now revises that estimate after fuller information, and says the number is not less than 100,000. American Methodism seems to feel a new tide of power. Our revival now for this season of the year is exceptional. We have not known such gatherings.

A new Methodist Church in Atlanta, Ga., was dedicated on Sunday, May 10, Dr. Fitzgerald, of Nashville, preaching the sermon. It is on Park street, West End, and Rev. L. Crumley is the faithful pastor. Dr. Fitzgerald speaks enthusiastically of the church building—says it is "an architectural poem," but gives no idea of its style, dimensions or appointments other than that it may "compare with any of the great churches of the world." Crumleyan or Arnoldian honor of the pastor and architect. Good churches, of modern architecture and conveniences, are the glory of Southern Methodism. The building has much to do with the character of a congregation.

The present interest in China affairs will make doubly welcome the complete, authentic, and early one volume "History of China" by Robert K. Douglas, just published by D. Lothrop & Co.

The commencement sermon for the Normal Institute, Iuka, Miss., will be preached June 7, by Rev. Amos Kendall, of the North Mississippi Conference, and the address before the graduating class will be delivered June 11, by Capt. Fred Beall, of West Point, Miss.

The Roman Catholic clergy of Worcester, Mass., have declared solemnly against the liquor traffic. The priests, Fathers Griffin and McDevoy, went in person before the Board of Aldermen and eloquently pleaded with them not to grant license to any salaried clergyman. A few such courageous spirits among our Catholic clergy in this latitude might work a moral revolution. The age is propitious for another Father Mathew.

We are indebted to Mr. A. L. Rogers, photographic artist, 68 Lexington street, Baltimore, Md., for a picture of the Centennial Conference. Not all the faces of the delegates were secured, but the picture will have a historic interest after the war, and is worthy of wide distribution.

Mr. C. A. David, a graduate of Oxford College, S. C., has established a fine reputation as a caricaturist on Harper's Weekly.

Mr. D. W. Johnston has bequeathed $1,000 to the Methodist College, Belfast, Ireland, for ten scholarships to be called the "Phillip Johnston Scholarships."

Mr. James Russell Lowell, Ex-Minister to England, retires from office in great honor. His language in England was remarkable and his resignation has caused universal regret. The Daily News says: "Englishmen of all ranks and stations recognize in Mr. Lowell not only a faithful and jealous guardian of the interests and honor of his country, but a type of all that is best in its intellectual and moral character." The Times hopes that Mr. Lowell will remain in England "as deputed to represent the highest American culture in the republic of English literature." The St. James Gazette hopes will remain "as the unofficial representative of American literature, language, manners, and knowledge of the world." The Pall Mall Gazette calls him "the most eminent American of this generation."

The officers of the L. N. O. & T. M. have announced that no emphysema will be allowed to drink beer. A good rule that ought to be rigidly enforced. Conductors and engineers are responsible for too much human life to allow their engines to be crazed or unduly excited by drinking.

Our advice from the Nashville Convention confirm the most sanguine hopes of enthusiastic friends. There is some opposition among the members to the coming of Rev. Samuels and the erection of a tent for the meetings. But when the movement was determined upon, all fell to line and united, harmonious action has prevailed. The tent will hold about four thousand persons. At every evening service this is crowded almost to suffocation, and the following meetings at two of the largest churches are attended by over hundreds. The six o'clock morning meeting attracts a congregation of from two to three thousand. Already mighty spiritual results have been seen. One evening over three hundred were converted, and the number of inquirers increase at every service. Telegrams to the press agree in saying "nothing like it was ever seen before."

Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker was invited to preach at the Louisiana Avenue Quarterly Conference on Sunday evening. His examination was thoroughness of preparation, and the authority to expound the word was given with great cordiality. He leaves to-day to take charge of the church at Franklin, La. So without conferring with his blood he enters the Methodist service. How rejoiced his home father would have been to have seen this day!

The time for holding the Meridian District Conference has been changed. Presiding Elder Godfrey writes that the Conference will be held in Lauderdale, July 9 to 12.

We are obliged for a cordial invitation to attend the Sardis District Conference at Sardis, June 4-7, and hope to be present.

Bishop Merrill delivered a lecture recently to the students of Garrett Biblical Institute on the "Administration of Discipline in the Methodist Episcopal Church."

Rev. W. T. Black will preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College, May 31.

The council of Catholic prelates decided to locate the new Catholic University at Washington, D. C. Wesleyan Methodist in Australia is enjoying great prosperity.

The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church were in session last week.

The Supreme Court of this State has affirmed the decision of the lower court in the celebrated "Ford case," which sentenced Pat Ford and John Murphy to be hung for murder, and T. J. Ford, Wm. Caulfield and Wm. H. Buckley to twenty years imprisonment for manslaughter. This indicates a revival of justice in Louisiana.

Revs. D. A. Little and A. D. Miller, of the Mississippi Conference, were in the city last week and reported at 112 Camp street.

Rev. A. G. Miller, of Jackson, La., long connected with Centenary College and an indefatigable "local itinerant," has been visiting New Orleans. The old veteran is always welcome in this office and to our columns.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, of the North Mississippi Conference, was furnished "the slings of war" by his generous congregation and sent down to see the Exposition.

It is rumored that Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman will be appointed as the next pastor of the Metropolitan Church, Washington, D. C. That is his old charge.

Bishop Keener presided at the Mobile District Conference last week and preached on Sunday morning to the delight of a large congregation.

Bishop Miles, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, preached in Minden, La., last Sunday to our white congregation a sermon of real power. His discourse to the colored people on prohibition was so effective that every member then and there pledged himself to vote and work for its triumph.

Dr. J. B. Walker left the city for Shreveport, on Tuesday, to assist Dr. C. F. Evans in a revival meeting. He expects to spend a week in that North Louisiana metropolis, and will give those people sound gospel.

During the absence of our pastor in Denver, Colorado, Rev. J. C. Morris, the pulpit was occupied one Sabbath by Bishop Warren, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Rev. Frank Parker preached his maiden sermon at St. Charles Avenue Church last Sunday morning. The congregation was much delighted with the effort which occupied about thirty minutes. In his modest, dignified manner, and the matter of his discourse, he much resembled his glorified father, Bishop Linus Parker.

The meetings at Louisiana Avenue Church continue with growing interest. Pastor White is encouraged in his work and looks for a general revival. We had the pleasure of expounding one evening to that elect congregation, and found it good to be there. Dr. Walker preached on Sunday, morning and evening. There were twenty conversions on Monday evening.

Our Colorado brethren are rejoiced at the coming of Bishop Hargrove to preside at their next Conference session.

The Minutes of the Annual Conferences for 1884, including the Louisiana, Florida and Baltimore Conferences of 1885, have been received. Every Methodist ought to have this valuable annual. Price, fifty cents postpaid. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Lord Coleridge says there has been a "gratifying annual decrease in the prison population of England for the last twelve or fourteen years." This result is attributed to better school advantages, increased church activity and the advance of temperance reform. The Duke of Westminster says that in the fifteen years from 1869 to 1884, while the population of England and Wales increased by four millions and a half, the number of criminals in prison diminished by 1,718.

We are indebted to Hon. Charles Gayerre, the venerable historian of Louisiana, for a pleasant call and a copy of his lecture, "The Creoles of History and The Creoles of Romance."

All subscriptions over due on our Louisiana list will be discontinued with our next issue. Please take notice and renew immediately.

THE SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR.

From this date we will receive subscriptions for the ADVOCATE and Southern Cultivator for two dollars and seventy-five cents, postage prepaid. Subscribers wishing Dickson's System of Farming, in connection with the above arrangement, will send twenty-five cents extra, or three dollars for the three publications, postage prepaid. Unless cash accompanies all orders, no attention will be paid to same. No reduction allowed for postoffice orders or registered letters.

Rev. J. A. Bowen sends the following bulletin from Kosciusko:

The great revival here increases with every service; 55 conversions up to date; 34 accessions to our church; 40 penitents now. The church and the town moved wonderfully. Pray for us.

NOTICE.—Members of the Corinth District Conference and Sunday-school Convention, which will convene Thursday, before the second Sunday in June, at Rlenzi, Miss., will please report at the church where you will be assigned to your homes. Preachers expecting to bring their wives with them, will please notify me at once. Anxious for you Mr. Editor to visit us on that occasion.

D. W. BARR, P. C.

Because Christ loves us he claims us, and desires to have us wholly yielded to his will, so that the operations of love in and for us may find no hindrance.—F. R. Haverall.

There is too much impromptu statesmanship, touch-and-go legislation, half-baked sermonizing, happy-go-lucky financiering, and haphazard "enterprise" in this country.

SEND $1 BILLS.—We wish our patrons to bear in mind that a payment for subscriptions we do not desire postage stamps, and that they should be sent only or fractional parts of a dollar. A dollar bill is much more convenient and safe to remit than the same amount in one, two or three cents stamps. The actual risk of remitting money is slight; if properly directed not one misalliance will occur in one thousand. Inclose the bills, and where letters containing money are sealed in presence of the postmaster, we will assume all the risk.

Bishop Granberry has charge of the mission in Brazil.

Bishop Keener has charge of the Central Mexican Mission.

"What amused me most at the opera" said an Arab chief, who had been taken to hear "Faust," "was one of the musicians in the orchestra, seated a little higher than the rest, who performed on an invisible instrument with a stick."

At a collection made at a church, lady on the West Side, an evening or two since, a lady offered the plate to a wealthy man, well known for his singleness. "I have nothing to give," was his surly reply. "Then take something," she resumed; "I am begging for the poor."

Publisher's Department.

No fraudulent advertisements will knowingly be allowed in the ADVOCATE. If one ever appears it will be by accident.

In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

OARVER & JAMIESON, Publishers.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Allen & Son, Fifth & Vine Sts., Cincinnati, O., and 140 Nassau St., New York, making them our Special Publishers' Agents, and giving them the entire charge of the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

A Troy man shot at a hen with a revolver, and hit a neighbor who was sitting on the fence, watching him. Both are agreed that the bullet glanced from the hen.

On hand—at the stationer's Esterbrook's popular pens in every variety of size, shape, style and of superior quality. He also has the stationer's.

Two rival country editors, while at a political meeting, were impatiently awaiting for one to take their papers. "Gentlemen, I don't want to be late," said he. "Well take mine," replied one of the editors. "Mine has twice as much original matter as his." "That so? Well I'll take his. I always want the best."

In this issue will be found the advertisement of the Primory Truss Company, of New York, representing Dr. Meigs Case's Spinal Apparatus, which has been highly recommended in the Medical Record, of New York. For further information write to the company, at 785 Broadway, New York, or L. L. Lyons & Co., corner Canal and Gravier streets, New Orleans.

"Edward, what do I hear?"—that you have disobeyed your grandmother, who told you just now and to jump down these steps? "Grandma didn't tell us not to papa; she only came to the door and said, 'I wouldn't jump down those steps, boys,' and I shouldn't think she would—an old lady like her."

Among the endorsements of the New Life Remedy and Life Tonic, which came in last week, is one from Judge L. O. Bridwell, of Beaumont, Miss. He took them for a severe cold and loss of voice with pains and approaching pneumonia. The cure was perfect. He adds: "As a preventive and restorer of a diseased liver, it is unexcelled." He took both mixed.

"Your age?" asked the Judge. "Thirty-five, your honor," replied the woman. Judge: "But you were thirty-five the last time you were here, three years ago." She: "And does your honor think I'm the woman to say one thing one day, and another thing another?"

Many influences combine to make the hair crisp, lifeless, thin and gray. The best dressing and restorative is Parker's Hair Balsam.

"I hope you will be a better boy in the future," said his mother. "Yes," sobbed the boy. "I guess you will mind your father next time he speaks to you." "Yes," sobbed the boy. "I'll be a better boy," said the boy. "I'll be a better boy," said the boy.

W. C. Shepard sells dinner and tea sets, refrigerators, bath tubs, ice boxes and cream freezers.

Mr. Edward Atkinson says that silver is not as valuable as eggs. This may be true, but a pocket full of the former does not cause as much anxiety as the same quantity of the latter.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone P. O., Pickens county, Ala., having so often read in the ADVOCATE of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having viewed the sale for one of those lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $50. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We could request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $100, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein invites all when visiting the city to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pleasure in showing, even if you do not desire to buy. He has the celebrated Mathushek, Rehnig, Mason & Hamlin and Hale pianos at very lowest prices and on the easiest terms. Old pianos repaired or taken in exchange for a new one. Good second-hand pianos at low $40.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE please keep this in remembrance.

DR. MEIGS CASE'S SPINAL APPARATUS.

This apparatus applies to the treatment of Spinal Diseases the principle of extension, already well established as a most efficient method for the cure of diseases of the joints. With this it combines a three fold and requires no special exercises. Relief from the weight of the head and shoulders (without casting the burden on some other part of the body); the straightening of the curves (by means of the traction exerted by the weight of the body itself); and opportunity for exercise without restraint under these favorable conditions.

The results of daily exercise in this apparatus quickly demonstrate its utility. The patient improves rapidly in strength and height; the muscles concerned in maintaining an erect position are developed and invigorated, and a new work is frequently shown a greater ease than can possibly be reached by months of treatment with the restorative appliances in general use. For prices, directions for measurement and use, and other information in respect to this apparatus, apply to POMEROY TRUSS CO., 785 BROADWAY, N. Y., SOLE MANUFACTURERS.

"AND ALL HIS WONDROUS LOVE PROCLAIM."

WONDROUS LOVE

Is the Title of the

NEW SINGING BOOK

By Geo. F. Root and C. C. Case, authors of "True Devotion."

THE WORDS

Throughout the entire book are strong, helpful, encouraging and full of the "Wondrous Love" of which these praises they proclaim.

THE MUSIC

Is fresh, vigorous, and inspiring, and has the added charm of exactly expressing the sentiments of the words with which it is connected. It has been specially prepared to meet the increasing demand for original and harmonious music that can be readily learned and sung by the whole school.
It is an original and beautiful work, and is highly recommended by the best authorities.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 13.—Reports submitted yesterday to the Young Men's Christian Association show that the Association owns $4,800,000 worth of property. The expenses of the committee for the year were $31,000. They employ eleven secretaries. Eighteen new buildings have been dedicated during the year. The report shows a remarkable growth in every department of the work, particularly for the religious, mental, social and physical well-being of young men in Bible study and in personal work.

St. Louis, May 14.—At the afternoon session of the Knights of Honor, the following officers were re-elected either by acclamation or unanimously: Supreme dictator, Gen. T. D. Sloan; vice dictator, Major L. A. Pratt; second vice dictator, John P. Nelson; supreme treasurer, Joseph W. Branch; supreme guide, P. C. Carlton; supreme sentinel, Louis Wilson; Messrs. Woodman, Johnson and Matt were elected supreme trustees.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The Western Union Telegraph Company began to-day putting their wires under ground within the city limits by requirement of the District Commissioners. The wires are to run through wooden tubes, laid in double rows and thickly coated the full length with creosote. The depth under ground the tubes are laid is two and a half feet. The telephone wires are shortly to follow, and entirely there will not be left a single telegraph or telephone pole in town.

AUSTIN, Tex., May 15.—Forty convicts are employed on Clay's farm in Brazos county. A great mob of armed men surrounded the guards and prisoners and demanded the release of the latter. The guards refused, whereupon a fight ensued, in which the convicts joined the mob. The fight was terrible, and resulted in a disappearance of information as to the killed and wounded. It is reported several are fatally wounded. The outrage is due to the hush and cry against convict labor outside the penitentiary. The Governor offers $200 reward for the conviction of any of the leaders of the outrage.

VICKSBURG, May 16.—A desperate duel occurred this morning at Rolling Fork, Sharkey county, between W. K. McLaurin, of Brandon, and S. P. Shelton, of the Chancery clerk of that county, resulting in the death of Shelton.

NEWARK, N. J., May 17.—A large audience gathered in the Clinton Avenue Reformed Church this evening at the sixty-first anniversary service of the American Sunday School Union. The new Sunday-schools opened with 67,668 scholars, averaging nearly five scholars and gathering into them 185 scholars per day for each day in the year. The schools added numbered 1713, with a membership of over 10,000. There were 18,200 Bibles and Testaments distributed, 33,707 family vias were made and 8882 addresses were delivered by missionaries of the society.

OHATTANOOGA, May 17.—The last session of the Legislature was an act prohibiting preaching of polygamy in this State and making it a misdemeanor. Tuesday three Mormon elders arrived at Elizabeth, in Carter county and began at once proselyting among the natives and preaching their doctrines. To-day they were arrested and placed in jail. They are on telegraphed for Church in the south, and propose to contest the constitutionality of the act. The Mormon Church is making rapid progress in this State, and the result of this contest is awaited with deep interest.

NEW YORK, May 17.—Dr. Taylor and Edison and Inspector Miller, of the health department, returned from Plymouth, Pa., to-day. Dr. Taylor said that the continuance of the epidemic in that town is due to lack of systematic disinfection. The Plymouth people want nurses who speak Dutch and Welsh.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 17.—There were three deaths at Plymouth today. The relief committee reported last night that they have thus far received $3638.34.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 18.—Rev. Samuel Jones, the Georgia evangelist, has entered upon his second week of labor here. P. O. Beasley, a wholesale grocer and liquor dealer, to-day turned over his entire stock of liquors to a church committee, who are empowered to destroy it or dispose of it as they may deem proper. The manager of the steamboat have ordered their bars closed. Little business is doing very closed. The business so great is the impression made by the meetings. Mr. Jones preached to 6000 people to-night.

KENWICK, Kas., May 13.—A cyclone passed through Rooks county on the 17th, about 4 p. m., starting near the line between Osborne and Rooks counties, at the southeast corner of Rooks county, and following a westerly course, causing death and destruction throughout its course. Nearly fifty persons are injured. The loss at Bull City and Stockton consists of chimneys blown down and window glass broken by hail. At this point but little damage was done. Damage in Rooks county will probably reach $50,000.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., May 13.—A family feud in Madison county culminated yesterday in a tragically fatal encounter between three brothers named West on one side and three brothers named Langford on the other. The scene of the conflict was Hickory Grove Church, several miles from the county seat, within the church edifice. When the fight was inaugurated. Several of the combatants were teaching Sunday-school classes at the time. The ladies and children present became panic-stricken and fled in every direction. Four or five men essayed to quell the trouble, but personal safety made desistance imperative. The madmen brothers fired thirty or forty shots at close quarters, drew knives and engaged in a hand-to-hand encounter. Wm. Langford fell to the ground from the loss of blood, Babe Langford fell by his side, his sole surviving brother stood up with his face to the foe and fought till a bullet lodged in his brain, and he, too, fell to the ground unconscious and dying. One of the West boys was killed outright. John West, an Abraham West, may have been the result of a feud which had been smoldering between the two families for several years.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, May 14.—The debate in the House of Commons this evening over the annuity to be paid to Princess Beatrice after her marriage was short and sharp, and the government had an easy and a decisive victory, the grant of $30,000 per year being made by a vote of 237 to 38.

St. Paul, May 15.—A Winnipeg special from Clark's Crossing, on the 14th, says a half-breed courier has arrived from Prince Albert and reports all quiet there. Half-breeds are arriving at Middleton's camp and surrendering in large numbers. They say they were forced into the rebellion.

LONDON, May 15.—The Archbishop of Canterbury is the only person who has as yet been permitted to receive a complete copy of the revised Old Testament. The five thousand people employed in binding and packing are closely watched to prevent a breach of trust on their part. The Dean of Canterbury, who was a member of the revising committee, is preparing a paper on the revised version. A copy of the revised Old Testament will be presented to the Queen to-day. The revised edition will be issued to newspapers on Friday night and will be distributed among bookellers on Monday. The changes are described as being less numerous in proportion, but more important than those of the revised New Testament. Great precaution was taken to prevent their disclosure before the publication of the work.

St. Paul, Minn., May 16.—A Winnipeg special, received at 4 a. m., says "Riel was captured to-day (Friday) at noon, three miles north of Batouche, by three scouts named Diep, Thoru and Armstrong. He appeared unconcerned, but begged not to be shot. He was taken to Gen. Middleton's headquarters.

PARIS, May 18.—Victor Hugo is ill with heart disease and congestion of the lungs. He is sinking rapidly. Crowds of sympathizing friends at present surround the residence of the venerable poet, anxiously awaiting the result of his affliction.

LONDON, May 18.—Extensive preparations are being made in the increased department of telegrams. The increased number of telegrams is expected in the adoption of the six-penny rate for a telegram. It is expected that the first year there will be an increase in the total number of telegrams of 30 per cent. Half a million pounds have already been expended for new poles, wires, instruments, etc.

Books and Periodicals.

NEW LIGHT ON MORMONISM. By Mrs. Ellen E. Dickinson. With an Introduction by Thurloe Weed. New York: Funk & Wagnall. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy of this readable book. Mrs. Dickinson relates the story of the original manuscript from which the "Book of Mormon" was produced with a circumstantial accuracy and interest that will engage every reader's eager attention. The rapid growth of Mormonism and the grave political aspect it has assumed, make this and like works specially valuable. It is additional proof of the fraud that brought forth the iniquity, and the absurdity of recognizing its pretenses to be a religion.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The next annual camp meeting of Henington Camp Ground will begin Thursday, August 20, 1885, and continue one week. All ministers of the gospel, friendly to camp meetings, are especially invited, with the public to attend. The ticket system will be preserved. J. W. MERRILL, Sec.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the adulterated. Sold only in cans.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

SPRING FEVER

BROWNS

THE BEST TONIC.

For Weakness, Lassitude, Lack of Energy, &amp;c. It HAS NO EQUAL, and is the only medicine that is not injurious. It enriches the blood, invigorates the system, restores appetite, aids digestion, and does not blacken or injure the teeth, cause headache or produce constipation—other medicines do. Dr. O. H. BINKLEY, a leading physician of Springfield, O., says: "I have used Brown's Iron Bitters in a thoroughly good medicine. I use it in my practice, and find it a condition of the system. Brown's Iron Bitters is a really a positive necessity. It is all that is claimed for it."

Genuine has trade mark and crossed red lines on wrapper. Beware of cheap imitations. Made only by BROWN CHEMICAL CO., BALTIMORE, MD. LADDER HAWK BRAND—small and attractive, containing full directions, information about color, etc., given away by all dealers in medicine, or mailed to you on receipt of 2c. stamp.

HIDDEN JOYS.

There's no lack of where no pleasures seem:
There's not a leaf that falls upon the ground
But holds some joy, of silence or of sound,
Some subtle beguiling of a summer dream.
The very meadow flowers are made to smile
With innate ecstasy. No grain of sand
But more a bright and million-peopled land,
And each its Eden and its Elysium.
For Love, though hid himself, a curious eye
Hath found me, to behold the hearts of things, And lo! the mine ear with power. Thus, far or nigh,
Mine or mightily, far, or free with wings,
Delight from many a treasure covertly
Peeps sparkling, and in tones familiar sings.

Distinction and Instinct of Race.

BY REV. B. N. PALMER, D. D.

I speak with the greatest pleasure to this assemblage because it is not, in my judgment, a mere holiday occasion; it is not gathered here for the gratification of a sentiment. There is in this assemblage, and on this occasion, a purpose as grand and as earnest that it will require years of patient thought and labor to accomplish it hereafter. The problem presented for solution here, my friends, is that of the elevation of an entire people to as high an intellectual and moral plane as can possibly be achieved. You have done me the honor to ask for the utterance of my thoughts on this occasion, and I will take the liberty of speaking with entire frankness of all that is in my heart, for I do not know how I can in any other way contribute to the solution of this grand problem.

Let me say in the very outset that I recognize very heartily both the distinction and the instinct of race. Of course, as a Christian man, I believe in the unity of the Christian family, all springing from one original stock; for it is written in the sacred book, "God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth." But I believe just as firmly that it is the policy of Almighty God to divide this family up into distinct and separate members for his own beneficent ends.

When the great bow was placed in the heavens as the sign of that covenant that God made with man after the flood, that he would never again destroy the earth with a universal deluge, it had become necessary, in accordance with the principles upon which God's government is founded and organized, that he should put a restraint upon the license and wickedness of man, so that he should not rise to that extravagant height which had brought upon the earth the catastrophe of the deluge. Hence, it has become a matter of history that he broke the unity of human speech, and stamped upon the people of the earth those characteristic marks by which the great families or groups of nations have ever since been distinguished.

So that for the distinction of race, I believe I believed also in the instinct of race. I believe that principle of self-respect, which is proper to every man, and which is placed in the human breast as the basis of whatever of good may be developed there; and planted thus in the individual, it widens out into the family when the individual becomes constituted so that the respect and affection which a man properly entertains for himself is developed into that domestic affection which binds together the members of a household; broadening out from that until it spreads over the world, and becomes what we call patriotism, widening out still in broader circles, until it over-takes the universe and is recognized in the cause of philanthropy. Now, this instinct of self-respect and self-appreciation, which I hold to be indispensable as the basis of individual and personal character, extends to every race of men that exists. When, therefore, it became apparent in your history, when you were some twenty years ago suddenly thrust to the front to make the most of your own resources, it was perfectly natural that there should be developed in your bosom, as in mine and as in that of every honest and true man, the instinct of race.

It was right that you should create those associations among yourselves which should develop and occupy the social element of your people. It was perfectly right and altogether in accordance with the principles of the highest reasoning that you should be gathered in your own schools, and that you should be taught by teachers well instructed of your own race; that you should be gathered in your own churches, and taught by pastors well instructed of your own race. I say again, and with renewed emphasis, that I recognize distinctly, not only the distinction, but the instinct of race.

And now, my friends, permit me to add, as the climax of this thought, that as a race you are put this day upon an elevated platform before all the nations of mankind. Here, in connection with this Exposition, you touch the highest civilization upon earth. You behold with your eyes the products of every part of this great continent. Not only so, but you behold the products which represent the education and the civilization and the thought of the more ancient nations of the earth. It was a wonderful history, that of the news by which 4,000,000 of people—at that time, twenty years ago—were by that high Providence which rules over nations as well as over men, you were brought out from that state of dependence upon the will of other men and made to develop before all mankind upon a platform as elevated as our own Rocky Mountains, or as the mountains upon the Eastern shore of our continent, to work out before the nations of the earth your own history and distinction. I congratulate you upon that event. Providence has brought you as a people and a race, and put you upon this exalted platform to work out your own history and career. I say, from the depths of my breast, a hearty "amen" to it all.

But now mark. If you are to be a historic people, you must make yourselves worthy of an history, for it is a law of nature in all of her departments that everything must grow from its own roots. There are parasitic plants that climb about the trees upon which they live, and that sometimes even put forth little flowers of their own, but they have no root of their own, and therefore no strength and no glory. It is an ordinance of him who has made nature a man, and it is as true of races as of plants—that everything must grow from its own root. And I believe you are to emphasize that thought. You are to be in history just as you are worthy to be, neither more nor less, and I am here to exhort you all, so that your roots may take hold in time. Now, to recur again to the analogy of the plant; there must be a living seed, and that living seed must stand in direct relation to the soil, and when put into the earth it must be strengthened and warmed and refreshed and nourished until it bursts its shell and the hidden life goes forth into the plant; and as soon as it emerges from the soil it must shoot out its leaves, the lungs of the plants, through which it breathes the pure air of heaven, and be painted as to its colors by that highest of all artists, the sun, which God has placed in the zenith of the heavens.

Just so with man; he must have capacities. There must be within him the qualities of courage and patience and hopefulness. There must be those mental and moral traits that give life to the seed that produces corn in harvest time; and there must be time for all this, and there must be the proper surroundings, and the proper agencies at work. Now I come to the point which is submitted for our consideration in the programme of this occasion. What are to be the agencies by which you are to rise to a historic position among the nations of the earth? For here I have to say that you shall have what all other nations have had, just that place in history that you make for yourselves.

When you develop the qualities that are in you, and form a character upon which that history is to be built, unquestionably according to the appointment of him who rules the universe, you will have your own orbit described for you. For as there are orbits in which the planets move, orbits in which the solar system themselves move, all sweeping around that great common centre, which for aught we know may be the abode of the Almighty, so there are orbits provided for men and for races and for nations just according to their own fitness. I point again to the responsibility that lies upon you, and I take the full share of responsibility upon myself.

We are here on this occasion standing side by side, white men and black men. We have known each other through the centuries that are past. We white men were born and brought up in the arms of nurses that came of your race. If there are two classes who should be perfectly friendly one to the other, who should rejoice in their mutual advancement and prosperity, who are the Southern whites and the negroes of America. Now as to that which we call character, the basis of all history, how very remarkable it is that even the nations that belong to the same race yet differ in the characteristics they develop. Look upon the map of Europe. There you find England and France and Germany and Spain and Italy—all of them of the Caucasian stock, all of them bearing the impress of the race to which they belong, yet with individual distinctions by which they are perfectly separated one from the other. You can not confound the Englishman with the Frenchman, nor the German with the Italian or the Spaniard. What are the causes that combine to produce those minute differences that exist between nations of the same stock? I, perhaps, am not competent to indicate. At any rate this is not the place to discuss the subject. It is the same with regard to the nations of the East.

The Arabian and the Persian came from the same stock; so did the Chinese and the Japanese; and yet, though they have traits in common that have descended to them, they are distinct from each other in the traits they have developed. Hence, as has been suggested by the speakers who have preceded me, there is to be a type of character, perhaps a type of civilization, that is to be peculiarly your own. A type of civilization that shall produce new qualities even. What are the agencies that are to be brought into operation to effect this? I reduce them to three. They are: First, the home; second, the church; third, the school. I say home, because it is the primary state, the first society, out of which all states and societies spring. Home! Knit together by the bonds of chaste affection in which children shall be taught the law of obedience to authority, and in the exercise of that obedience, all their faculties, intellectual and moral, shall be trained. If it were not for the despotism of the family—say despotism; it is a strong word, but not too strong—I do not believe that men would be capable of subjection under any form of government in the world. Then there is the church. Streams do not rise higher than their sources. Tell me the religion of a people and I shall know the people themselves. Not until the religious character of a man or of a nation is developed does he become capable of subjection to human law; until then he is entirely useless to the society around him. But it is more appropriate on the present occasion, seeing the character of the object that has called us together, that I should dwell upon the third and last of the agencies to which I have referred—namely, the school. Through the generosity of friends at a distance your people have been wonderfully well supplied with the higher class of schools.

I have sometimes thought that perhaps there had been a mistake in putting so much of that liberality in that direction and not a little lower down in the scale of literary equipment. However, that may be, it is so happy that all this Southern country, from the Gulf up to the border of the Northern States, you are everywhere provided to a good degree with the institutions that impart a high education.

But besides these institutions there are the technical schools, that have been so eloquently referred to by my friend, Col. Johnston. These furnish a supplementary education, as it were; an education that should everywhere be encouraged. Such schools bring your young people into intimate connection with those requirements and those pursuits of life in which many of them will have to earn their bread. Let me say, in closing, that in all your efforts to advance yourselves, whether socially or educationally, you have the very heartiest sympathy and co-operation of all wise and thoughtful men upon the face of the earth.

The Class Meeting.

I spent several hours of this afternoon in the Christian home of a veteran Presbyterian elder in our town, who is now at home from his business in Mobile and is slowly convalescing from an acute attack of sickness. I do not know when I have made a visit that seemed more appreciated or that I more thoroughly enjoyed. His thoughts and conversation were of religion from first to last, and I left that home a wiser and better man. During our conversation he stated that the class meeting was a means of grace. He had always desired to see his church incorporate in its prudential methods of helping Christians in their experience and their lives. He said, I want us to call it by its proper name, a class meeting; and to conduct it just as your people do. And he then said, For I tell you those who attend the class meeting will read their Bibles more, think more and pray more, and they are bound to grow better in heart and life. There is nothing like it in any other church for the development and the strengthening of Christians.

There are some points suggested by this brother's talk to which I wish to call attention. Through ignorance of its value as a helping power, many of our people are opposed to the class meeting, and we have tried numberless expedients under nom de plumes to try to get our people back to the good old days of the class meeting, and have failed. I have tried these untried methods only to find them utter failures. They would do well for a season, but as soon as the novelty would wear off any meeting would die. So I told my people here that I was going to hold a class meeting—the old style in name and methods—and ask them all to meet me. Some looked startled, others in the form of an interrogation point and others like a failure. Some said they never heard of a class meeting being held in the church, and others said they had never attended one. Still I held the class meeting, and there were twenty-two present. Some of them talked of their own account, and I went to the others and talked with them so that not one escaped. I felt it was a life of faith and that I would test it thoroughly. Some one by my side asked me as we walked home if I thought any of those present this evening would be there next time. We had had a good meeting, and I felt sure they would be. At the next meeting we had twenty-nine present, and nearly all those who were at the first, and those who were not there, did not stay away because they did not like the class meeting. Now it is an established fact among us and is growing on the people daily.

I wish to call attention to some features of these meetings. One is that the children and young people, who are not members of the church, are becoming deeply interested in the class meeting, and they are hearing some of the very best short sermons from these Christian men and women I ever heard in my life. And members of the church are becoming more and more interested in the salvation of sinners, and if we do not have a sweeping revival here soon I shall be greatly disappointed. But one other point I wish to mention has done us all great good. Since my pastorate here many families have been greatly afflicted by death, and the sorrows of some have given me great trouble. I have preached and prayed and talked, hoping to dispel the gloom that had settled on hearts that ought to be active in the Master's service; yet all seemed to fail. But when they met and talked over their trials and troubles in the class meeting and prayed one for another, the light broke in and they could again sing the sweet songs of Zion. Thank God for our class meeting!

Now, brethren in the ministry, try the old paths and see how quickly and how gladly the people will learn to walk therein with thankfulness to God for the class meeting.

Still Traveling—the Magnificent City.

MR. EDITOR: I greet your numerous readers from this place of national fame with another epistle of travel and observation. It was refreshing to fall in with about a dozen preachers and laymen who disembarked at Jonesboro, Tenn., to attend the district meeting. I was two and one-half days coming from New Orleans to this place. Leaving the great Exposition and my dear and kindly remembered Christian friends, Dr. and Slater Lyons and so many others, my heart felt sad at the thought of never, perhaps, on earth, meeting them again; but glad that we would meet in our Father's house and "see the King in his beauty."

Fortunate, I found my boarding-house with kind friends fronting the square on which Mt. Vernon Place Methodist Church is so well located, of which Rev. Dr. Cox is the courteous, popular, successful and consecrated pastor. I shall not forget that able defence of Gladstone's peace policy and enlogio on his Christian character, which formed the tissue of his Sabbath night sermon, based on the words of the prophet: "The sword shall be beaten into the plowshare and the spear into the pruning-hook, and nations shall learn war no more."

The congregations were fine both morning and evening, the singing excellent, the devotional and well-ordered make-up of the flock spoke unmistakably that they were well educated Methodists, and the pastor had them well in hand. The cross of "rightly dividing the word of truth" was laid on the traveler in the forenoon. He felt the presence of the Master. Mt. Vernon Place Church is a fine and slightly and a well-arranged edifice, complete in all its appointments, where worships a large congregation composed of hundreds of the best citizens of Washington City. The church membership is increasing, and now numbers four hundred and seventy-five. Dr. Cox informs me that in East Washington is a fine opening for a chapel to be erected, and start right off in the support of a pastor. Let him have the needed aid. The Sunday-school was indeed fine, singing—everything. That infant class of seventy-five, conducted by those golly women, I will not forget. Their sparkling eyes and interested countenances as we told them of the Indians made a bright picture.

Time would fail me to tell of Mt. Vernon, the home and tomb of Washington, sixteen miles below on the Potomac, and the fine, palatial residences of the world's great, and Smithsonian Institute and Government Museum, and Washington's Monument, 555 feet high, the highest shaft in the world, and the capital, its corridors, frescoes, chambers, dome, etc., and the various magnificent government buildings like beehives with the employees, and the streets and trees and squares and fountains and statuary, and the White House with its singular magnificence which I saw. This must be one of the most magnificent cities in the world. But I journey on to the great West to-day.

Affectionately in Christ,
T. B. WHITE.

Bishops Pierce and Parker.

From the published report of Bishop Graubner's memorial sermon, delivered in McKimree Church, Nashville, May 3, we make a short extract:

Now let me speak of those two men from whose life we should all gather inspiration. They were eminent men. My acquaintance with Bishop Parker may be said to have begun with his election as Bishop, but I saw in him a true man, a great man. He was a man of solid judgment, pure as gold, tried by fire. No man was more modest than he. He never courted responsibility, but in the discharge of a duty never quailed. He was a luminous expounder of the word and a wise administrator. Never forward to express an opinion, but ever ready to avow and maintain his belief. Bishop McVeyre, in his visitation to Texas, the district over which Bishop Parker presided, found among his people a distinct and lasting impression of the man.

For forty years George F. Pierce had fixed upon him the gaze of the church for his many brilliant qualities. He was modest and retiring, and bore his honors meekly. If ever a young preacher was in danger of being spoiled that man was Pierce. Possessed of a wonderful manly beauty, his mind was richly endowed by nature and culture. In manner he was easy, polished and dignified, with a grace that would have adorned a palace. In conversation he was entertaining and instructive, and a favorite with all classes and ages. In the pulpit he was an orator, yet with all the honors showered upon him in such rapid profusion, he had neither vanity, egotism or pride, and never failed in respect or duty to the youngest or oldest. The pulpit was his throne. His was the simplicity of the Bible; he used no high-down metaphor, no word painting, he only preached Christ and him crucified. He was like his own Sunny South, and sentence after sentence fell from his lips, compact and polished, with all the brilliance of rubies, emeralds and diamonds, sparklingly bright, and when he came to exhortation he drew the thunderbolts of heaven. His election as Bishop touched him deeply, and he realized and felt the depth and importance of his duties. In the North, East, South and West he was known and loved and everywhere his words bore fruit and sinners were converted. In the latter years of his life he was afflicted with a thorn in the flesh but his usefulness continued to the day of his death.

Two pictures will ever remain in my loving memory. The first when I saw him in all the glory of his youth and manly beauty, and the last not long before his death, bent with age and enfeebled with disease, his cheeks wan and colorless but his eye still bright and sparkling.

Unselfish Work Yields the Best Results.

Work of some sort is made necessary to us by the law of God, by the demands of our own natures and by our relation to others. The kind of work we shall do and the manner of doing it are with us matters of choice. Ordinarily we choose the most agreeable work or that which at least conduces best to our own selfish interests, and we feel often pleased as we progress, but discover ourselves unsatisfied at the completion of our cherished schemes. We venture to suggest that there is a more excellent way, and that if it be followed we shall find pleasure not only in the progress of our work, but also satisfaction in its consummation. The path we propose to tread is that of unselfishness and self-denial. The greatest victories ever won are those over self and the purest happiness ever secured comes through unselfish devotion to the interests of others. We have begun to discover that the very best reason for the performance of any duty is the fact that we do not want to do it. Pride sometimes whispers a protest and self-love puts in its strong plea, but duty makes its stern demand and will not tolerate dallying with temptation, since it puts conscience vigorously to work and if we intend to be true at all we must follow the dictates of an enlightened conscience and go with alacrity wherever it leads. We say with alacrity because a mere mechanical obedience, and only mechanical obedience not only fails to give us the joy of service, but it prevents the results being as valuable to God and man. The question of motive should be carefully examined into. Sometimes it may be found that the good we are doing, is being done from selfish motives altogether. We may take great pleasure in being considered liberal or alms men and out that our public piety is to be seen of men, and further scrutiny may show us to be so near akin to a hypocrite that we may well be alarmed and ask God to pardon and guide us aright. If our motives be pure, it will soon be discovered that we are thinking only of duty for its own dear sake, and that self does not even enter its voice. The joy we can bring into other lives is quickly reflected back on our own, and we may yet learn the lesson the Master teaches us who for "the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

Gen. Gordon's life is proof of what we have said. Always unselfish, always laboring for others, and finding his joy in the alleviation of human woes; he followed wherever the Master led, and who doubts that the beauty, strength and success of his life came through his unselfish devotion to others. We have found that unpleasant work when done in the proper spirit has become really pleasing and profitable, and that our sweetest joys have come by the path of self-denial and sacrifice. We urge, therefore, that our people seek the best results through unselfish work, and we are confident that some experiences in this line will encourage you to persevere, until perhaps you may yet attain unto Paul's willingness to die for the brethren, and secure that bounteous of spirit and happiness which no tribulation or persecution could take out of his life. —Baltimore Methodist.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, on Thursday, May 7, 1885, the Hon. E. L. Faucher, LL.D., vice-president, in the chair. Religious services were conducted by Secretary Hunt.

Various communications from foreign countries were presented to the Board, including reports from several of the society's foreign agents.

Appropriations for the work of translating, printing and distributing the Scriptures in Persia, China, Russia, India, France and South America were made to the amount of $41,703; making the aggregate sum appropriated for the foreign work of the society for the current year $172,850.

Grants and consignments of books were made for distribution in the United States and in other lands of the aggregate value of about $12,400. It was reported that one hundred and sixty-five colporteurs are now engaged in the work of the fourth general supply.

One Bible Society was reorganized as auxiliary in Mississippi and one in Iowa.

The total receipts for April were $28,284.44, and 117,250 volumes were issued from the Bible House during the same time.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1885.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate,
GIVE A HAND AND A WORD.

Give a hand of help and a word of cheer.
To all whom you meet to life—
There is nothing like it to courage give
To the strugglers in the strife.

That man may sink for lack of your hand,
He needs your best help to-day;
Your manly strength added now to his own
Would lighten him on his way.

Then, give him aid once the aid that he needs,
And give it with all your might—
In helping your brother to bear his load,
You may make your burden light.

That woman pines for crushed to earth,
Beet under her burden woe—
Oh, those words of strong cheer that you might speak,
Would comfort and bless her so!

Though you can not cure her sorrowful heart,
You well know of how who can—
The healer of hearts, acquainted with grief,
The all-loving Son of Man.

Then, quickly carry the news unto her
And help her to reach his breast—
Just there she may pillow her aching head,
Just there find comfort and rest.

Let us help all those who are sinking down
For lack of the helping hand,
Let us speak kind words to sorrowing souls,
The heart-broken of the land.

Give a hand of help and a word of cheer
To all whom you meet to life—
There is nothing like it to courage give
To the strugglers in the strife.

Rev. David M. Rush.

NY C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

A desire that the church should know more of a quiet, but remarkable character, together with a personal inclination, prompts me to write somewhat of Rev. David M. Rush, recently deceased. From this days of Plutarch down to the present, the writing of lives has formed a large and an important part of literature. Alas! that so much has been written in this direction simply to comply with friendship or to meet a conventional demand.

It is not everyone that can write a profitable life sketch, even though he may be possessed of the faculty of writing in an eminent degree. To be happy in such an undertaking, requires a drawing to it, as if a compulsion. Boswell was prompted to write of Johnson not for literary fame nor from outward motive, but because he was so seized with his subject, that he could scarcely help writing.

On the other hand, it is not every life that is worth the writing, even though that life may have been in high position, or blessed with successful achievement, simply because it is so like other lives. A sketch of one with names, dates and incidents changed to suit each case, might as readily serve for thousands. It is a unique life, peculiar life, when directed in proper channels, of which the world needs to be informed.

Just such a life we believe this one to be of which we propose to write. The life had its beginning in a remote region of North Alabama: a region which had little of fertility or situation to attract to it the inventions and the blunders of the world outside, but which was left to pursue its plodding and healthful way. The schools were of the same character, and here our friend learned the rudiments of education.

His father was a plain, unlettered man, successfully keeping up his own limited business on the farm, little thinking or caring for the world outside. He was a quiet, retiring man, not communicative, not confidential with his children, to the regret and disadvantage of his little son.

His mother was a gentle Christian woman, who revered her husband, loved her children, and was "a keeper at home." Such a woman as to his dying day, filled the breast of her son with an admiration little less than romantic. He wrote her obituary, and the flowers which he laid upon her grave were redolent of an enthusiastic affection, as well as of gratitude for the inspiring touch of her pure spirit upon his life.

When the Confederate war began he was too young to enlist, but every month that passed, in his ardent estimation, added inches to his stature until, at last, his parents influenced by his importunity, rather than by their judgment, yielded a reluctant consent for him to join the army. As the slight, delicate stripling with the gray uniform hanging loosely upon his spare limbs, with the rifle and knapsack too heavy for his handling, left his parental roof, for the war region in Virginia, he seemed unpromising soldier timorously, but the outward seeming was by no means a fitting token of the sturdy heroism that dwelt within. It was not long before his faithful discharge of duty and his ignorance of fear gave him position over gray-bearded veterans. His claim to advancement was so potent, and his meeting of obligation so satisfactory, that no one questioned his promotion. During a fierce engagement he saw men faltering and even ignominiously fleeing and wondered even in the midst of the frightful carnage, surprised, not so much at the want of courage, as at the want of faithfulness: the thought of being recreant to duty never entered his mind.

Towards the close of the war it was decided to let the members of the various companies draw for a home furlough; his heart beat high with the hope of drawing the coveted prize. Sure enough, he drew it, and with it, came the prospect of relief from the hardships and dangers of war for a season, of the fascinating travel homeward, of the embrace of loved ones and of the enjoyment of boyhood haunts. To forego so privileged an experience would show nobility of spirit indeed. Yet the stripling soldier was equal to it. In his company was a neighbor of his father, a man of family, who had not been at home during the war, and to whom the failure to draw the prize was a sore disappointment. The keen eye and discerning heart of the fortunate youth took all this in and he said to the disappointed man, "Here, you have a wife and children at home, I cheerfully give up my furlough to you."

The war over, he formed within him a thirst for knowledge. His father counseled more practical pursuits, but he performed this nobility of learning to the ease and plenty, which would follow thrift. He made his way to the Southern University, at Greensboro, Alabama, and enlisted to compass the entire course of study. Of Greek he was wholly ignorant. The discerning professor allowed him to join the first college class, relying upon the earnest assurance that he would catch up. He began by mastering one word of the recitation: if a noun, it was declined until all its case endings were familiar; if a verb, its derivation, its root, its augment, its mood and tense, were made so thoroughly familiar, as ever afterwards when he met that word, all its accidents were at his tongue's end. Then he essayed a line a day; very soon the whole recitation was compassed, and he was abreast of the foremost class.

His entire college course was accomplished under the greatest difficulties. His expenses were reduced to the minimum, and met almost entirely by his own exertion. He was the originator of the mess system, by which so many worthy, poor young men secured an education. The art of cooking as well as the solution of problems claimed successful attention: the perplexing mysteries of economy were struggled over in close connection with chemical affinities and philosophical differentials. In due course of time he bore off the degree of master of arts as a distinguished graduate. Search the world over and it would be difficult to find a degree that indexed as much as this one did. To achieve it, brain and body, ingenuity and religion, heroism and heart sinkings, struggles against poverty and disease, all combined, and were taxed to their utmost capacity. To him belonged all the credit: beginning with the conception of idea, lofty indeed from his humble and unlettered surroundings, continuing through every difficult and honest struggle, until on commencement day, the acknowledged champion of his class, he gathered his laurels about him with modesty, yet with the quiet assurance of having legitimately won them. Eager to learn he naturally adopted teaching as his life-work. He taught in the pulpit as well as in the lecture room. His sermons, not remarkable for eloquence or rhetoric, were full of instruction from beginning to end. The mind of the hearer was informed and the soul was fed. His information was so thorough and his knowledge so exact, that imparting to others seemed natural and easy. His readings had been confined almost altogether to the text books; he had little familiarity with light literature, either because he had had no time for it or because his taste turned not in that direction. Hence, in his addresses and sermons, was plainly observable an absence of poetic figure or literary rhythm. Precision, clearness and grammatical finish were the chief characteristics of his efforts. He was most singularly free from inaccuracies of language. Those who heard him often agreed that even in the midst of impassioned discourse, it was the rarest occurrence to hear from him the slightest violation of the proprieties of language. So familiar had he made himself with all the idioms and niceties of expression, that his tongue formed itself to accuracy as if from first principles.

He filled every position to which he was called, acceptably. He was popular as pastor and preacher upon the charges to which he was appointed by the Conference. His parishioners regarded themselves as fortunate in having as their spiritual adviser, one so ready to enter into sympathetic communion with them, so judicious in counsel, and so able as an expositor of the life giving word. Teaching seemed to be his natural employment. As tutor and principal of the preparatory department of the Southern University, he proved himself superior to all his predecessors. In the management of that difficult place. His inexperience, and his former association as a fellow student with his pupils rather suggested undue familiarity at first, but it required only a few collisions with his calm, but unyielding spirit, to convince them that it was his right to rule and their privilege to obey. He conducted a high school in his native village, constituting an era in its educational history. The petty wrangles between teacher and pupils, and between patrons and teachers, which were regarded as a necessary adjunct, altogether disappeared, leaving one mind, strict without austerity and resolute without arrogance, to dominate the whole with authority unquestioned.

Elected to a professorship, and afterwards to the presidency of Centenary College, he from the very first cast his lot with the fortunes of the struggling institution, and labored, body, mind and soul, for its establishment. He seemed not to regard the self-donating experiences of the situation, but toiled on as faithfully and cheerfully as if the meager salary was an ample remuneration for his splendid talents. Though he filled the position of president but two and a half sessions, yet the air of thrift which was everywhere apparent plainly indicated that there was a clear head and a managing hand at the helm. His influence is so indelibly stamped upon the history of the college as to continue while its walls shall endure.

President Rush was a man of the most thorough practicality, he could get on anywhere. His example was a continuous illustration of the falsity of the old saying that learning and thrift cannot exist together. Though successful in managing his finances, his money was always subject to the claims of God and humanity.

Taken altogether, so well rounded and so symmetrical a character is rarely met with. He seemed possessed of perfect equipoise of spirit. From a most intimate association with him for six years, one, who was his confidential friend, testifies that he never saw him out of humor in the least, nor excited, nor off his guard. The mastery over himself was never lost.

His purity of character was most singularly pronounced. More than one, who had been in the habit of associating with him in the closest intimacy, asseverate that they never heard from him a word, or saw an act, which would sully the lips, or tarnish the spirit of a maiden.

His whole life was a struggle against disease. The body seemed too frail for the mind. The Damascus blade was constantly wearing away the scabbard. Often would the weary wheels slow down, and threaten to stop altogether, but regimen and force of will would soon again impart the usual speed along the pathway of labor and achievement. The mind had won many victories over the body and was only subjected to final defeat when disease attacked suddenly and heretofore that portion of the body where the mind held its seat. In the midst of usual health and in playful course with loved ones, excruciating pain tortured the cry, "My head! my head! how can I hear it?" and he almost immediately became unconscious. The light, which had so often before revealed relief was suddenly eclipsed; the communion of the heroic spirit was shut off, and the helpful body succumbed.

He was stricken on Sabbath morning while preparing for the pulpit; hence, he died with the harness on, with the sword in his hand and his mind animated with the thought of leading on the embattled hosts.

Blessed death for the Christian warrior; just to lay his armor off and rest in heaven!

Going to the Exposition and Being Snubbed.

MR. EDITOR: At one time since Conference, I thought before this, I would have visited the Crescent City, looked in on your editorial sanctum, and spent a Sabbath with the God serving people of New Orleans, as a parenthesis taking in the Cotton Centennial and World's Industrial Exposition. For years past I have had, from time to time, notice and admonition of a grand Exposition to take place in the near future, for which I am positively required to prepare specimens for exhibition. Many of these specimens need polishing and beautifying to render them worthy of a place there. As time is growing short with me I have felt it keenly incumbent upon me to hurry up my preparation for this grand Exposition, before waiting upon the scenes of one entirely worldly in its main features, and whose scene is laid upon so low a plain as that of New Orleans.

So many rainy Sundays followed each other in regular succession, keeping my congregations small and demoralized. I felt that I must see things working better before interesting myself in something foreign. As the bad weather commenced to break up, and the season to open, the lizards began to crawl out, I knew this to be a sign that my Sunday-schools would soon show themselves. I felt it important to remain on the ground, and take advantage of their first appearance in order to organize at the earliest date for the summer's drill. While waiting for this spring time movement, I read the papers and thought, it came slowly but at the last I was led to the conclusion that the managers of the Exposition most emphatically snubbed the religious sentiment of the entire country. I have known preachers when not appointed to preach at all, or when put up at unpopular hours, to feel themselves snubbed, and to resent it in plain words, or unmistakable action. I think I know how to appreciate the feelings of preachers, thus slighted, and know something of the force with which resentment will sometimes rise. On such occasions, when it seemed I was not allowed a fair chance after the adjournment of the Annual or District Conference or the close of the protracted or camp meeting, I have always gathered up my things and gone home, if I had nothing else to do. I have known professing Christians in social life promptly resent a snub, as they called it; and in truly religious enterprises, from some real or imaginary slight to fly off at a tangent, leaving the church interest, unprayed for, to take care of itself. Resentment in this line of things is not always consistent.

The various religious bodies voting on the request to the managers to close the Exposition Grounds on Sunday represented an American population of several millions, with wealth, character, learning and wisdom, ranking that commission or those managers many times over. Perhaps in less time than it has taken the reader to peruse these lines the decision was made. Indeed, I have no doubt the decision was made before any meeting was had on the subject, and all the delay was in formally disposing of it. It being neglected on preaching occasions, slighted in society, or left without being consulted on church matters or religious enterprises, as of no importance; has revealed an element of resentment among preachers and people to such real or concealed snubs. But of the millions of the Sabbath-reverencing population of our many States and Territories, I have heard of no body of Christians or individual parties offering a clean-cut resistance to this "wholesale snub, saving some words of remonstrance. Had the many thousands represented in the vote of respectful request to the managers to observe the sacredness of the Sabbath in the management of the Exposition effectually resented the snub with as much promptness as it was put upon them, months ago it would have been closed in bankruptcy and failure. They would not bear us in a request to observe the sanctity of the Sabbath. Have we not in effect joined them in a world-wide desertion?

As to my personal resistance, I went with the Sunday party—talked, counseled and voted with it. The principle had been imbibed from reading the sacred Scriptures and in communion with God in prayer. It was woven into my spiritual nature and was a part of myself. When the gates of the Exposition were opened on Sunday it struck me, and I keenly felt the blow. Do not say I am captious or resentful. Could my going give Louisiana a Sunday law or New Orleans one Sabbath in every seven days, without other condition, I would certainly go with all speed.

Methodism and Temperance.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of the sixteenth ultimo, Rev. J. D. Newsom makes some strictures on my article on "The Report on Temperance" which he had a right to do. But, in the exercise of this right, he should have quoted me correctly. I did not write, "Has always been abreast with every temperance movement, if not in advance." I wrote, "The Methodist Church has always been abreast of any in the temperance movement, if not in advance." There is quite a difference in my words and his quotation. The Methodist Church has been abreast with any church, and yet neither has the Methodist Church, nor any other church, measured up to the demands of the question, considering the great interests involved in the issue. The churches have not been so active and so aggressive as they might have been. It has seemed to me that this subject has been approached with some timidity by the churches in their legislative or assembled capacity. Individuals in the several churches have been very active and zealous in the temperance cause and have spent time and money in its promotion. Noble examples of heroism and devotion to the cause are not wanting among the preachers and the laymen of our church and of other churches, and did the occasion demand it, the spirit of the martyr would be equally manifest. It is not enough for the Methodist Church to keep abreast with any church or any movement in the temperance cause, but with her aggressive spirit she should lead the way, bearing aloft the temperance banner. My "criticisms" had reference to the temperance of the churches in their representative capacity. I think they ought to have been more decided, and that demon, which is one of the most efficient agents of Satan, might have been opposed with more aggressive action.

Bro. Newsom again writes, "No brother ever heard it advocated on any Conference floor, nor in any General Conference, nor has he seen it stated in any Methodist periodical (unless to be refuted), that the distillery was necessary and pardonable in order to consume the grain and create a market for the farmer." (Italics mine.) This is a sweeping assertion. It seems to imply that this position was assumed by me in my communication. It must have been made on general principles, for it is not probable that he has read all the Methodist periodicals that have been published.

No Methodist preacher would so far forget his position or his calling as to attempt such an argument as these words suggest, on a Conference floor or any where. The question before the church was not on the necessity of distilleries or that they should be pardoned for consuming the grain sold to them by members of the church, but whether the Methodist Church should encourage the general rule in reference to spirituous liquors so as to insert manufacture and sale with drinking. This would have excluded some, probably many, from the church who could not be reached under the then existing rule. The reason for the proposed amendment was that members of the church could not be tried and expelled for the manufacture or the sale of intoxicating liquors under the rule. The distiller or dealer in spirituous liquors can now be reached since the General Conference has added Chapter V to the Discipline, which defines the mode of procedure. I wrote, "If I mistake not, one argument was that the large grain producers would lose a market for their products." This was upon the supposition that members of the church, should the amendment be adopted, would not be permitted to sell their grain to be manufactured into intoxicating liquors. Such an idea was presented in a Methodist periodical. I remember distinctly having read an article in the Nashville Advocate containing the suggestion in order to strengthen opposition to the proposed amendment, and I was so much surprised it made an impression upon my mind. I can give the name of the writer, though I can not quote his words: The writer is a prominent minister and exerts a wide influence among his hearers. Many things are said and written in a heated discussion which would not be said or written in calmer moments. I think the statistical vote on the amendment by the Conference would show a larger majority against it in the grain growing regions than in other sections which would indicate that this idea had its influence in deciding the question. I sought information on this point; but, strange to say, no official report of the vote of the Conference appears on the journals of the General Conference. I hope the time has not come when a brother has denied this right to "criticism" the laws and the law makers in the church. When that time arrives we may consider ourselves on the road to Rome.

He further writes, "I think there are few Methodist preachers who would not lift both hands to their utmost height to hurl the whisky trade and manufacture from the face of the earth." I do not know what would be done now were the same amendment to the general rules proposed since the temperance cause has rapidly gained ground; but there was a time when they had a chance "to hurl" it from the church and it was not done, not a sufficient number of "hands" was then raised or votes cast to banish it from the Methodist Church. But as to specifications. There are specifications in the general rules and have always been there since the rules were made. The terms, "buying or selling goods that have not paid the duty," "singing those songs or reading those books," "taking such diversions," "putting on gold or costly apparel," "fighting," "going to law," "drunkenness or drinking spirituous liquors," are quite specific. But nothing is said about making or dealing in intoxicating liquors, and the defect would have been remedied by the adoption of the proposed amendment. As that was lost, the General Conference did the next best thing, which is given in Ans. 3, Chap. V, of the Discipline. It was not necessary to name the articles bought or sold, of gold or apparel, the songs or books forbidden, the names of liquors or the names of diversions prohibited. The circus, the horse race, the dance and the skating rink, gambling, card-playing and other similar things can be reached under the term "diversions." No distiller, or dealer in intoxicating liquors, or the signer of a petition to establish a grog-shop could be reached under the rule; but now they can, and the efficiency of the Discipline depends upon its practical application. No one proposes to mention every sin that might be committed, but the rules should be so explicit as to comprehend them.

The moral sentiment of the church would doubtless sustain an action in the expulsion of a distiller, but the question was, Can such action stand a legal test under the general rule? There should be no vagueness in our rules, and the church should take advantage of every opportunity that may be presented to send a deadly thrust into the ranks of those who are dealing in the liquid fires, which blight, burn and devastate the fair fields of purity, morality and domestic happiness.

J. M. PUGH.
AMITE CITY, LA., May 15, 1885.

Report of Temperance Committee of Grenada District, North Mississippi Conference.

Your committee, to which was referred the subject of temperance, beg leave to report that it has made a very thorough investigation of the subject both among the pastors, as it appears to them from a moral and religious position, and among the business men as to its effect upon the financial condition of the country. The voice is unanimous as to the evils of intemperance, resting a mighty incubus on the whole land, not only, as it blights hope, destroys happiness and life; but also as it diverts money from its proper channels and causing such an incalculable waste of time and property that it becomes the first of the many causes of our poverty both religiously and temporally. The voice is just as unanimous however in testifying that the cause and fact of temperance is growing and strengthening through the district, and large sections are to be found protected by prohibitory laws. The good results of which are not to be seen simply in the improved religious and moral tone of such communities, but also in the improved financial condition of many who formerly spent their money for whisky and their time in idleness and drunkenness. The testimony of all classes supports us in saying that all our towns that have prohibitory laws are greatly profited thereby, and men slow of faith are seeing, appreciating and confessing the good.

We present the following resolutions for your adoption:

Resolved, That we will do all in our power to secure and maintain prohibitory laws throughout the district.

Resolved, That we regard the signing of "whisky petitions" by our members as a violation of the law and spirit of our church law.

Resolved, That the time is past (if ever it existed), when Christian people can support men for places of honor and trust who are in sympathy with the whisky traffic.

Paine Institute.

What is the Paine Institute? It is a school established by the authority of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the training of preachers and teachers in the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

Where is it located? In Augusta, Ga.

Who is in charge of it? Rev. Geo. Wm. Walker, of the South Carolina Conference, assisted by Rev. W. C. Davis, of the South Georgia Conference, and Miss Sallie Davis.

How many pupils in the school? Between eighty and ninety.

What are the monthly expenses? About four hundred dollars.

How are the expenses met? By the voluntary contributions of our people.

Through whom are these funds collected? By the commissioners and members of the General Board from each Annual Conference.

Who is on the Board from your Conference?

Through whom is the money disbursed? Through the Local Board at Augusta, Ga.

Is the school in need of funds at this time? It is in very great need.

What is the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America? It embraces all the colored members of our church that refused to leave us after the war.

How many members are in the church? About one hundred and fifty-five thousand.

Are they in great need of help? They greatly need a more intelligent ministry.

To whom does this church naturally look for help? To the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Why? Because we set them up as church.

Why do we not send white ministers among them? Because we think it better to train preachers and teachers of their own race to preach to them and teach their children.

Please hand your contributions to the undersigned if he calls on you, or send to C. G. Goodrich, treasurer, Augusta, Ga.

W. C. DUNLAP, Commissioner.

From the Work.

STONE, ALA.

MR. EDITOR: I am home safe and sound from the Exposition. I called at the ADVOCATE office while in New Orleans and settled my account in full—whole amount only four dollars, and that since Conference. You were out when I called, hence the necessity of communicating my letter as I have else how will my numerous friends know that I have ever been to the "World's Exposition." I had a pleasant little chat with Bro. Jamieson in regard to our paper and its prospects in the future; and am of the opinion that if all of us would go to work new subscribers that our Conference organ would continue to hold its place in the journalistic world as a first-class religious paper (none better). In looking over my papers since my return one thought has possessed me, the Southern Methodists are a strange people. We are—to use the expression of Dr. Wheat—indeed a demonstration people. One preacher after another comes to the front to tell the brethren through the papers of a wonderful phenomenon in A, B, C, or D circuit station, either in a "storm" that fills the larder only partially by which the preacher, his wife and little ones are all made to rejoice, if only for a little while. We have no storms on Heber circuit, and am glad of it. I prefer steadily move in the right direction rather than fit and start; give me a gentle shower that comes just as it is needed, and just the quantity needed rather than a drought that lasts until the face of the earth is cracked by a scorching sun, and then followed by a storm of wind and a very little rain, am now in the middle of my third year on this circuit, and I can truly say "the lines have fallen to me in pleasant places," that I have "a good heritage." I have never wanted anything, my wife and my boys have all realized that we are surrounded by friends. No storm for three years, yet the gentle, pattering raindrops of love falling ever and anon round about the assurance that if we "do good and trust in the Lord," that we "shall dwell in the land and verily we shall be fed." I never expect to see a kinder people while I live. And our friends are not alone in the Methodist Church. At the close of my first year I went to Conference a splendid suit of clothes, a present from Pres. Terlan and Baptist brethren; and now I have a brand new suit that I have never worn ready for District Conference, a present from Mr. R. W. Powell, who is not a member of the church, but whose wife is one of the elect ladies of the Presbyterian Church. May God bless this people of this earthly Pray for us.

How Kate Went Back to School.

BY SYDNEY DAYRE.

"Miss Kate, will you close your book?" The words rang out in an unusual sharpness, bringing a tinge of red to Kate's cheeks and causing each member of the class to straighten up with a conscious look.

It was a stinging but well-merited rebuke. It is said that in the lowest of the lowest grades, from the lowest to the highest, it would be such a thing to be known in any other school. For example, Billy Blake, as he called himself, rolled over and over in his study little fingers a well-learned bit of paper on which were such parts of the addition-table as would leave of his obnoxious little brain the moment he was called on to recite.

While his neighbor, a grade higher, spent much more time in skillfully making up his finger-nails than in making points in multiplication, his would have been a faithful counting of them to memory.

There was a flush on many faces as they returned to their seats after Miss Vernon had finished speaking. Kate sat for a while in a maze of burning confusion, keenly realizing that she had fallen from her high standard to the level of those she had looked down upon. Then came a bitter sense of injustice in the fact of this, her first sin of the kind, being so heavily visited upon her. She did not excuse herself, but the same thing and worse had been done a thousand times, and she had been made the subject of their scorn.

"What now, Kate?" asked one. "Didn't Miss Vernon give it to us, though? But what are you taking your book for?"

"I'm coming to school any more," she said, quietly.

the alarm to the innocent ones within, who live hanging upon the events of the next few minutes. In one hour came to her half-distracted mind all she had ever heard about the danger of creating a sudden panic in case of fire.

She saw a man coming towards her and sprang to his side.

"Listen!—but, don't make a sound. The school-house is on fire—go and turn in the alarm. Keep quiet."

Then with one word of prayer that she might be guided and helped in doing the right thing, she rushed into the hall, well knowing she might never leave it alive. Three rooms away on the large hall of the first floor, each one well filled by the young children of the school. Quickly darting in she whispered the one dread word in the ears of the teachers. There would be sure of getting out—it was those above who were in danger, and as her trembling feet bore her up she put a strong control on voice and action.

So quietly, although swiftly, she moved into the second-story room, that only her white face carried a suggestion of alarm. Already the lower hall was filled with little ones, in orderly retreat, and she could hear the sharply-cut words of dismissal and the stir of many feet, as she again turned her steps upward—upward!

She never could remember how she mounted that last staircase. Every thought and feeling was lost in the effort to reach the room above, and reaching it, to force herself not to shriek aloud her dreadful message. In it were the members of her own class, the friends in whose midst she had studied through all her happy years of school life. She had come back either to save them or die with them.

Her step, as she opened the door, was as quiet as if she had returned to take her place among them. A little murmur of surprise and pleasure accompanied the smiles which greeted her. At the teacher's desk she spoke a few words in a low voice.

"Kate—Kate—go down yourself before I give the word," said Miss Vernon, beseechingly, as a pallor spread over her face.

But Kate went and took her own old place near the back of the room. Smoke was creeping up the hall as the door was thrown open, and it was impossible to prevent the truth from being at least suspected. Firmest word and action were necessary in order to avert the dire danger of a panic. Miss Vernon took her usual place at the door, and more than one pupil carried away on her arm marks left by the desperate grasp of her hand.

With strenuous efforts a semblance of order was restored and the tramp-tramp of feet on the stairs was all that was heard. The little ones were all out, and the occupants of the second-story room—crawling to the door as Miss Vernon seized Kate's hand in a strong clasp and the two came last of all to the top of the long stairs.

After a moment's rest, they could not see the floor upon which they stood for the blinding suffocating smoke which rose thick about them. In her over-wrought fancy Kate felt the steps leading and setting beneath her weight, and imagined a burning hand reaching out to clutch her from behind, as, stumbling and groping and grasping they passed on and on, slowly setting one foot before the other on those seemingly never-ending stairs.

Down below, the rattlings of the porch outside, and then the porch itself had been torn away and strong arms seized the children as they quivered the blessed air, and passed on, slowly setting one foot before the other on those seemingly never-ending stairs.

Down below, the rattlings of the porch outside, and then the porch itself had been torn away and strong arms seized the children as they quivered the blessed air, and passed on, slowly setting one foot before the other on those seemingly never-ending stairs.

"Where's Kate March?" "I don't know." "Where is she any way?" "I don't know that, either."

Many such inquiries were made as the summer wore on. After a serious illness Kate had been taken away for treatment for a severe injury to one of her feet, and her long absence from school had arisen from the ashes of the old one, so unique in its way of shaping that no people from out of town stopped to look curiously at it, very often concluding with an emphatic: "No wonder!"

For it was a solid structure of only one story. When the question of its building came before the board, each member thereof had been so strongly instructed by fathers and mothers to the effect that no long flights of stairs should again separate between the children and safety of life and their children, that the old death-trap model was abandoned.

The morning of the first day of school opened bright, and while a few ready-made, snuffed tapers in the hall drew light, snuffed tapers in the hall drew light, snuffed tapers in the hall drew light.

For only one moment, as every eye stared at her, discipline prevailed. Then, with a rush, many feet and a hum of many voices she was as quickly surrounded.

"Oh, Kate—have you come back to us?" "Kate, Kate, do you remember? You said you never would come back to us in the old hall, but you did, you darling!—when we needed you!"

And Miss Vernon kissed the slender crutch which had fallen, as many arms were stretched out in loving, supporting embrace, whispering:

"Oh, Kate! If I were you I should be prouder of this than if I were a king's scepter."—The Standard.

Methodism and Modern Theology.

BY J. C. W. COXE, D. D.

Methodism originated as an experience. It was a protest against a dead orthodoxy. It was a protest against a dead orthodoxy. It was a protest against a dead orthodoxy.

There is an intimate relation between creed and character. The logic of life demands that the expression of life be always dogmatic. Life demands a foundation. A real religious experience is always a rational experience. A good theory will not insure a correct life, but as it wrought upright life will insure that which is better than theory—a reason for its life.

Methodism speedily formulated a creed and announced a theology. Both were plain, practical, Pauline. The points were few and easily understood. Meditating between a lax Socinianism on the one hand, and a rigid Calvinism on the other, she gave the world the theology of the common sense. The type of her thought was Arminian; her method was Baconian; her expression was Wesleyan. She translated theology from the domain of fatalism to that of freedom; from the realm of theory to that of experience; from the unknown to the known; from the abstract to the concrete; from the speculative to the practical; from the ideal to the real.

Methodism has been the grand evangelistic agency of the century. She has kindled revival fires in every land. Her converts have been multiplied by thousands with every year. Not all of this fruit has been garnered by her busy workers. Besides their weighty sheaves there has been much scattered grain which other hands have gathered.

The planting of the grapes of Ephraim has been to many better than the vineyard. The harvesters who have sought out the Communionists were vain to estimate. In many localities they form the majority in the churches. The first-fruits of Methodism: toil and prayer and faith and teaching rarely forget the alms where they found them. They carry an experience with them to the new home; they carry the seed-truths of Methodism; they are not fatalists, but freedomists; they know what conversion means; they have the witness of the Spirit; and not a few carry away the sacred glow of perfect love.

These three factors have been potent in modern church life and thought. They have humanized faith; they have emancipated intellect from bondage to tradition; they have enthroned the will as regal among the moral powers; they have emphasized the facts of consciousness; they have exalted God without debasing man; they have enabled man without debasing God; they have made a theology possible and actual. Methodism has vindicated divine justice by insisting on the universality of atonement. Her theology has swept the scales of human needs with the even hand of divine love. She has cherished an apostolic experience—preached an apostolic faith, cultivated an apostolic zeal—and with these signs has conquered. Her opening century offers and needs no new Gospel; the old is better. Her strength lies in the New Testament of the future.—New York Christian Advocate.

"What we learn with pleasure we never forget."—Alfred Mercier. The following is a case in point. "I paid out hundreds of dollars without receiving any benefit," says Mrs. Emily Rhoads, of McBride, Mich. "I had female complaints, especially 'dragging-down,' for over six years. Dr. R. V. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' did me more good than any medicine I ever took. I advise every sick lady to take it." And so do we. It never disappoints its patrons. Druggists sell it.

All her doctrines can be preached. She has no verba magis. Her creed runs readily into prayer and song. Her hymnal is a compact body of divinity, besides being one of the choicest and most complete collections of sacred poetry in the English tongue. Joseph Cook is reported as saying that "one of the surest proofs that a theology is sound is that it is preachable," and commends Methodism for the possession of such a faith; and when asked to define Arminianism he replied: "It is what Methodists believe and Prohyetians practice."

Methodist theology is modern theology. It is in harmony with the spirit of the age. It is conservative, yet progressive. It is dogmatic, yet flexible. It is faithful to the best that there was in the past, yet receptive in its attitude toward the future. It holds firmly by the great facts of human consciousness as attested by the Word of God, yet reverently waits for the clearer light which must yet break forth from that divine source. It is true to God and true to man; it is sternly doctrinaire as regards doctrine, and as sternly democratic as regards duty. It proclaims the universality of sin and of atonement; it parallels the sweep of depravity and of redemption; it affirms equally the personal consciousness of guilt and the pardon; it discloses the darkness and doom of hell as faithfully and fearlessly as it reveals the glory of heaven. Its spirit is love, but it is a love which holds the even scales of justice and carries a sword as well as a crown.

Methodism has revolutionized theology. The types prevailed before her advent—the Calvinistic and the Socinian. The one exalted God and debased man. The other exalted man and debased God. The one made God an inflexible tyrant and man a hero; the other made man a petty deity and God a hero. The systems were once dominant factors of religious thought, but they were in the end overthrown by a wrathful deity, or, if you prefer, by a wrathful deity, or, if you prefer, by a wrathful deity.

Both systems have lost their power. Calvinism is effete. It lingers in books, but is no longer heard in pulpits. It has proved "a refractory theology." An elective system to the few and a detective system to the many? It is not a fact; not as a doctrine, but as a life. To Luther's re-discovered doctrine of justification by faith she joined the Witness of the Spirit and the possibility of perfect love, and in this triple armor went forth to conquer. She had no organization, no formal creed, no human plans for independent existence. The beginning was simply a spiritual force. It was a strange warfare of human hearts, which began in an obscure chapel in Aldersgate Street, while one was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans.

That Methodism has been largely instrumental in effecting these results almost goes for the saying. Her theology is a via media between these mutually destructive systems. She has modified religious teaching in two particulars: (1) in representing truth in new aspects, (2) in presenting it with new power. She has relied on God. She has preached "in demonstration of the Spirit." She has confidently looked for signs following, and has not been disappointed. She has aimed at conviction. She has secured the "ear position." She has heard the cry for pardon. She has gathered fruits unto holiness. Her teachings have been spirit and life. A century and a half ago there was not a Methodist in the world; to-day there are above 5,000,000 on earth, and doubtless double that number in heaven.

This life-giving has leavened other masses than those gathered within its own fold. The old theology has been affected by Methodism in three ways:

1. By its controversial writings. Both in England and America the only Methodists had "voiced earnestly for the faith." Their teaching was denounced as dangerous heresy. They were accounted as enemies of the truth. The people were warned against harboring schismatics. This assailed, they quickly carried the war into Africa. The necessities of the times developed polemics. Skilled writers arose to vindicate the new faith as that of the apostolic church. The press reinforced the pulpit. The keen dialectics of Wesley, Fletcher, and Watson—of Fisk and Bangs and Emory—have never been answered or even equaled. Theology's masterly vindication of the freedom of the will is an unassailable bar of Arminian faith.

2. Methodism has been the grand evangelistic agency of the century. She has kindled revival fires in every land. Her converts have been multiplied by thousands with every year. Not all of this fruit has been garnered by her busy workers. Besides their weighty sheaves there has been much scattered grain which other hands have gathered.

The planting of the grapes of Ephraim has been to many better than the vineyard. The harvesters who have sought out the Communionists were vain to estimate. They carry an experience with them to the new home; they carry the seed-truths of Methodism; they are not fatalists, but freedomists; they know what conversion means; they have the witness of the Spirit; and not a few carry away the sacred glow of perfect love.

These three factors have been potent in modern church life and thought. They have humanized faith; they have emancipated intellect from bondage to tradition; they have enthroned the will as regal among the moral powers; they have emphasized the facts of consciousness; they have exalted God without debasing man; they have enabled man without debasing God; they have made a theology possible and actual. Methodism has vindicated divine justice by insisting on the universality of atonement. Her theology has swept the scales of human needs with the even hand of divine love. She has cherished an apostolic experience—preached an apostolic faith, cultivated an apostolic zeal—and with these signs has conquered. Her opening century offers and needs no new Gospel; the old is better. Her strength lies in the New Testament of the future.—New York Christian Advocate.

"What we learn with pleasure we never forget."—Alfred Mercier. The following is a case in point. "I paid out hundreds of dollars without receiving any benefit," says Mrs. Emily Rhoads, of McBride, Mich. "I had female complaints, especially 'dragging-down,' for over six years. Dr. R. V. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' did me more good than any medicine I ever took. I advise every sick lady to take it." And so do we. It never disappoints its patrons. Druggists sell it.

All her doctrines can be preached. She has no verba magis. Her creed runs readily into prayer and song. Her hymnal is a compact body of divinity, besides being one of the choicest and most complete collections of sacred poetry in the English tongue. Joseph Cook is reported as saying that "one of the surest proofs that a theology is sound is that it is preachable," and commends Methodism for the possession of such a faith; and when asked to define Arminianism he replied: "It is what Methodists believe and Prohyetians practice."

Methodist theology is modern theology. It is in harmony with the spirit of the age. It is conservative, yet progressive. It is dogmatic, yet flexible. It is faithful to the best that there was in the past, yet receptive in its attitude toward the future. It holds firmly by the great facts of human consciousness as attested by the Word of God, yet reverently waits for the clearer light which must yet break forth from that divine source. It is true to God and true to man; it is sternly doctrinaire as regards doctrine, and as sternly democratic as regards duty. It proclaims the universality of sin and of atonement; it parallels the sweep of depravity and of redemption; it affirms equally the personal consciousness of guilt and the pardon; it discloses the darkness and doom of hell as faithfully and fearlessly as it reveals the glory of heaven. Its spirit is love, but it is a love which holds the even scales of justice and carries a sword as well as a crown.

THURSDAY, MAY 28, 1885.

A memorial tribute to Rev. Joshua T. Heard by the editor, will appear in our next issue.

The meetings of Rev. Sam Jones at Nashville continue with unabated interest. There is no falling off in attendance and the spiritual power seems to augment with each service. On Monday night four hundred persons were converted, including some of the prominent men in Nashville. The aggregate results thus far have not been published. The number will probably reach two thousand.

At Clarendon, Ark., on the 22 inst., a murderer met the extreme penalty of the law on the gallows' scaffold. He was the last of four brothers, all of whom had died on the scaffold, except one who was killed with his father while resisting arrest. To the vast crowd the doomed man spoke, acknowledging his guilt, and the justice of his sentence. Addressing the young, he said: "If you are careful about your associates and keep in good company, you will never have to meet death as I am meeting it. I can say that my death is traceable to that. My associations all my life were bad." More solemn are these than any ordinary words of warning. In the immediate presence of the king of terrors, the condemned man made this appeal. Parents should diligently heed such counsel. Children can not be trusted to select their friendships. Out of their associations are evolved their destinies.

Under the title of "Prayer Answered" the Times-Democrat of the 23 inst., published a letter from a man at Greensburg, Ky., who had drawn one-fifth of the capital prize in the Louisiana Lottery. The man asserts that "Providence ordained" he should invest in that ticket and that his winnings were a direct answer to prayer. He says: "I made what we Catholics call a 'novena,' and I did not doubt but that it would come." The lottery is commended as a very worthy, respectable institution and the "goodness of God" recognized in the turn of the wheel. All of which indicates the debauching influence of this gambling machine. And a great metropolitan journal advertizes and commends the iniquity, by publishing such communications without a word of comment. We hope our friends in all the country parishes will attend the primaries and see to it that legislators are selected who have the conscience and courage to disown this king of Louisiana politics.

On Saturday last at his home in Paris, Victor Hugo, the great French poet, novelist and statesman died at the age of eighty-three. For days before he ceased to breathe, the streets near his residence were crowded day and night with admiring Parisians, anxiously awaiting the latest bulletin from his sick chamber. He had a State funeral and all France mourned his loss. As a poet and novelist he ranks among the greatest his country ever produced. His works had an immense circulation and were translated into well nigh all the languages of civilized nations. As a statesman, he was rather sentimental, and lacked the sturdy strength of a great leader. He was a believer in God, but not a Christian, and in his last hours the proffered ministrations of the Archbishop of Paris were refused by his family.

The past has been a week of ecclesiastical gatherings, especially with our Presbyterian brethren. The Northern General Assembly met at Cincinnati, O., and the Southern Assembly at Houston, Tex. Both were largely attended and the proceedings were of unusual interest. This year fraternal relations were conducted by telegram and letter, rather than by personal messengers. On the 23d inst., the Northern Assembly, through its moderator, telegraphed as follows:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in the United States of America, in session at Cincinnati, O., send its most fraternal greetings in the Lord. May your deliberations be under the Divine guidance, and may the spirit be abundantly poured out upon you, all your ministers, elders and people. Eph. vi. 23, 24.

To which the Houston brethren responded in words no less cordial and kind:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States in session at Houston, Texas, hereby reciprocates the fraternal greetings conveyed in your telegram, and mails you a letter to-day more fully expressing our views.

The Centennial of Temperance Reform.

The twentieth anniversary of the National Temperance Society was celebrated in New York, May 12. The annual report of the secretary was altogether the most cheering he has ever been able to present. More temperance literature has been circulated than in any previous year, and the work of organization prosecuted with more system and missionary zeal. Among the colored people of the South especially, much had been done in the way of tract distribution. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Cuyler, Rev. C. H. Mead and others, and the enthusiasm was intense. The feature of the occasion however, was the address by Dr. Daniel Dorchester on "The Centennial of Temperance Reform in America." He is the great statistician of the age and has given to this subject years of patient investigation.

In selecting the year 1785 as a period from which to date the history of temperance reform, we are not to suppose that there were no advocates of the cause before that time. The earnest words of John Wesley, delivered to many eager congregations and incorporated into the "General Rules" of the United Societies, the sage counsel of Benjamin Franklin, the solemn warnings of John Adams and others, are not forgotten or depreciated. But 1785 was selected as the initial period of systematic, organized effort to arrest the growing evil of intemperance. In that year Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, published an essay on the uses and effects of alcohol. It was an able, scientific discussion, starting in statement and logical in conclusions, and had a wide circulation. It arrested the attention of the wine drinking clergy and awoke the slumbering pulpits of the land. Dr. Rush visited in person several of the great ecclesiastical bodies and urged the importance of aggressive organized action. In 1808 he visited the Methodist Conference and addressed that venerable body. About the same time he attended a Presbyterian General Assembly and presented the members with a thousand copies of his essay. Dr. Lyman Beecher read it and began the preparation of his temperance sermons, that thrilled all New England with their power. In 1808 a temperance society was organized in Saratoga by a leading lawyer of that place. In 1813 the Massachusetts society for the suppression of intemperance was organized in Boston under the leadership of Dr. Justin Edwards and others. After these followed kindred organizations all over the country, varying in methods of work, but all aiming at the triumph of gospel temperance. These efforts were directed mostly to the reclamation of the inebriate, and to shielding the young by means of total abstinence pledges. And though much ridiculed the good accomplished is beyond human computation. We have no reason to be ashamed of the history those organizations have written. Out of them have sprung the mighty movement that is now making the saints rejoice and politicians tremble.

Of recent years the temperance cause has assumed a new phase. While abating nothing of zeal and desire to save the drunkard and reform the drinking habits of society, the friends of reform are invoking the strong protecting arm of civil power. They are demanding that the voice of the people shall be crystallized into statutory and constitutional law. Their motto is, "moral suasion for the drinker and legal suasion for the seller." They will reason with one, and restrain the other. It is now proposed to celebrate the Centennial of this reform in America, and Sunday, September 20, has been selected for the delivery of commemorative sermons in all the churches. The succeeding week will be given to the celebrations of societies throughout the land. The benedictions to be derived from such a national commemoration are many and various, and we hope every Methodist pulpit will speak out in no uncertain sound. The future is bright with hope. Dr. Dorchester, we trust was not too sanguine when he closed his address with these cheering words: "I believe the child is already born, who will live to see the last drop of legalized rum sold in this country."

Among resolutions adopted by the National Temperance Society, we reproduce the following:

1. Resolved, That in this centennial year of the temperance reform, we heartily congratulate the friends of temperance throughout the land upon the many and important victories already won, and upon the widespread and rapidly-increasing popular interest in the cause of total abstinence, and for the entire prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic beverages.

2. Resolved, That we earnestly urge all temperance organizations throughout our own country and in other lands to unite in the month of September next in celebrations, to fitly commemorate the completion of the first century of the temperance reform, as inaugurated by the pioneer labors, and the historic essay by Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, "An Inquiry into the Effects of Ardent Spirits upon the Human Body and Mind," first published in 1785.

3. That we recommend that centennial tokens of appropriate temperance literature be distributed during the year 1885 to every household in the land as a centennial temperance seed-sowing; and that we solicit all churches, temperance organizations, and communities generally to make 'centennial offerings' for the circulation of a temperance literature, especially among the freedmen.

"Gelatinous, Creelless" Christianity.

These are terms used by Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson, of Mississippi, in characterizing Christianity outside of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The annual Council of his diocese has recently been in session at Natchez, and the words quoted were used in his address to that body. Some things in his exhortation to the clergy and laity are worthy of commendation, while others are offensive and repellent. That no injustice may be done the Rt. Rev. gentleman his own published language is reproduced, though we are assured that the types have softened and shaded the harshness and ugliness of oral discourses. He says:

Our people need instruction in the foundations of the Catholic faith. The "popular Christianity," as it is called, about us has no vertebrae. It is usually a quivering, gelatinous mass, without form or void. Let me tell you there are thousands in our communities dissatisfied and homeless because they take this creelless, vertebraless, sentimental wordiness for Christianity. Never, I believe, were men more loudly called to preach doctrine and duty and Christianity as an organization and a law.

While I am far from advising an offensive or repellent attitude, I believe our sole justification for being here at all is that we can show a more excellent way, and I heartily believe in a firm, kindly and positive setting forth in teaching and preaching of the reasons why we are Churchmen. Those rather aggressive words to be used by a dignified prelate of the Church, and especially as they contain more rhetoric than reason—more thins than good teaching. In the same address the Bishop inveighed vigorously against "rhetorical and gesticulatory pyrotechnics," and urged the clergy to "talk" more and "preach" less. But behold he out-herods Herod in rampant rhetoric and garrulous gyrations. Just look at his string of descriptive "no vertebrae," "a quivering gelatinous mass," "without form and void," "creelless," "dullness," "sentimental wordiness." The Bishop claims to have good taste, and says he is not "unacquainted with literary values and literary criticism," but we submit that the mixed figures and other sins against good rhetoric in the above are not unworthy of the typical perspirational, piney-woods' stump orator of forty years ago. A "gelatinous mass" is not supposed to have much intelligence or power of speech; but the Bishop says it is afflicted with "sentimental wordiness." A wordy non-vertebrate would be a curiosity in any museum of natural history, and its discoverer deserves immortal fame. But how could we expect such a creature of quivering gelatin—or, in the language of Sir John Falstaff, "a man of continual dissolution and thaw"—to be other than "creelless" and "dullness?" And, if so, why should it be "dissatisfied and homeless?"

But, seriously, we think the Bishop might have specified in what respects other religions than the Episcopalians are gelatinous, non-vertebrate and dullness. By a sort of common parlance, the word "vertebrae" represents solidity and decision of character. Fixedness of purpose indicates a strong spinal column. Something of this kind must have been intended by the terms. Applied to an ecclesiastical and theological subject, they doubtless had a moral and spiritual significance. If such was his meaning, we can readily ascertain the truth or the falsity of the characterization.

And, first, it is grossly untrue as to a consensus of doctrine. Speaking for Methodism, we declare that her doctrinal integrity has never been disturbed. So clear and consistent has been her creed that no schism in her body has ever occurred. Separations and independent organizations have resulted only from differences in ecclesiastical polity and administration. But, on the other hand, what shall we say of the Protestant Episcopal Church? Its thirty-nine articles are sufficiently gelatinous and flexible to embrace almost every shade of theological belief. Calvinism, Arminianism and baptism regeneration are taught as though they were in perfect logical and scriptural accord.

This is untrue as to their convictions of duty. The leaders of moral reform in all communities are among these people so ungraciously caricatured. When issues are sharply defined involving the moral well-being of the land and heroism is required to defend the right, these "creelless, dullness" Christians are in the forefront of conflict. But how rarely is the voice of one of the "Bishops or other clergy" of the Episcopal Church ever heard at such a time? However well grounded in the "Catholic faith," they haven't spinal columns strong enough to join in the struggle. Who ever heard one of these good brethren delivering a temperance address or preaching a temperance sermon, save in an apologetic way? Except in one or two instances, we have not seen among them much zeal in defense of the integrity and purity of our Sabbath. In all such exigencies they have no vertebrae—they are "a quivering, gelatinous mass." Alas for public morals and the glory of our civilization if this "popular Christianity" was destroyed. There would be "a famine of God's word" and spiritual "cleanness of teeth" all over the great Commonwealth of Mississippi if the Bishop and his little handful of clergy were left alone to supply the people with the gospel. Who preaches a non-vertebrate religion? Who patronize the theatres? Who lead in the wild, giddy mazes of "the dance of death?" Who chaperone the young into all conceivable folly?

The answer to these questions will reveal the real disciples of "sentimental wordiness." The Bishop laments the fact that so few young men of the church are offering themselves for the ministry. And it is occasion for righteous concern. It involves the law of spiritual thrift and growth. The brethren may felicitate themselves upon winning here and there a proselyte—a disaffected preacher occasionally "applying for orders," but, in truth, it is a confession of weakness that is nigh unto death. When any church ceases or fails to bear propheta to the Lord, her barrenness becomes a reproach. The vigorous, healthful life of the church—"the Lamb's wife"—is measured by her spiritual maternity. When she has to rely upon the kidnapped children of other households to sustain the family name, there is need for the old Israelish prayer and humiliation.

The Bishop entered upon his episcopate under favorable auspices. His coming was loudly heralded and his welcome was most cordial. Assurances were given of his broad charity and Christian fraternity. Of his gifts in the pulpit and on the platform much was said. That he has developed into a High Churchman so aggressive and offensive we sincerely regret. There can be no satisfactory apology for the language quoted above. It is offensive to good taste and violative of true brotherly kindness. If we are in such gross error, we should be zealously exhorted in all long suffering and meekness. But the bigotry, imperial haughtiness and holier-than-thou spirit of his address is just cause of complaint. Words more offensive could not well be employed. And yet the Bishop will condescend to occupy the pulpits of these non-vertebrates. And, strange to say, some of the poor little weaklings are flattered with his patronizing attentions. We ask all such to look at the caricature of themselves sketched by the ecclesiastical Thomas Nast of the diocese of Mississippi.

Short Essays.

BY T. A. S. A.

"My tongue is the pen of a ready writer," says David. All people have tongues of the same sort, but not so carefully used. Many use tongue and pen alike in scribbling folly or sin over every clean surface they can find. What poems some write in children's hearts! The letter slitted in the growing beech belts the vast glirth of the forest monarch. What climaxes use some make of their tongues! They write so that few can decipher, and, as the foreman is so often out of the printer's office, the future must bear with the mistakes of the printer. But David's tongue translated for the spirit, he voiced the inspirations of the world's on-going to glory and the King's on-coming to dominion. When the heart's best wishes and deity's best plans synchronize in the utterance of a song, earth and heaven adapt and ratify its immortality.

Two angels sat in the tomb where Jesus lay—one at his head and the other at his feet. Life often conceals the guardianship which Heaven exercises over us; but in death we shall not wait it. How humble so ever our lot or service, still the angel will be near. Have we been strong, wise, worthy of all honor? The angel from the post near the head will be there. But if we have been poor, neglected, unheralded, still the guard at the foot will watch our sacred dust. Two angels! Death's thoughts and travels need guardianship as well as those of life. The spirit wanderings need guidance. So, too, the cares of life will be soothed by angels' restful touch, and the cool fannings of seraph wings are best to this hrines which the fevered feet have had by the way.

"Staying his time out" has come to be understood among many of our preachers as meaning four years. I have noticed the expression several times of late used in a way that seems to assert a right in an incumbent to hold at will during that term. The use of the expression indicates the drift of Methodist sentiment. I am not prepared to open the discussion; but I would advise preachers and people not to fall into a manner of speech. Manners of speech to the next generations will have the authority of law. If Methodists wish the law to be so construed, they evidently have the right so to do; but many points of utility and expediency, both grave and delicate, are involved in the question. Until the question is definitely settled I think a preacher ought to be considered as having "staid his time out" when he goes up to Conference at the end of the first year. If the Bishop sends him back, he may "stay his time out" again, and so for four years. But his "time" is one year.

The suffering Christian has this answer to the question, "Why do I suffer?"—viz: I am filling up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ. I am not a sinner myself. I am not even undergoing chastisement for any weakness, nor a test or training preparatory to some coming struggle; but still I suffer. Why? Because someone else will not be perfect, perhaps not saved at all, unless I suffer. It is an extremely low and narrow view to take of Christian trial and sorrow to confine it all to the sufferer. Some of the holiest have approximated Jesus in suffering almost in a vicarious capacity. Indeed, as we are perfected in grace our sorrows will be of this kind more and more until our keenest agonies will be birth-throes to the hopes of the world.

How rare a virtue is brotherly love! It is difficult to realize its weakly constitution in our own hearts. We find on examination that we have almost any other kind of love in larger quality and of superior quality. Friends with strong affections are numerous. Fathers, mothers, sons and daughters exemplify it far more frequently. Poor human nature wishes so much either to serve or patronize that equality is hardensome. One brother usurps the authority, the other abdicates his manhood. Both injure one another. One grows dictatorial, the other servile. The stronger rules over the weaker, to his own hurt. For pride like the fabled dragon that takes possession of the fountain of love, and he who sips of the water, must first pay homage to the monster.

"Let brotherly love continue." No admiration, no compliments can substitute it. When we all grow so great that we can only admire each other, the society of one another will be as unwelcome as July sunshine or January zephyrs. Humanity's brotherhood has through Christ abolished the distinctions of antiquity or the remote future. From Adam to the latest born, all are to be brothers. From each Christ renewed heart it must radiate to the humblest of the human race. This love when all-prevailing will bring wars to a perpetual end.

I notice that the Campbellites (or Christians as they call themselves) claim 4,000 churches and 700,000 members. That is an average of 175 members to each church. I claim nothing, profoundly metaphysical in this essay, except the effort at deglutition of the above statement. This I have essayed several times in vain.

It is believed by some that if the world did not revolve with more than half the speed it does, the Mississippi river would rise in the gulf of Mexico and set in lake Hansen. In that case St. Paul would take the place of New Orleans and would get the next Centennial Exposition. But there is a moral lesson, viz: Something besides gravitation moves the mighty river. So too something besides the mere via ponderis of the world's masses moves it and moves it to warmer and more luxuriant life.

The sixth reunion of the Christian Commission, the Sanitary Commission, and all the chaplains of the late war, Federal and Confederate, will be held at Old Orchard, Maine, June 26 to 30, 1885.

Dr. Marshall preached at Ocean Springs on Sunday last to a large congregation.

Bishop Wilson preached the commencement sermon at Vanderbilt University on Sunday last.

Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews will deliver the annual address at the Whitworth Female College commencement.

Rev. Dr. W. B. Pope, the great Methodist theologian and author, is too unwell to attend to any public duties. He is suffering from overwork.

Sunday last, May 24, was the sixty-seventh birthday of Queen Victoria. The event was celebrated here on Monday at the British consulate, and on the English ships by a loyal display of hunting.

Rev. Dr. Hardie Brown, of Birmingham, Ala., will preach the commencement sermon at East Mississippi Female College, June 14, and the annual address will be delivered by the Rev. Alonzo Mouk, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Rev. G. W. Bachman writes that the meeting at Kosciusko under the pastorate of Rev. J. A. Bowen, closed on Sunday night last, with eighty-five conversions and fifty-one accessions to our church. His letter will appear next week.

We are indebted to Mr. Briscoe Carter for a special invitation to the anniversary of Franklin Institute, Centenary College, June 2, and to Mr. Henry H. Ahrens for a similar compliment to attend the Union Literary Society the same day.

Rev. O. P. Thomas, of the North Texas Conference, and stationed at Kaufman, called to see us last week. He was for some years a valued member of the North Mississippi Conference, and still retains a strong affection for his old comrades.

We are under obligations to President Heaton for an invitation to attend The Commencement at Sullivan College, Rev. S. Halsey Weir, of this city, will preach the sermon on Sunday next, and deliver the annual literary address June 2.

Miss Sallie Viok Hill, daughter of Dr. S. V. D. Hill, of Macon, Ga., carried off the first honor at the University of Mississippi, and will receive the valedictory at the approaching commencement. She has completed the full university course for the degree of bachelor of arts.

Mr. N. K. Knox, the father of Mrs. Christian Keener, and for many years an honored citizen of Bayou Rouge, La., died at his home in this place on Monday morning last. He had been a great sufferer for many months, and his death was not unexpected. To the bereaved we extend sincere sympathy.

Some unknown friends have treated our distinguished neighbor Dr. Smith, of the South-Western Presbyterian, quite cleverly. They have sent him a certificate of deposit to his credit, of a "generous amount" in the Canal Bank. In this one brotherly-kindness was as worthily bestowed as it was handsomely done.

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, and Rev. W. C. Blackmer, Meridian, attended the preaching meeting on Monday morning. The both addressed the meeting to profit. Bro. Black left yesterday for Jackson, La., to deliver the annual address at Millwood Institute to-day, and to preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College on Sunday.

The Living Church, of Chicago—a paper published in the interest of the Protestant Episcopal Church, speaking of our Methodist Centennial, said: "The Methodists are helpful to the integrity of the Christian people in the country." When upon the New York Advocate preceded with facts and figures to refute the libel and "snobbish misrepresentation." How dense is the ignorance of some little upstart Churchmen!

The Rev. M. J. Cranmer, D. D., United States Minister at Bern, Switzerland, has just been called to the Chair of Systematic Theology at Boston University. Dr. Cranmer, like Dr. Philip Schaff, of New York, illustrates the advantage of a European parentage and an American education in combination. The past few years, under the appointment of President Garfield, he has served United States Minister to Switzerland. The four years previous, he had the honor of filling the office at the Court of Denmark. His wife, a sister of General Grant, said to be a most accomplished lady, every way worthy of her distinguished husband. As the same Union which now calls into her service the returning representative of the nation, has just had one of her royal lecturers selected and sent to England as Minister at the Court of St. James, the somewhat singular transposition or interchange of happy illustration of the serene

...of the republic of letters to all the revolutions of the political world. Our usually wide-awake cotemporary, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, announces the death of Rev. W. B. Lewis, at Crystal Springs, May 8. We met our valued friend and brother on the 21st inst., at the Copiah county prohibition convention, and he never looked more genial and vigorous. We trust many years will intervene before it will be said, "the day of his departure is at hand."

The Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly has been in session the past week at Bentonville, Ark. The subject of missions received prominent consideration. Increased attention will be given to Indian missions, the work in Japan and city missions in California. A special evangelist for the Pacific coast was appointed. One action of the Assembly is worthy of all praise—presbyteries and synods are forbidden to establish missionary churches in places already occupied by other denominations without consulting the Board of Missions.

Wesley Chapel, Natchez, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Sickness prevented an earlier account of the grand work of grace at Wesley Chapel last month. The Holy Spirit was with us, and penitents came to the altar from the first; but when Bro. H. D. Kimball came on the twenty-eighth, the hidden fire burst forth in living flames. Sinners groaned under deep conviction, while converts gave forth the old-time shout of victory. Many backsliders were reclaimed and the entire church was thrilled with new life. Eighty-two were happily converted to God—many of them hard cases—and sixty-one joined the church on profession of faith. Bro. Kimball is a Holy Ghost man, and preaches a genuine heart religion from a vivid personal experience. Bro. T. L. Mellen, the founder of Wesley Chapel, preached for us twice, and was greatly rejoiced at the glorious fruit of his first charge.

My pastorate here has been almost entirely bare so far. Eighty-eight have applied for membership and ninety-five have professed conversion since January 1. Our finances also are good, and the people are very liberal to their means. The Bishop's fund is paid, foreign missions overpaid, prebendal elder paid to date, and the pastor's salary is almost up. Our Sabbath-school is well organized, equipped and supplied with literature, and is progressing finely under the efficient superintendency of Bro. H. B. Davis. It has an actual attendance of 135, and is constantly growing. We thank God for the past, and press forward in faith for still greater blessings.

Paine Institute.

At the call of the Commissioner of Education and Agent of Paine Institute, a meeting of the trustees and friends of that institution was held in the room of the Book Agent at the publishing house, Nashville, at 7:30 P. M., May 7, 1885. There were present, of the Board of trustees, Bishops Granberry and Hargrave, and J. B. McFerrin, David Morton, W. W. Duncan, E. R. Hendrix, I. G. John, J. W. Lewis, S. H. Babcock, and C. B. Galloway, together with a number of other gentlemen, friends of the institution, resident and visiting in the city. On motion of Dr. McFerrin, Dr. I. G. John, of Texas, was called to the chair, and C. B. Galloway was elected secretary.

Commissioner Dunlap made a full and satisfactory report of his work in general, and of the condition and prospects of Paine Institute. The institution is well organized, and is doing good work, though embarrassed for lack of proper buildings. About 80 pupils are in attendance, all of whom are preparing for the pulpit and school-room.

Dr. McFerrin offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we heartily approve of the measures adopted by the Rev. W. C. Dunlap, Commissioner of Education and Agent of Paine Institute, to raise funds for its maintenance; and that we commend him and the cause he represents to our people as worthy of their confidence and large liberality.

Dr. Morton offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we recommend to the Board of Trustees of Paine Institute, at its approaching annual session, to increase the membership of the Board to one member for each Annual Conference; and that we request that the Board request each of its members to secure a sum not less than $100 from each Conference.

After full and free conference as to the interests of Paine Institute, the meeting adjourned.

Valuable Books Offered Cheap.

MR. EDITOR: I am authorized to offer for sale many valuable books, from the library of the late Dr. A. M. Barrington, at greatly reduced prices. Some of these books are as good as new, some are a little worn. Any of them can be had at half the catalogue price, and some perhaps for less than that. The following are a few of the books offered for sale: Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, Watson's Biblical Dictionary, Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, Burket's Notes on the New Testament, Barne's Notes on the Gospels, Watson's Institutes, Museum of Antiquity, Rollin's Ancient History, Neely's Discourses, Gaston's Collections, Marvin's Sermons, Penichon's Sermons, Lectures on the Lord's Prayer, History of England in nine volumes, Macaulay's History of England, and many others, too numerous to mention here. Any one desiring to procure books of this class would do well to correspond with me, or with Mrs. R. M. Barrington, of Crystal Springs, Miss. Persons wishing to make a valuable present to a minister, or to a parsonage library in the line of good books, would likewise confer a favor on the widow of the late Dr. Barrington, by procuring them from her. Any person desiring further information in regard to these books can address me at this place.

Last Note about "Wood Notes"

As some of my preacher friends have offered to procure subscriptions for "Wood Notes," I will say to all who may wish to aid me in this way, that they can have the books at wholesale rates—each single subscription being $1.50—the difference belonging to the person ordering the same.

Some lady friends have promised to mention "Wood Notes" when they meet the members of their missionary societies. Will they not all "do likewise?" The "difference" on amounts for "wholesale" orders can go into the "treasury" if they wish, thus fulfilling two "missions." As the first of July is rapidly approaching, please respond within the very limited time. Send names where the money is not forthcoming. 600 cash subscribers at once will insure the publication of "Wood Notes," as some have already responded.

Please state that the above volume containing both prose and verse as so many wish to know.

Commenting upon an article in this ADVOCATE on the lottery inquiry, the Monroe Bulletin makes these judicious observations. Let the agitation continue until the shameful outrage is driven from our borders:

"For our part we are in for continuing the fight. Not by chartering new companies and attempting to lessen the evil by first increasing it, but by wiping the whole disgrace from our constitution and statute book. We may be in error in our conclusions, but we have never yet heard an argument strong enough to convince us that wrong can be cured either by sitting down quietly under it, or attempting to right it with more wrong. It is our firm conviction that the people of Louisiana are strong enough and wise enough to abolish lotteries."

LIFE OF BISHOP THOMPSON. By his son, Rev. Edward Thompson. Cincinnati: Graham & Stone. Price, $1.25.

We have read this book with real relish. The classic grace of Bishop Thompson's pen has long charmed us, and we were glad to know the story of his life. His was a beautiful, transparent, symmetrical character. With his associates from beginning to end. As preacher, educator, college president, editor and Bishop, he adorned the history of American Methodism. The copious extracts from his own writings, and the many letters to the members of the church, add to the volume. Some things here and there, we would have modified, but they are unimportant.

The Quiver, for June, is on our table, with a rich and varied table of contents. Dr. Bevan contributes a paper on "Popular Preachers in Brooklyn," and Professor Roberts discusses "The Beloved Disciple." Theoretical stories, have a sustained interest, and all the articles are of superior merit. Fifteen cents monthly. $1.50 per year. Cassell & Co., 739 Broadway, New York.

Publisher's Department.

No fraudulent advertisements will knowingly be allowed in the ADVOCATE. If one ever appears it will be by accident.

In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Alden & Bros., 414 N. Pine St., Cincinnati, O., and 14 Nassau St., New York, making them our Special Publishers' Agents, and giving them the entire charge of the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

"Look here, this piece of meat don't eat me. It is from the back of the animal's neck," said a man to a German butcher, "My friend," all our beef and mutton is just of that kind. There is nothing but bones in the hind of our neck."

FOR THIRTY-SIX YEARS. Last Friday was the thirty-sixth anniversary of "Duninger's popular and progressive dry goods emporium." This firm was established in 1849, and has since been the progressive house of this city. Its constant aim has been to sell first-class goods cheaper than they are sold elsewhere; to have polite and attentive clerks who take great pleasure in displaying goods; and to give particular attention to the interest and comfort of their customers by advertising their prices with the rise and fall of the market, so much so that thousands of our ladies look to them as reference, which, combined with shrewd and sharp buyers in the East and hard work and business tact here, they have succeeded in bringing their house to the very front of Southern enterprise, and made it an ideal establishment. At the World's Great Fair, held here last winter, they were awarded the gold medal for ladies' and children's muslin underwear over all competitors, both foreign and domestic; and when one of our houses takes "first prize" over all the world, every citizen should be proud of the fact. Their country order business under the personal supervision of a member of the firm since 1849, and just as the ladies in the city wait for the appearance of "Duninger's styles" before purchasing, so do those living in the country. For that reason they have just issued a beautifully illustrated catalogue of novelties and styles, which every lady can procure by sending her address to Duninger's, 131 Canal street, New Orleans.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said a Tennessee lawyer, last week, "there were just thirty-six bugs in the drove. Please remember the fact—just three times as many as are in the jury box, gentlemen."

SANITARIUM, Riverdale, Cal. This dry climate cures. Nose, Throat, Lungs, full lungs, 50 p. route, cost free.

Doctors say drinking too much coffee makes bad heads. Telling the female of the house that her coffee is "gloating bad sleep" will also do it.

Among the endorsements of the New La. Remedy and Life Tonic, which came in last week, is one from Judge L. O. Bridwell, of Beauregard, Miss. He took them for a severe cold and loss of voice with pains and approaching pneumonia. The cure was perfect. He adds: "As a preventive and restorer of a diseased liver, it is unequalled." He took both mixed.

"Hairs are high this year," said a manured tramp he borrowed a pin with which to hold his coat-tail together.

Many influences combine to make the hair crisp, lustrous, thin and gray. The best dressing and restorative is Parker's Hair Balm.

"The way to sleep is to think of nothing," says a scientist. All an editor has to do is to ruminate over his bank account.

"What is an epistle?" asked a Sunday-school teacher of her class. "The wife of an apostle," replied the young hopeful.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone P. O., Pickens county, Ala., having so often read in the ADVOCATE of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having closed the sale for one of these lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $100, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein inspects all when he calls to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pleasure in showing, even if you do not desire to buy. He has the celebrated Mathushek, Behning, Mason & Hamlin and Hale pianos at very low prices and on the easiest terms. Old pianos repaired or taken in exchange for a new one. Good second-hand pianos as low as $50.

"Now your talk has the true ring," said the girl to her lover when he began to speak of a diamond ring.

CHANGER.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

Two burglars had ransacked the house and secured every portable thing of any value. While passing through the pantry one of them picked up a piece of cold meat and was about to eat it. "What, Pat?" said the other, warningly; "as yet forgot what day it is?" "Be jabbers," said Pat, dropping the meat, "it's Friday mornin'!"

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents to the fact that in making remittances to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE please keep this in remembrance.

They reproach an aged millionaire with his miserly practices. "Here you are, a wealthy man, and yet you put your ash barrel every day with your own hands to save a few miserable sou's." "You are right; it is hardly the thing for a man in my position to do. Hereafter I'll make my wife do it."

DR. MEIGS CASE'S SPINAL APPARATUS.

This apparatus applies to the treatment of Spinal Disease the principle of extension, already well established as a most efficient method for the cure of diseases of the joints. With this it combines those additional requirements in spinal cases: Relief from the weight of the head and shoulders (without causing the burden on some other part of the body); the straightening of the curves (by means of the traction exerted by the weight of the body itself); and opportunity for exercise without restraint under these favorable conditions.

The results of daily exercise in this apparatus quickly demonstrate its utility. The patient improves rapidly in strength and height; the muscles concerned in maintaining an erect position are developed and invigorated, and a few weeks will frequently show a greater gain than can possibly be reached by months of treatment with the restrictive appliances in general use. For price, directions for measurement and use, and other information in respect to this apparatus, apply to:

fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Revelation vii, 17.

I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you. John xiv, 18.

"Jesus is here and yonder."

While you are weeping for me,
I shall be gazing in wonder
There, where no sorrow can be.

You in the valley below me,
And I on the mountain of light;
Say, would my loved ones know me,
Bathed in my garment white?

With the race run before me,
I from life's fetters set free,
Behold the mansion of glory,
To King in his beauty to see.

For where the billows are raging;
I with the last warble gone;
You, where the conflict is raging;
And I, with the victory won.

And I, with the victory won,
You, alone still keep—
And all my tears wiped away—
You, in the midnight still weeping—
And I, in the glory of day.

Still do you hear the fainter?
Yet these are moments belong
To the Master, the Master,
To the Master, the Master, the Master.

"Jesus is here and yonder."

But, where you serve and you wait;
For, where death never can number,
Or spirit be desolate.

Remember, your bark he is steering,
While safe in the harbor I rest,
Till, the Lord of the glory appearing,
Shall gather his own to his breast.

Woman—Honor to Whom Honor.

A popular teacher of girls, and one who still follows his noble calling, giving the orator on a certain commencement occasion, chose "woman" as his theme, and thus introduced himself to his audience: "My subject may seem trite and familiar, but there is this redeeming feature about it that 'woman' is never tired being praised, and man never tires praising her."

What is woman's place in the church and in the world? This question, which concerns both woman herself and the Christian philanthropist, is coming rapidly to the foreground of earnest inquiry and is drawing practical solution in some of the movements of modern times.
The fact that woman is entering new wider fields of activity—pushing her way even into the learned profession—constitutes a marked feature of the times. We use the words "pushing her way" in no disparaging sense, but simply as expressive of the state of the case.
Woman enters these new positions not only uninvited, but in the face of something more than indifference on the part of the sterner sex.
She enters, and is making headway nevertheless.

The 525 female surgeons of 1870 increased to 2,473; the 7 lawyers of 1870, and the 60 clergymen to 165.
Do not undertake to settle the question of "woman's rights," nor to ride as to the propriety of her entering some of the "learned professions." But as to the propriety of her entering some other there can be no question. It is eminently fitting that she should enter the field of literature, as author and editor. And in the much-needed reformer, now coming on woman is working with great power, commendable zeal and effect. Prohibition is coming, and that, too, largely through the influence of woman. But it is as advocate of missions that woman is a sphere of action worthy of the highest possibilities of her refined and refined nature.

The question of woman's place is in a measure solved by considering the effect of the gospel on woman and what woman is doing for the world under the influence of the gospel.
Christianity both elevates and utilizes woman. Under the elevating influence of Christianity woman is no longer a drudge and a slave to the power and caprice of man. But she rises up to her true position in the social and religious world, and in return blesses the world by her sweet ministry as wife and sister and mother. "Last at the cross and first at the sepulcher" tells of woman's constancy of devotion to Christ.
Faithful women were the first witnesses of the risen Lord and the first messengers of the gospel to those who were to tell the glad tidings abroad to every creature.

What can the Woman's Missionary Society do? Is it not a sort of fifth wheel in our machinery? A species of woman's rights affair? Can any good come out of Nazareth? Such questions, if not indeed literally voiced, it is to be feared characterize the attitude of many in the church towards the mission work of our noble women; and yet they have persisted and wrought successfully even under discouragement. What they need and richly merit from the whole church is countenance and help.

Gilderoy's late article on this subject, aptly styled "rouching," was in the right direction. Paul appreciated woman's work a long time ago: "I commend unto you Phoebe, our sister; receive her in the Lord; assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you. Help those women which labored with me in the gospel."

Having recent occasion to look into the workings of the Woman's Missionary Society, I find most gratifying results. This society, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the time of its last annual report in June, 1884, had raised during the six years of its existence $131,252 61. The report shows a steady increase in the amounts collected from year to year.
Thirty-one Conference societies and 1,523 auxiliaries, adult and juvenile, have been organized. The total number of members has grown to 37,482.

A monthly Advocate, edited by a woman, is published as the organ of the society. Foreign fields are being occupied. Besides the thousands working at home, godly women have gone out to China, South America, Central Mexico, Mexican border and to the Indian Territory, under the direction of this noble, Christian enterprise. These results, achieved under all the circumstances, are perhaps far beyond the expectation of the most sanguine friends of the movement. They are truly wonderful.

But this is not all. In the summation of good, resulting from woman's work in missions, we must take into account the reflex influence of the work upon the church at large, and especially upon the missionary spirit and enterprise of the church. Never, perhaps, since the days of the apostles, has the church made more earnest and liberal efforts to enter the many fields already white unto harvest than she has done for the last few years. Is not this renewed life and zeal, with its increase of results, due largely to the reflex influence of "woman's work for woman," quickening the energies and stirring up the gifts of the whole church?

We thus find answer to the question: "What is woman's place?"
She has been utilized by that gospel which has so elevated and benefited herself. She is not to be regarded only as a "figure head" for the adornment of society, nor need she sit down and bewail her "aimless life." Thousands have been enlisted and brought into the vineyard, who but for her missionary society would have remained inactive, unemployed.
She becomes a messenger of the gospel, setting up its standard and kindling its light on benighted shores. Widening fields unite her efforts, and she is taking her place as a factor in the great enterprises that look to the elevation of the race and to the evangelizing of the world.

Mississippi Conference Brotherhood.

This is an organization perfected in our Conference at its session in Natchez, Miss., a year ago last December, and chartered by our State Legislature the following February.
The facts that led to its organization are those that occupy the thoughts of every husband and father, and that inspire effort and self-denial to make some provision for those who are dependent upon his life work when life was over. Every man feels it his duty, and his efforts are directed to the laying aside of something for the maintenance of loved ones when he can no longer work for their support.

But just how to do this is the unsolved problem with the itinerant ministry. To say that such subjects never trouble us would be to assume that we are less than man or more than angels. This writer has never felt a pain nor thought of death, but the question was painfully suggested,
What would become of loved ones in such an event? And little as the church and the world may think of it, this is one of the very hardest trials we have to bear. And it is intensified by our observation and experience with men in the every-day affairs of life. We see them following in the paths of sin, and when we remonstrate the plea is, I must provide for my family while in health and life. Or we miss them from places of trust and obligation to God and to man, and when the reason for this neglect of duty is asked the same answer is given. So I say we would have to be considerably less or more than man if these same thoughts did not sometimes very seriously trouble us.

But what are we to do? To provide for them out of the salaries we receive is out of the question. Assessment is never made with reference to that end, and if they were the receipts would defeat it. Indeed, very few of our preachers are able to carry an insurance on their lives; it takes all they can get by living close to meet expenses and keep clear of debt. So to help one another we organized the brotherhood. Our officers are elected annually and perform all the duties required of them without one cent of compensation—it is purely a labor of love. We pay an annual fee of ten cents to defray the expense of stationery and to buy books of records, but no one is compensated for labor or time given to the organization. And I can assure you this is no trifling donation on the part of our secretary.

When a member dies we each pay to his family five dollars. We are allowed sixty days in which to make this payment. If any one fails to pay in that time and he should die, his family would not be a claimant upon the society. While none but ministers in the active itinerant work can be claimants upon our mortuary fund, laymen may become honorary members with all other rights and privileges. We now have several who pay every assessment, and otherwise render us great assistance. To these we are greatly indebted, and hope soon to have many others. There are laymen everywhere in our Conference who can well afford to pay the small sum of five dollars at the death of one of our preachers. To these we earnestly appeal to join us. They run no risk, and if at any time they find themselves unable to pay an assessment, their failure to do so in sixty days ends the matter.

Every pastoral charge should be represented in this organization. If one member does not feel able to pay the assessments, any number may club together and make some one an honorary member. Very few of our preachers are able to pay these assessments, but the feeling that something should be done to help the widow and her orphans prompts the self-denial for others we hope will be made for ours when the trial hour comes. If any will join us, let them give their names and ten cents to their pastor, or send it to Rev. I. W.
Cooper, Madison Station, Miss., who is our secretary.

Of the five of our preachers who have died this year, I am sorry to say only two, Bros. Rish and Hawkins, were members. Bro. Gilmore was the first to die, and with the $400

we paid his wife she has just purchased a home near Enterprise, where, with the mite the Conference will pay her, she and her little ones can make a living. Help us, brethren, to help those whose loved ones so freely gave their lives for you and yours.

J. M. WHEAMS.

From Arcadia, La.

At Ebenezer a large collection for foreign missions and church extension was taken and a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society organized with the following very capable officers: President, Mrs. M.
J. Wimberly; vice-president, Miss Lou Bransford; recording secretary, Mrs. O. J. Raley; corresponding secretary, Miss Pallie Betterton; treasurer, Mrs. S. B. Dacus; solicitor for Woman's Missionary Advocate, Mrs. Savannah Pardue.

At Downsville we organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society with a large membership. The following constitute the able corps of officers for 1885: President, Mrs. C.
L. Gunby; first vice-president, Mrs.
N. Reynolds; second vice-president,
Mrs. E. C. Collier; recording secretary, Miss Julia Gunby; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. G. Hammonds; treasurer, Miss E. A. A.
Gunby; solicitor for Woman's Missionary Advocate, Mrs. G. E. Hammonds.

We were glad to find the pastor of the Downsville circuit, Rev. Reuben
S. Collier, in full sympathy with the ladies of his charge in regard to this important field of Christian labor.
It will not be long, we are sure, before he reports to the ADVOCATE the organization of societies at Mars Hill, Smyrna and N. B. He intends to raise his assessment and over for foreign missions and church extension, and in addition to encourage the ladies of his circuit to raise all they can. With such a noble desire burning in his heart, and God to help him, he will certainly be able to accomplish the best results. Our prayer to God is that every preacher and every circuit may be filled with the spirit of missions. Gilderoy puts it just right in the last ADVOCATE:
"If we are not missionaries, we are not Christians."

At Liberty, or Bryan Chapel, on the Ringgold circuit, we organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society with the following officers:
President, Mrs. M. R. Bryan; first vice-president, Mrs. A. M. Bryan; second vice-president, Mrs. S. A.
Cotter; recording secretary, Miss Sallie Bryan; corresponding secretary, Miss Mattie Perkins; treasurer, Mrs. L. M. Lawson; solicitor for Woman's Missionary Advocate,
Mrs. S. A. Cotter.

The congregations were large both on Saturday and on Sunday, the love-feast an interesting and helpful meeting and the communion a great blessing to all. The collection for foreign missions and church extension was a large one, and the pastor can readily report his full assessment raised if the people do as well when he takes the collection at the other points of his circuit.

The official report of the pastor showed a decided advance in the matter of Sunday-schools and in the various lines of church work. There is an itinerant prayer meeting doing great good, its beginning dating back some five years. Class meetings are under way at some points. There is no reason why any circuit should be without these blessed means of grace.

Rev. Philip Burkett, the beloved and faithful preacher in charge, has determined that, by the help of God, his circuit shall make a creditable showing when Bishop Keener calls for the facts and figures at Baton Rouge. He will, without delay, organize women's missionary societies at Ringgold, Grand Bayou, Chouhatta Academy, Armistead's
Chapel and Ritchie's Mill. May God bless him and every man who has a heart for work and will do his level best!

Bro. Godfrey reports a Woman's Christian Temperance Union organized with a large membership at Indian Village. The officers are as follows: President, Mrs. M. L.
Griggs; first vice-president, Miss Mary F. Bryan; second vice-president, Mrs. M. M. Fuller; recording secretary, Mrs. M. F. Childs; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. L. Burroughs; treasurer, Mrs. E. M.

Griggs.

Revival at Kosciusko.

The meeting here, of nearly four weeks' duration, closed last night.
Results: Eighty-five conversions, fifty-one accessions to our church, with others to join soon. This makes a total of seventy additions to the membership at this place and thirty at Durant since Conference.

The revival also improved the Sunday-school greatly, increasing the attendance from 130 to 170. The Ladies' Aid Society numbers eighty, and the Young Men's Christian Association forty. While we give all the praise to God for this great work of grace, we acknowledge our indebtedness to Bros. J. W. Price, T.
W. Lewis, H. C. Morehead, H. C.
Parrot and wife and E. G. Kilgore for their very efficient services during the meeting. They will ever be held in grateful remembrance by the people here.

The pastors and members of the different denominations worked harmoniously and participated in the blessed fruits. Bro. Bowen requests me to write this, as he is so engaged that he could not do it in time. He starts this evening with his sick wife for Holly Springs, thence to Luka, where it is hoped that she will soon be restored to health.

A meeting begins to-night at the Baptist Church, where we hope that the twenty-five or thirty penitents that were left at the altar last night may be converted.

I was with Bro. Lewis in Lexington last Friday and Saturday. The meeting there was progressing with encouraging interest. May that dear people realize a great revival this week.

Bro. Bowen is to commence a meeting in Durant on Wednesday night of this week. We hope and pray for a mighty work there.

Fraternally,

O. W. BACHMAN.

Whisky Begging for Quarter.

These terribly tall-tale initials,
W. C. T. U., are working unknown wonders in these parts. These anti-whisky women are here too. Some time ago they requested the saloon keepers to close up, and they smiled
a smile of very lofty independence.
The legends of Yazoo do not certify remarkable distinction in the history and progress of systematic or even social temperance, but we have recently reached a point where gravitation shifting turns the other way.

The ladies of this town have undertaken prohibition with becoming zeal and determination. Public sentiment, in its best and most controlling aspects, sympathizes strongly with them. They first turned the attention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to the prohibition of future liquor licenses, and it is pretty well understood that by popular counterpetition this is virtually already effected. It will, no doubt, be soon completed so as to leave the saloons without a possibility of obtaining the necessary numerical strength which the whisky law requires. And then, secondly, the licenses under protection of which the saloons are now working are said to have been fraudulently obtained. So, what about this? The saloon keepers, fearing danger in this direction,
send a legal ambassador to the Woman's Christian Temperance
Union desiring conditions of peace.

The purport of these conditions of surrender, which I chanced to see yesterday in the proper law office, was: "Pretend to let us alone until January, and we hereby promise and agree, bona fide then and there,
'by these presents,' at that said date,
to step down and out, close up, asking for no license thence forward forever, neither in our own names and behalf nor those of any other person or persons whatsoever, promising, pledging, assuring, covenanting,
binding," etc.

The other high contracting party, notwithstanding they wear these significant initials, are the kindest and most tender-hearted people in the world; and this appeal, so respectful, so humiliating, finding themselves petitioned, considered the petition with the commendable kindness of natural womanhood, but with the firmness and dignity of strict diplomacy. Thus matters stood for a short season; but some members of the petitioning party hesi-tated about ratification, and the negotiations failed; and there prompt quo warranto requires answer before the Circuit Court.

This is about the present attitude of affairs. A batch of saloons before the Circuit Court will be rather new in Yazoo City, and will tend to stir up things; and few things strengthen prohibition like stirring.

It is quite likely that these Woman's Christian Temperance Union people were taught to sweep, by their mothers, in girlhood times. It looks like it, for it is quite likely that they will sweep not only Yazoo City, but Yazoo county. Whisky is doomed!

Prohibition is gaining in strength, stature and comeliness every day in these parts. Well, Mississippi was the third State in the Union to touch it, which touching was done, and by no means meanly done, in A. D.
1827. I chanced to be in at this touching.

Prohibition Lecturer Benson is here making things lively.

Good Words.

—Robert Bruce, the morning before he died, being at breakfast, and having, as he used, eaten an egg, said to his daughter: "I think I am yet hungry; you may bring me another egg." But, having mused awhile, he said: "Hold, daughter, my Master calls me." With these words his sight failed him, on which he called for the Bible, and said:
"Turn to the eighth chapter of Romans and set my fingers on the words, 'I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, etc.,' shall be able to separate me from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." When this was done, he said:
"Now, is my finger upon them?"
Being told it was, he added: "Now,
God be with you, my dear children;
I have breakfasted with you, and shall sup with my Lord Jesus Christ this night." And then he expired.

—A person who suspected that a minister of his acquaintance was not truly orthodox went to him and said,
"Sir, I am told that you are against the perseverance of the saints." "Not I, indeed," was the answer; "it is the perseverance of sinners that I oppose." The other replied,
"But that is not a satisfactory answer. Do you think that a child of God can not fall very low, and yet be restored?" The minister answered, "I think it will be very dangerous to make the experiment."

—Let us delight to think of our heavenly Father, who is not morose and stern and pitiless and imob-servant and unimpassioned, who can feel for us, because he has made us what we are. Let us bless him for our children, our successes, our every good, and count a thing precious only as we can feel that the light of the heavenly face is shining on it—the light of God, our "exceeding joy."

—Out of hearts plowed by contri-tion spring flowers fairer than ever grew on the hard ground of unbroken self-content. There bloom in them sympathy and charity for other erring mortals; and patience under suffering which is acknowledged to be merited; and lastly, sweetest blossom of all, tender gratitude for earthly and heavenly blessings felt to be free gifts of divine love.

—The maelstrom attracts more notice than the quiet fountain; a comet draws more attention than the steady star. But it is better to be the fountain than the maelstrom, and star than comet, following out the sphere and orbit of quiet goodness in which God places us.—Dr. John Hall.

—He that would keep his treasures from being lost or stolen, must put them in a safe place, and carefully guard them while there. If left uncared for, and exposed to robbers, their loss, at any moment, may be looked for. There is nothing valuable kept without care and vigilance.

—There are few persons who really know the preciousness of the promises of God's word, because they have never tried them. God is ready to fulfill every promise he has ever made, and Christians do not know what they are losing by not implicitly trusting in him.

—Thankfulness is the key upon which is written all the songs of joy, gladness and rejoicing which are sung upon earth as an echo from the music of golden harps and angel voices in the heavenly choir.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1885.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

BY A. C. N.

There is a happy home for you and me;
But it's beyond life's stormy, raging sea;
Our father's house, our home, beyond above,
Where all is holy joy and light and love;
That happy land I'll seek; I'll sail and row;
For I have heard of it in song and story;
Where angels and the saints of God abide;
I'll find my rest for that, so blessed shore,
And leave this world and will come back no more.

This troubled sea, my little bark must sail;
That heaven's shore, and I must not fail;
And to that harbor near, O God, I'll go;
I'll steer my course by Father's guiding star;
And though the waves roll high, and the tide low,
My guide is such, that I shall safely row;
For, though the night is dark, the storm be wild,
My faithful Captain is my Father's Child.

My anchor, hope, within the vale is thrown,
And fastened to my heavenly Father's throne;
My cable's faith, my sturdy oar is prayer,
And by God's grace, I'll safely enter there,
And turn, and bid this world a kind goodby,
And meet my little bark beyond-on high.

Prohibition.

EDITORS MERCURY: I will thank you for space in your columns for a few thoughts on Prohibition. It is claimed by saloon men and their advocates, that the liquor traffic is conducive to the material prosperity of our city, and that prohibition would be disastrous in the extreme to our business interest. That this nothing is more erroneous. Let us estimate the value of the liquor traffic in the city at $100,000. Now suppose the saloons were abolished. What would become of this money? Would it be destroyed? Certainly not. It would only be diverted into other channels. The $100,000 now spent for rum would go to swell the volume of trade in all other branches. The man who now spends $100 a year for liquor (a low estimate for a regular drinker) would have more to spend every year with the butcher, the baker, the grocer, the furniture dealer, the dry goods man, etc. Then the volume of trade would not be diminished; there would only be a change in its direction. All branches of trade save the trade in liquors would be benefited to the extent of $100,000 in the aggregate. I know it will be claimed that the saloon men would all leave the city, and that consequently all the annual expenditures of these men and their families must be deducted from the above sum. This, however, is a sheer assumption. It is by no means certain that the liquor dealers would all leave the city in case the liquor traffic was suppressed. In many other places where the cause of prohibition has triumphed, saloon keepers have not emigrated, but have gone into other and better pursuits. So I doubt not it would be here. Many of our liquor dealers would become prosperous men in other kinds of business. If, however, there are a few of them whose sole enjoyment of their business is dealing out death by the drink that they would emigrate rather than give it up, then it can easily be shown that the loss of trade consequent upon their removal would be far more than counterbalanced by the other benefits of prohibition which I shall hereafter mention.

The above named gain of $100,000 which would accrue to the various branches of trade in the city is based upon supposition that production would be the same under new regime as under the old. This, however, is an incorrect supposition. Prohibition would be largely increased by the suppression of the liquor traffic. Who does not know that many of our workmen lose a great deal of time on account of their drinking habits? Who does not see them frequently marching between two policemen to the calaboose? And who does not know that many of them who escape the clutches of the police lose from half a day or two out of every week in a drunken debauch? Who does not know that if the liquor traffic was suppressed, many of these men would work more, earn more and thus have more to spend for food, clothing, furniture, education, and various other things that would promote the comfort and happiness of themselves and their families? If some one would take the trouble to ascertain the loss of wages that is caused in this city by the liquor traffic, the result would be astounding. The increased production which would result from the suppression of the liquor traffic would be largely in excess of the loss that would be sustained by the emigration of the whole liquor dealing fraternity if they should see fit to make their abode in a more congenial clime.

In addition to this, the liquor traffic is to be charged with large sums of money expended for the punishment of crime. It is a fact well known to every observing reflecting man that a very large proportion of the crimes committed in this land are committed under the influence of intoxicating liquors. The cost of punishing these crimes is far in excess of the revenue derived from the liquor traffic. Banish the saloons and in a short time you would almost empty our jails and make our calaboose a habitation for owls and bats. The cost of administering justice would be largely diminished by suppressing the liquor traffic.

These statements are not mere assertions, as are the predictions of saloon keepers, concerning the direful consequences of prohibition. These men talk about prohibition as if it were a thing untried. Yet every well informed man knows that prohibitory laws have been in operation over large sections of country long enough to test their value. And every candid, unbiased man is bound to admit that where these laws have been enforced, their results have been beneficial in an immeasurable degree. Of course, prohibitory laws against the liquor traffic will no more enforce themselves than will laws against murder, theft or any other crime. I will not deny that it is possible to find in prohibition States some cities in which the municipal authorities, including the police, are in sympathy with the liquor traffic. When this is the case, unless public sentiment against the traffic is exceedingly strong, of course, the law will not be enforced, offenders will go unwhipped of justice, and the cry will be raised by saloon keepers and their allies that prohibition is a failure. Is this an argument against prohibition? Find a city in which the police are in sympathy with burglary, and there burglary will go unpunished. Ought we, therefore, to abolish our laws against burglary? Find a portion of country in which public sentiment is in sympathy with murder, and there murderers will "go set free." Must we, therefore, expunge from our code the statutes against murder? There would be as much sense in this as in decrying prohibitory laws against the liquor traffic because they do not enforce themselves. No law ever did enforce itself. Any set of laws will be brought into contempt, when administered by officers who use the functions of their office to uphold the very foundations of law. In order to test the value of prohibition then, we must go not to those cities in which the whole municipal machinery is in the hands of a corrupt whiskey ring, but to those cities where the authorities do all in their power to enforce the laws. Happily such cases are not rare. They can be found in England, Ireland, Canada, and the United States.

First, we will take up England. In a Convocation of the established Church, held some time since, a committee on temperance made a report from which I glean the following facts: "In the Province of Canterbury alone, there are 1,434 districts in which there is neither saloon nor beer shop. In these districts the laboring classes are fed, and live comfortably, and there is seldom a case that calls for the interference of the police, while in those districts where drink is sold, there is a great deal more poverty and want, and the police, and the magistrates are in constant demand."

This testimony is of a high character, but I give some below from a still higher source; viz., from a committee of the House of Lords. According to a report made to this august body in 1878, the town of Beesbrook, Ireland, with a population of 8,000, "has had no drinking shop since 1847. The town has no police, and no need of any, there having been only thirty cases tried before the magistrates in thirty-one years." The town had at that time only two paupers, while a neighboring whiskey town, a little larger, had 137 paupers and a vast amount of crime of various grades. The testimony before this committee shows that similar results follow prohibition throughout the realm, that the difference between prohibition towns and gin shop towns in regard to pauperism and crime is immense. And not only is this the case in England and Ireland, but also in Scotland. The same report contains the following language: "In Scotland there are 100 parishes where the work of the brewer, the distiller and the liquor seller are unknown. In these the good order and high-toned morality of the people are conspicuous; and improvidence and crime are at a minimum."

Similar testimony could be given in regard to the results of prohibitory laws in the British Dominions in America, but we come now to the United States. Judge Peck of the Supreme Court of Vermont, makes this statement concerning prohibition in that State: "Where the liquor law has been enforced, it has driven the traffic out, and the influence of the law has been salutary in diminishing drunkenness, and the disorder arising therefrom, and also crimes generally."

Trimble county, Ky., has no bar rooms. In 1882 when the county court of that county met, there was not a prisoner in jail, or a criminal case on docket, and not a pauper in the county. In another county of the same State—a county where whiskey is sold—there were 537 arrests in one month.

Similar testimony might be presented from various localities in Tennessee and Arkansas. I pass these, and call attention to Yllesund, N. J., as a town illustrating the workings of prohibition. It has a population of ten thousand, and yet in one whole year, there has been only one indictment. The taxes are only one per cent. The police expenses are only $75.00 a year. Judge Pitman says "This is what prohibition does, not for a jacked head of religious outcasts, or a community of scholars, but for a miscellaneous company of laborers from all parts of our country, and from Germany, France, England, Ireland and Scotland."

Eleven years ago, the city of Melville, N. J., had about 20 grogshops, and drunkenness abounded. Now its 5,000 people are sober, prosperous and happy. One manufacturing establishment there is of the opinion that prohibition is worth to that establishment, alone $10,000 a year in the general regularity of men at their work.

Similar testimony could be presented from scores of towns and counties in various States, but I will call attention to only one more locality, viz., Carroll county, Ga. Twenty years ago, no county in the State had more bar rooms in proportion to the population. Drinking places were not only to be found in the little towns, but also at cross roads and country places. No more unfavorable place for success of prohibition could have been selected than this county. It was settled by a class of citizens who regarded a plenty of corn whiskey and peach brandy as essential to good living. Liquor was sold without scruple and drunk without stint. Many of the people spent all their means, beyond a bare living, for strong drink. Education and churches were neglected; ignorance and vice prevailed to such an alarming extent, that the very name of the county became a byword and a reproach in the State. It was called "the Iron State of Carroll." The better citizens of the county were ashamed to acknowledge where they were from. The county of Carroll was synonymous with still houses, chicken fights, one o'arts, poverty and ignorance. After a struggle of 12 years with all forms of opposition, the law was secured and here are some of the results:

The trade of the county town has been more than doubled—has increased from $200,000 to $300,000 per annum. There are about thirty stores in the town and not a merchant would vote for saloons on business grounds. Some of the leading merchants were opposed to prohibition at first, because they feared it would injure their trade. They are unanimously in favor of it now. The $300,000 that was formerly spent for whiskey is now spent in building houses, improving roads, draining land etc. The farmers are nearly all out of debt. Many of the men who were spending all their money for whiskey are now making a good support for their families. There is less crime in this county than in any in that judicial district. Profanity is almost unknown. The soberness and quiet which prevail strikes visitors as wonderful.

Facts like these might be multiplied a thousand fold. In view of such an overwhelming array of facts, what value ought to be attached to the assertions of saloon keepers that prohibition "will damage the business interests of our city? A way with such nonsense. Whiskey shops are unmitigated curses to any community. They are a curse financially as well as morally. They are doomed. Their days are numbered. The prohibitionists are in dead earnest, and they are enlisted for the whole war. They will never give over the struggle until their white banner waves in triumph over the ruins of every dram shop in America.

Yours, W. C. BLACK.

The Church and Prohibition.

BY REV. JAS. J. BILLINGSLEY.

One trouble about this whole question of temperance and prohibition has been and is the attitude of the church towards the subject. In the first place, while we pass ecclesiastical laws against the use and traffic in intoxicating liquors, except for scientific and medicinal purposes, and are thereby pronounced in opposition to the evil, we nevertheless keep it in our pews, and in some instances hold it so tenaciously as if it were a special pet and a necessity to our organic church life. There is no use in fighting the devil around the stump, and keeping down the facts in the case. There is a great multitude of professors of religion who are the secret if not the open friends of whiskey and the liquor traffic; and friends, because they like it. They are fond of their whiskey toddies, their wines and their beer, and are often known to indulge the social glass with companions behind the door and other places. A member of my charge told me a few days ago that it was the exception when a member of the church refused to take social drinks, especially in private and during political excitements. In fact he told me that he himself got drunk last fall after the election of Cleveland. I wish it could be accurately ascertained how many (?) Christians were in the same boat with himself during that week of free whiskey.

Now, in this matter, if not before, the time has certainly come when "judgment must begin at the house of God." The church can not any longer pursue half way measures with such flagrant transgressions of her spirit and law. If gentle measures do not succeed, and they must be first tried, then let the knife come and the incorrigible be cut off. Let those who would "run with the hare and the hounds," too, be compelled to go either to the dogs or else wash their hands of the liquor curse. They remind me of the man who, when drowning, cried out: "Good Lord! Good devil!" and when rescued, was asked to explain himself. He said he did not know onto whose hands he might fall, and he wanted to keep good friends with both. So with these professors who would if possible, Christianize the liquor traffic. They make friends of the whiskey devil because of the money he gives them, and they would hold to the church at the same time because it gives respectability. They are running a hard race with Christ and Satan, for while they hold to the liquor traffic to fill their bellies and their purses. Now I submit the point to every fair and candid reader, if it is not time for such professors of religion "to step down and out." Until the church of Christ casts out the liquor traffic from within her own pales, it is utterly folly and shamelessly inconsistent for her to petition legislative and law-making bodies to institute measures looking towards prohibition. Let us begin at home, let us first cast the beam out of our own eye, let us get rid of the liquor men in the church and then we can act consistently in the matter.

There are nearly 16,000,000 church members and over 310,000 churches and Sunday-schools in the United States. Now is it not palpable to any one that if the church should do the will of God in this matter of the rum business, that it would soon be wiped out of this nation? The church of Christ in this land holds the balance of power, and had she been loyal to her Lord and Master the political parties of this land would have been forced long since to go in for temperance reform and prohibition. If she will do her duty for the next three years, and be true to her trust, the rising wave of prohibition will have run so high as to sweep away every obstacle before it and float John P. St. John or some other reliable prohibitionist into the White House in 1888. The church must be consistent with her principles and never forget the mission for which she has been established. It matters not to her what party goes down and what up, so long as she can shape and control public sentiment and establish righteousness in the land. Jesus Christ was never admitted a seat nor a hearing in the national conventions of the old parties in their nominating assemblies last summer, and his church will be guilty of something very little short of a covenant with hell if she shall refuse to take hold of this prohibition movement for fear of breaking up existing parties. What is a political party of more importance than the cause of Christ? Are party leaders more to be heard than the Son of God? Are we to refuse to throttle this monstrous evil at the ballot box because it will have to be done through a prohibition party? Then we have certainly forgotten the very a, b, c's of Christianity and are afraid to touch her holy principles with the tip end of our kid-gloved fingers.

"When Christians are just as they pray, They'll put the curse of drink away."

But not before, and it is little short of hypocrisy for a man to pray for the rum traffic to go down and then refuse to cast his vote against license for fear of offending some mere political party. Such a sentiment falling from the lips of a professor of religion is a shame and a travesty on religion. The same principle would make us hold for instance to the Democratic party if it should stick a government stamp on the nose of every mad dog in the land and send them abroad under protection of law to bite and kill whomever they could. Now if the party in power will not kill this frenzied bound of hell, the liquor traffic, but puts a plaster on its putrid nose, stamped with the seal of this great government, and sends it abroad through the land to despoil virtue and rob innocence, to blight home and corrupt the land in a word, to fling its deadly venom into all the fountains of political and social life, and that, too, by law, then in the name of humanity, if so-called "outsiders" will not do it, let the church as one man, ignoring all party affiliations, rise to her feet and pursue this dog of death with unrelenting determination till at the ballot box she overtake him and whips him down to hell his own native kennel. It would be still better if she adopted the vigorous language of Horace Greeley in the matter and act accordingly. In 1867 he said, "We believe in cutting that liquor dog's tail off right behind the ears." Amen. Let it be done as speedily as possible.

It seemed to me that the church has been playing with the liquor traffic as with a toy, while it has been making a record for the pages of history as dark as Erebus. We have been coquetting with this curse of curses while it has been slaying right and left with a vengeance. The course of this demon is closely marked through the land, and in its desolating track such a holocaust of wickedness has followed that we would not be at all surprised if the people of this land sprang to their feet at once with sworn determination for its overthrow. The liquor reign has imperiled everything dear to a free people and it has imperiled every interest of religion. It has debauched the press more than anything or all things else combined, and has struck deadly blows at everything honorable in public life. It has shamefully polluted our courts of justice and converted her heaven-sworn officers into agents of corruption. It has robbed the government of its treasures and then prostituted its ill-gotten gains for the purpose of bankrupting the land and making paupers of the people. It is the diabolical mother of pecuniary transgressions and thefts—the sworn enemy of prosperity, the destroyer of the nation's wealth, and if unchecked by the strong arm of the law, will damn the land financially by mortgaging every man's house to the liquor men. In many cases it has already burned our common schools into "the nursery grounds of an alien faith," and has sought to convert the pews of the church "into arenas of political jobbery." And yet the church stands by with her hands in her pocket as if nothing had happened. What the church of Christ needs to-day is being aroused to her duty in the matter of suppressing this infamous traffic. "How can we go to the heathen with this cancer of worse than heathen infamy fostering in our bosom?" In the opening sermon at the Centennial Conference, Bishop Foster said: "The church of to-day, much more the church of the future, must take to its heart the duty of combining and massing its forces against that gigantic atrocity, that diabolical conspiracy, that nameless monster, horrendum of Christian civilization, that mothers nine-tenths of the woes and sorrows, that blight and curse our modern age—the traffic in intoxicants which hides its deformity under forms of law. . . . If ever there was a cause which deserves to unite philanthropy and patriotism with piety, in restless endeavor, it is this. The exorcism of this vampire that has seized and preys on the very vitals of the nation demands the combined energy of the church and the government." Let the church of Christ, therefore, rally to the cause of prohibition, forgetful of party and party leaders. Let her turn her face in solido towards the ballot box and thence march on to Washington, and as she marches let her sing:

"Down with the liquor traffic, our sacred homes we'll save,
Run no more, O'er prostrate rights, its bloody flag shall wave;
We'll follow our Great Leader, 'till victory we gain—
Hurrah! for the party of right is coming now to reign."

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: In the early part of 1885 we were still living in the native city of Shanghai. During this stay among the people we learned much of their peculiar customs, and I was able to take notes of some of them at that time. I noticed that at the commencement of their new year the people everywhere put on the brightest picture in and out of their homes, and all seemed to wear smiling, happy faces, dressed in their best. All business for the time was laid aside, shops closed and everybody seemed in search of pleasure. It is indeed the greatest and most important day of all the days of the year in this dark and benighted land. All accounts are settled and books locked up before the dawn of that great day of pleasure seeking. Not one word can be said on that day about debts; but, instead, every one must wish his neighbor a "Happy New Year" and "May you be rich!" The character for "happiness," or "long life," or the character for "spring," is placed on every man's door or window, and everything about the outside of the house wears an air of freshness and cleanliness, for the inmates have been scrubbing and scouring nearly the whole night before New Year's Day. Thousands are running here and there with lanterns all night, collecting accounts, or paying their debts, or making purchases for the next two days, for scarcely anything can be bought for forty-eight hours after the dawn of the first day of the Chinese new year.

The Chinese are strictly superstitious in observing the new year. Labor, even of the lower classes of all occupations, ceases as the light of the new year begins to dawn in the east. It is the only day in this land that has any appearance of the Christian Sabbath. The lower classes cease work one, two and three days. Another class will not work under five days, then the whole population of China bows before and worships the god of wealth. Another class of society will cease work for two weeks, while the official class suspend their business for one month—ten days before and twenty days after their new year. Their seals of office are put under lock and key during that time, and no case, no matter how urgent, can be tried.

The day before new year all old paper charms are removed and new ones are put up before the dawn of the next day. Five slips of paper are put up to represent the five happy states, they are suspended from the front door, and pieces of the same are put on trees, farming implements, furniture, etc. 1. Long life; 2. Riches; 3. Freedom from calamity; 4. Living an upright life; 5. A peaceful and happy death. Shop-men put in their drawers the character for lucky. Mechanics, on commencing any employment, either place it before them or write it on their material, hoping the new will be a prosperous one to them.

On the occasion of a marriage they post up the double Chinese character for happiness. They also hang most at the front door, or put their "chopsticks," (pieces of bamboo which they use in place of knives and forks) in a sieve at the door, or heat the clothes-box with their hands. They fasten a looking glass to the curtains of the bed to expel any evil spirits that may be about the room, for they say evil spirits and demons can not endure to see their own forms or faces. They arrange pots of flowers by the bedside and also burn incense. They post up a paper soliciting the presence of the felicitous animal, the unicorn, which is said to have appeared at the birth of Confucius.

It is said that a certain bride, on leaving the house of her parents to go to that of her husband, was met and devoured by a tiger. To prevent so serious a catastrophe at the present time the parents of the bridegroom suspend a piece of meat at the door as a bribe to this cruel monster. The bride, on entering the house of her husband, leaps over the sieve holding the "chopsticks." On the bride leaving the house of her parents, they eat rice at the door; and they also eat persons of influence and repute to the companions of the bride and bridegroom. They burn candles the eve of being married to see whether they dribble or not. If the candles dribble, it is thought to be an unlucky omen. The persons who are so esteemed, respectable and repute as those who are the fathers and mothers of numerous families.

The Chinese also put a piece of silver in the mouths of the dead, and the rice in jars to be buried with the body. Blue paper is posted over the door after the death of a person and candles are burned before the coffin. When the father or mother of a family is dying their sons and grandsons are called in to use their utmost endeavor to prevent the spirit from escaping. They set up tablets and toss up the pieces of wood to inquire the will of the dead. The money which is placed in their mouths is for the spirits to procure food on entering the next world or if they should return to this world again they would have something to which to begin life. With the rice, wheat, a little salt and pickles if they have more than they actually need, they are supposed to divide with orphans and needy spirits. The last before the coffin is called the "The thousand years lamp," and is placed there out of respect to the ancestors who deceased. After the mourning is turned from the grave, the priests drive a nail into the wall of the room from which the coffin was taken, and this is done to detain the spirit of the dead from secretly departing into haunts of man is supposed to have three sons and six spirits. Great happiness and prosperity is supposed to attend a son or the grandson who obtains a nail. Inquiring of the dead is one done by throwing up two pieces of wood. They are thrown up two pieces; if the smooth surface turns more frequently than the rough, it is supposed to be a favorable answer to the question asked. It frequently occurs that, if the person is disappointed in the answer, he throws again and again until he receives a favorable answer. How sad to think that all superstition is owing to the want of knowledge of the gospel of Christ. Multiplied thousands in this land in that condition and need the light of the gospel. Yours in Christ, J. W. LAMBERT.

When Does Judgment Day Come?

People, and especially ministers and public speakers generally, are often found repeating, again and again, the same phrases and sentences that little, if any, foundation in actual fact. Sometimes these sayings, when grown down to their real import, mean something that nobody believes, nor has good reason for believing. A reasonable instance of this inconsistency seen in the popular way of talking about the "final judgment day," as it is called. If a man preaches a sermon on the last account with every man and woman must read he will invariably draw a frightful picture of falling rocks and smoking mountains, of all earth's millions assembled before God, who is seated on great white throne. He calls it a "grand assize." All nations are tried and sent to their appropriate punishments or rewards. And all on the same day. But when this same writer or speaker officiates at the funeral of some deceased brother or sister, he represents the dead friend as gone to his reward. She is now in heaven among the angels. But stop, has judgment day come and gone? Oh, no. Then, if so, and if she be really in heaven, when the last day does come will she not have to leave heaven to stand her trial? There is hardly an ordinary written, that does not speak the subject as already gone to heaven. Whenever people mention their relatives or friends, they are spoken of as now long "in glory," enjoying the fruits of their labors.

If the doctrine preached from the pulpit is true, all this talk of people going to their reward, is the merest nonsense and fanciful dreaming. Is it just to send a man to prison for five years, before he is ever arraigned or tried? In our opinion, there is no such thing as general judgment day.

First, if there be one, it certainly never yet taken place. In the world while, where have all our dead friends been? In heaven? Certainly not, for they must await the "final judgment day." In hell? No, for surely, they would not send a man to hell without trial, nor send him there to await trial for thousands of years yet to come. Then are they lying inert in the graves? Horror! No. Nothing but their remains are there. Truly, the final judgment demands some purgatory or the banks of the Styx, whereon lost souls may roam hundreds or thousands of years, until their are determined. Must a man die to be in purgatory or the banks of the Styx, and then lie inactive in his grave hundreds of years, awaiting his trial in dread suspense? In ordinary conversation we never speak thus, we hear such expressions as, "his soul has taken its flight," "his soul has met his God," and "God has called him home." The fact is, people talk about something they do not believe.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI DISTRICTS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors: REV. T. A. ADAMS, REV. J. T. SAWYER, REV. W. L. C. HENNING.

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1885.

A great revival is in progress in Atlanta, Ga. The press dispatches say such a movement was never known in that community.

This is true to the letter: "If Methodism fails anywhere it will not be on account of her doctrines. Methodist theology was never more popular than now. To keep her ancient force she must keep her ancient fire."

Candidating for the position of Moderator of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly has become such an offense and abuse, that the New York Observer has spoken out against it in words of severest condemnation. Correspondence with delegates and pledges to vote for certain persons, enlivened the weeks immediately preceding the recent session in Cincinnati. When ecclesiastical position is sought after and canvassed for, the candidates ought to be retired to very private life. Posing for place in a gospel minister is unbecoming even to contemptuousness.

Dr. Thoburn, a missionary in India, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, writes of a wonderful revival in that long benighted land. How it stirs our faith to read the blessed news! It must be that the day is hastening when the Lord will claim the heathen for his inheritance. Writing to Dr. Butler, the former superintendent of that mission, Dr. Thoburn says: "You will have heard of the baptism of two hundred and forty-eight converts at the Ajndhya mela by two of our native preachers. Of these the majority are Brahmins. This is the first wide breach ever made in the Brahmin ranks. I regard it as an era in the history of Indian missions. But for the fact that I was in West India I would have hurried to the mela. The work was all done by natives." That reads like the story of a second Pentecost. Who can read it without a psalm of praise and a vow of consecration!

As the change of our church name is to be voted upon at the approaching Annual Conference, the subject is being discussed in the West. The advocates of change argue that it is absolutely necessary on the border. Testimony conflicts, however, even among brethren at the outposts. The last Colorado Methodist contains an article on the subject by Rev. George Needham, presiding elder of the New Mexico district, from which we extract the following:

"Some stumble at the word 'South,' no doubt, and decline to join us on account of it; but I do not believe that in this country the number is considerable. And where the prejudice against the word 'South,' and what they insist the word means, is so great as to keep them out, it might be too strong to work harmoniously together if they should come in. In my opinion there are comparatively few who are kept from us by the name, who would be in real accord with us if it were changed. Much of the ado is made over the name by enemies to our success. They would use anything else that might present itself, of course; and they might make more out of change than they can out of the word 'South.'"

A Remarkable Stone.

We clip the following from the New York Advocate and republish it for all it is worth. There is no reason why Romanism should have a monopoly of sacred relics:

Great interest has recently been awakened in archaeological circles by the discovery of a stone in Elea, Greece, containing an inscription which claims for the stone that it is the veritable one on which our Lord sat at the marriage in Cana of Galilee. An account of it has been published by Herr Döhl in the Bulletin de Correspondence Hellénique, published at Athens. This article, the result of a minute personal examination, has been translated by Mrs. Van Benschoten, the wife of Prof. Van Benschoten, of Wesleyan University, at present in Athens.

It gives us a special pleasure in being the first, as we believe, in presenting to the American public, if not to the entire Anglo-Saxon public, the news of this most important discovery. We care nothing for traditional objects. But here is a stone, found in no Roman Catholic Church, but in the heart of Greece, and its classic ruins, which tells the story of our Lord's miracle at Cana. Its suggestiveness is exceedingly rich in corroborative importance.

A Present and Prospective Issue.

The American Protestant League has renewed its activities and promises to arouse an anti-Romanist agitation such as has never been known in this new world. The steady and stealthy aggressions of the Catholics, seeking to destroy public education, and to dominate political sentiment in the United States may well occasion alarm. It is far better to prevent an evil than to cure it—to arrest a danger than to overthrow it. Our next-door neighbor, Mexico, ought to teach us a lesson. The spontaneous uprising of her people against the tyrannical rule of the church was an act of desperation. All power of endurance was exhausted and their only possible relief was armed, organized resistance. And had not that spirit been at once crystallized into statutory law, the priests would long since have returned to power.

We are no alarmist and not at all disposed to take pessimistic views of our country's future, but this is to be among us, a vital and desperate issue. All indications point that way, and it becomes Christian patriots and statesmen to seriously ponder the possible results. The spirit of Rome is the same in the United States as in Spain, Austria or Mexico. Concealed beneath a velvet covering are the claws of a lion. If she had the power of numbers, and public sentiment, the history of those countries would be repeated in this fair land, the home of the free and the asylum for the persecuted and oppressed. The aggressive tone of Romish papers threatening politicians with the solid church vote, is quite sufficient to open the eyes of the blindest and most obtuse.

The movement projected in New York where Romanism is such a menacing power will find sympathy and support all over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is understood that a large amount of money has been contributed to the cause, and that wisely matured plans are to be put in speedy operation. Tracts by the million will be distributed and every righteous agency calculated to educate moral sentiment employed. "In an interview about this movement, the private secretary of Cardinal McKlosky said some days ago: 'His Eminence has been aware of it for sometime. He regards it as a harmless outcropping of the old, narrow prejudices. It will amount to nothing.' But this serenity is all a seeming. The growing alarm among thinking, unsectarian patriots, is disturbing the peace of the hierarchy."

We believe it wise to agitate this question. Indifference is suicidal and a sin against the voice of history. The power of Rome is only stayed by the stern resistance of moral conviction. There must be the constant presence of a vigilant opposition, or every civil and political institution will be controlled by its strong hand.

This is a land of large liberty. Freedom of conscience is the sacred and inalienable right of the humblest citizen. Law can not abridge a man's privilege to worship God in his own way, but must guarantee and protect it. There is and should be an entire separation of Church and State. The statutory law can not define religious creeds or interfere with purely ecclesiastical administration. If a Romanist wants to worship a wafer, pray to the saints or kiss the Pope's toe, it is his inviolable right. But when the church, through its representatives, attempts to control political legislation or any individual member claims his first allegiance to a foreign and supposed infallible prince, in a civil issue, the people must intervene or the integrity of our government will be overthrown. It is not Romanism as a spiritual institution, but as a political organization, that is feared and resisted.

Thomas Cushing, of Boston, in the last Journal of Education, gives an interesting account of the school system of Mexico, from which we make the following extract:

The City of Mexico has a system of municipal free schools, covering the compulsory education of both sexes and all ages, from the rudiments of learning up to a degree of proficiency that qualifies students for the commencement of professional study. The schools are kept largely in portions of old convents or other church buildings which have been secularized, and afford much better accommodation than could otherwise be afforded; but the teachers are not ecclesiastics, and in the lower grades are mostly women. The salaries are fair, the lowest in the primary grades being fifty dollars a month, with some living-rooms attached to the schools. They increase, as the grades rise, to fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars a year. The amounts have been reasonably satisfactory, compared with the emoluments of other positions and the expenses of living, had regularly and certainly of payment been secured; but I was told by the teachers of the highest public institution, corresponding in some degree to our Institute of Technology, that under the last administration they had received no pay for nine months; they had held on to their positions, however, and were now looking for better things.

The President's Sister.

President Cleveland is in danger of being known as the brother of his sister, Miss Elizabeth Cleveland, the mistress of the White House, has conspicuous talent and the largest culture, and in a certain sphere is quite as distinguished a figure as her illustrious brother. As the advocate of temperance she is displaying great firmness of purpose and unusual powers of argumentation. Her last publication is a reply to Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, the scholarly pastor of a Presbyterian Church in New York City. Dr. Crosby's views on this subject are well known to all readers of temperance literature. He does not favor total abstinence and is not an ardent prohibitionist. In a recent address he made reference to the total abstinence zeal of the "excellent women" in such a way as to provoke a reply from Miss Cleveland. We have space for the whole of her brilliant argument but a few extracts will be given.

"When the young Queen of Austria, pressed on every side by the ruthless oppression of the great Prussian King, fled trembling into Hungary and, with her infant in her arms, appealed for the protection of her kingdom to her royal subjects there, those stalwart Hungarian nobles rose in a mass and, laying their hands upon their swords at their sides, swore in a shout whose heroic ring echoes down the years: 'Mortem pro Rege nostro Maria Theresa!' and how did they die? All the world knows."

It is not for rhetorical effect, still less for the excitement of the tenderest sympathy, that I revert to this well-known historical incident: it is that I may call attention to the argument in the cry of those men, for I suppose a man's cry may be counted as an argument. I wish to beg you to notice those words, Rege nostro—that expression of those Hungarian nobles—our King Maria Theresa, instead of our Queen Maria Theresa, has been interpreted to represent an idea in their minds to suit the interpreter.

Woman's rights speakers have made them an acknowledgment on the part of those most masculine, that there was a woman who was more man than any one of them, or altogether more able to command than by having more that was kindly in her; hence 'pro rege nostro' rather than 'pro regina nostra.' Chivalrous knights errant of our day make this expression to indicate the most refined and splendid chivalry in those Hungarian nobles, as if they had said to this threatened and trembling mother, clasping the future King in her arms: 'Never mind; now, you shall be just as much sovereign as if you were a King yourself. We will die to make it so. Pro regina nostra.'"

Now I make this expression to mean neither of these things. I believe these strong, sea words as the sailors roared out to express their most instant and impulsive expression for all that men, as patriots, should die for. I believe this crowned mother stood to them as the representative of their nationality, their rights, their honor—summing up in her person, as did the ruling sovereign of those days, their country and their country's cause. They formulated in their expression, 'Rege nostro,' the sentiment which Louis XIV taught in the words, 'L'Etat c'est moi.' They proved this for they did fight, and many of them did die, and men do not deliberately die for a beautiful weeping woman, though they love to swear to that effect sometimes, unless there be some worthier object to be gained by their self-devotion; but whether my idea of this be fanciful or not, whether it be good and logical criticism, I dare not affirm. Dr. Crosby will know. But I dare affirm that the American mother who, to-day being pressed on every side by the aggression of King Alcohol, confronts American men, the motherhood on her brow her only crown, and cries to them for the protection of her Kingdom—the home—carries in her cry an argument, and I dare affirm—for, thank God, it is a spectacle which all may witness—that stalwart warriors pulling from their scabbards trusty swords, admit that cry to be an argument by their answering shout, we will fight for our king, for we all have a king, even doctors.

There is a majesty of right, a royalty of truth which, in manifold forms, claims our allegiance and argues its claim. God sees in the fearful cry of the bruised and baffled mother, sister and wife her own argument for the utter extermination of intoxicating beverages, the suppression, root and branch, of the liquor traffic; and in that cry he makes his argument to men a chancellor's philosophy, grasping in its mighty sapience, cults and science, which we poor women cannot even name, and which have as yet failed to apprehend that chemistry of heaven which distills from a Christian mother's tear the first drop of that mighty gathering storm whose fall and final outbreak shall sweep away forever all refugees of the flesh. The children of Israel sighed by reason of bondage, and their cry reached up unto God, and God remembered his covenant, and God looked upon the children of Israel and had respect unto them.

—Dr. J. B. A. Ahrens has gone to Georgetown, Tex., to attend the commencement exercises of the Southern Western University. He is one of the curators of that institution. Rev. G. W. Briggs will preach the sermon next Sunday, and our special friend, Rev. H. M. DuBose, of Houston, will deliver the annual address.

Preachers and Games.

The question of recreation and rest is an important one to hard working ministers of the gospel of Christ. What shall they do? How shall they rest and recreate?

Some young preachers and some old ones too, play chess, backgammon, draughts, marbles, croquet and the like of that. These things are harmless in themselves, and doubtless preachers might, occasionally, under peculiar circumstances, engage in any or all of these games, without doing any harm and without hurting the cause of Christ; but just a little too much of any one of them in promiscuous company or on the street or at a public play ground compromises the preacher, destroys his power for good and degrades the preacher and his pulpit to the common level. I have known one or two brilliant men who sacrificed their influence as preachers to a passion for chess and marbles. I heard of one preacher who went to his pulpit with his Bible in one hand and a sack of marbles in the other. However innocent a game of marbles may be, the marble yard, in company with dices and dead-heads, is not the best place in the world to get ready for the pulpit. If I were going to church on a week-day and should see the preacher coming from the playground with a Bible in one hand and a sack of marbles in the other, I should fix myself for a slim supply of the gospel in a very dilute form.

The aroma of the closet or silent grove is a much better flavoring for a sermon than the smell of the play ground.

The natural tendency in all these things is to excess, and this tendency is just as manifest in preachers as in any other class. The fact is preachers are made out of dirt just like other people, and some of it is not overly good.

A game of marbles, or chess, or draughts or croquet may be innocent enough in itself, and it may be very silly and simple for anyone to object to a preacher taking part in anyone or all of these games, but if any weak, half-witted brother or sister is offended or made weak by it, the preacher is bound by the law of God to quit it, for his brother's sake. The weakness of a brother appeals to the sympathy of those who are stronger than himself.

The Solomons, among our young people who hold a monopoly of the brains, cultivation and good taste of the church, ought to quit dancing, because dancing is offensive to the poor, old, simple, uncultivated people in the church. Their strength demands this surrender for the sake of the weak.

Any way, neither the Bible nor the Discipline positively requires a preacher to be handy at marbles, or expert at chess or croquet. Entire ignorance of any one or all of these games would be no bar to the ministry, nor to any pastoral charge in the land. Since I have been a presiding elder, I have been earnestly requested several times to have preachers removed because they played chess and croquet too much, or because they hunted birds or fished too much. No body ever asked me to have the preacher moved because he did not play or hunt or fish.

Visiting from house to house, walking, visiting the sick, hunting up the poor and needy, working the garden, cutting fire wood, profitable conversation, helping one's wife or change of work, are some of the kinds of rest and recreation to which no one objects, and from which no ill will come to any one or to the good cause.

Some years ago a good woman was urging me to have the Bishop send her pastor back for another year. She piled the arguments high and strong. At last she said "Why Bro. Porter, I tell you he is the best and most useful man about the house I ever knew, and he is the best hand to worm cabbage I ever saw."

That preacher was never unemployed, and what was more he was always usefully employed. He recreated in the gardens of his parishioners and he helped one or two widows over a pinch in crop time. These were little things, but they made the preacher a mighty man for good in all that country and his name will be as ointment poured forth down to the third generation.

One who kills time kills his own soul with it. Idleness is sin and it is, perhaps, more reprehensible in a preacher than in any one else. It is mighty nice for a preacher to be friendly with the boys and young people, and to be on good terms with them; but too great familiarity will breed contempt in them for you and for your office. It is very well for a preacher to come down to the common level of humanity, but there is no reason why he should sink below it. The pastor ought to plant his feet in the foot prints of Christ and the church ought to follow close behind the pastor.

Now brother preacher, don't say

"poh! poh! nonsense!" or something of that kind; but stop, cool off, ask your wife for some good friend who you ought to do about chess or croquet or marbles or like games. If she says, or your friend says, "stop," why stop. If you must play, why then play at home, in your own yard, back yard at that, with your wife and children and don't go into excess there.

Don't say, "A game of marbles is not as bad as something else." That may be true. A game of chess may not hurt you, might not hurt anybody, but excessive chess playing or marble playing with ungodly men or with Christian men will compromise your influence as a preacher.

I know some good men, good preachers, who are seriously crippled by these things. They are more zealous in their games than they are in their sermons.

GILDEROY.

—A son of Dr. Merle D'Auhlgue, the historian of the Reformation, and who bears his father's name, is engaged in missionary work in the Savoy.

—In the great revival at Shanghai, the rector of the Episcopal Church in that city was converted. He sought real "anxious-bench religion" and found it.

—The Methodist Times calls attention to the fact that the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, the oldest English magazine in existence, having been commenced by John Wesley in 1778. It was then called The Arminian Magazine, and was defined by him as "consisting of extracts and original treatises on Universal Redemption." But the defence of the world-embracing love of God was not the exclusive aim of Wesley. From the beginning he inserted sermons, biographical sketches, anecdotes, papers on natural history, poetry, travels and miscellanies. It is yet one of the finest publications in all the domain of Methodism.

—Senator Colquitt, of Georgia, will deliver the annual address at the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College commencement, June 17.

—Funk & Wagnall, of New York, have our thanks for "The Companion to the Revised Old Testament," by Dr. Talbot W. Chambers. The author was a valued member of the Revision Committee, and is an accomplished scholar and Biblical critic. This volume discusses the use of a revision and the method of making it; then considers the original text of the Old Testament, and follows this with a mention of the changes made, and the reasons for making them. Dr. Schaaf says "It is a convenient and useful manual for ministers and intelligent laymen." It costs only one dollar.

—The June number of The Gospel in All Lands contains an admirable article on missions in Mexico. The pictures of Dr. W. M. Patterson and wife are excellent. This splendid monthly will hereafter be issued from 805 Broadway, New York, as the official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Rev. Eugene R. Smith will continue as editor, and no better could be secured.

—Hwassee College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. J. P. McFerrin, of the Tennessee Conference, at its recent commencement.

—Rev. Dr. W. M. Patterson, superintendent of our Central Mexican mission, is in the States on a short business visit. He spent Sunday last at Brookhaven, Miss., and addressed a large congregation at night on missionary experiences in Mexico. His address was greatly enjoyed.

—It is reported that ten thousand Protestant children are attending Catholic schools in the United States. Alas! for the Protestantism of their parents. The hope of saving a few dollars to tinsy many a child into convent schools. And then the Romanists are shrewd in drilling their pupils for spectacular performances, which always impresses ignorance. Their schools are inferior and their influence essentially hurtful to evangelistic religion.

—Rev. Cadenham Pope has accepted the Presidency of Millersburg Female College. This is thought to be a capital selection.

—Rev. James A. Godfrey, presiding elder of the Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, has been alarmingly ill at Pandling. He was taken sick away from home in the discharge of his duties. His family were summoned by telegraph, and for days little hopes were entertained of his recovery. The last news, however, from Rev. N. B. Harmon, the pastor at Pandling, who is in constant attendance upon him, is more encouraging. It is not thought advisable or probable, however, for him to commence work again. In several weeks. We pray that the old veteran may long be spared to the church.

—Mr. Charles T. Howard, the founder and principal owner of the Louisiana State Lottery, died, Sunday last, at one of his summer homes above New York, on the Hudson. The city papers pronounced eulogies on his great business talents, large charities and various virtues. What these were we know not, but it is a great pity that he could not have survived the lottery iniquity and publicly repented of any connection with it. That he had meritorious qualities we doubt not, but his name will only be remembered in our history as the founder of an immoral institution. His "perpetual conflicts" were with the moral sentiment of the State and country.

—Dr. H. F. Johnson preached at St. Charles Avenue on Sunday morning, and at Louisiana Avenue at night. Bro. Carradine expects to preach with his congregation next Sabbath after an absence of several weeks across the lake.

—The meeting at Louisiana Avenue closed on Friday night last. It lasted in twenty-five consecutive and seventeen accessions to the church. The membership was greatly revived and the work of the year is specially hopeful.

—In another column will be found a notice of a new book, "Sermons and Sayings of Sam Jones," by Dr. J. J. Lafferty. The great Georgia evangelist has a genius for striking and witty sayings, and no man can better appreciate them than the sparkling editor of the Old Road-mound. The volume will only cost fifty cents a copy, and we predict it is a large and rapid sale.

—Bishop Merrill is preparing a book on Methodist Law, intended to be a help to pastors and others in the administration of the Discipline in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

—Dr. H. B. Ridgeway has been elected president of Garrett Bible Institute.

—It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that the firm of Carver & Baker has been dissolved. Bro. Baker has returned to his old Mobile home, where he has lived for so many years. A new firm has been organized under the name of Thos. J. Carver & Co., B. O. L. Payne being the partner. These are excellent Christian gentlemen, and business men of long and honorable standing. We wish them the largest success and do not the association will be mutually advantageous.

—Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker returned from Shreveport on Tuesday, where he has been spending a week or more assisting Dr. Evans in a meeting. He reports ten accessions, a growing interest in the services, and the promise of an extensive revival.

—One thousand have joined the churches in Nashville as the result of the Sam Jones meetings, and at least five hundred more are expected.

Rev. Joshua T. Heard.

It is a benediction to the living to preserve memorials of the home-dead. Our tributes and panegyrics add nothing to the peacefulness of their repose or the splendor of the coronation, but they are helpful and ennobling to us. In recounting their virtues and following their careers, then are begotten within us loftier aspirations and holier purposes. We want to live as they lived, and follow them as they followed Christ.

In all our observation we have known no spiritual life that awakened purer desires and emulation than the subject of this sketch. He was a cheerful, buoyant, joyous religionist, a perennial source of "pure delight" to himself and to all who sought a like precious faith. How many admiring friends have said "I want a religion like Bro. Heard's." His wife, who was his faithful, helpful, sympathetic companion through a long and checked itinerant career, says "I never knew him colder or backslidden. He was always in the full enjoyment of religion, and anxious to save souls."

On the twenty-fourth of November, 1817, in Greene county, Georgia, Joshua T. Heard was born. Though a child of tender sensibilities, and youth of fine moral character, the day of his espousal to Christ was postponed until near his majority. He professed religion while a student at Randolph Macon College in 1835, and as soon as his probation ended was appointed a class-leader. His conversion was vivid in its circumstances and all through life he never doubted its genuineness and thoroughness. No subsequent doubts or trials ever obscured the brightness and glory of that day. After graduation he removed to Jackson, Miss., joined the church, and was soon recommended for admission into the Mississippi Annual Conference.

Bro. Heard's call to preach was less clear and convincing than conversion. He heard the voice of the inaudible. His was a divine call, loud, distinct, authoritative—a call that he could not resist or postpone. And this gave an unctious, earnestness and energy to his ministry that felt no flagging amid the weariness of advancing years. From the heart he sang with Methodism's great master of lyric poetry:

"What we have seen and felt
With confidence we tell."

Every doctrine he preached had to pass the experimental test. Joseph Cook is reported to have said that "one of the supreme proofs that a theology is sound is that it is preach-able." But he rather preached a theology because it was sound and in accord with his individual philosophy. He exalted the validity of consciousness as an infallible source of knowledge, and out of his own rich experience reasoned of righteousness, temperance and a judgment to come. In the fall of 1839 the Mississippi Conference met in the city of Vicksburg, when Joshua T. Heard and several other young men were received on trial. Fully consecrated to the work and fearless of difficulties, he went forth with courageous zeal to preach the word. There were no reservations in his consecration. He freely gave himself and all his powers for life to the office and work of the ministry. And never did he regret that day. After preaching two years in the Mississippi Conference, he transferred to the Alabama Conference and, within its bounds spent the strength of his robust and noble manhood.

In 1842 he was stationed in Columbus, Mississippi, and having completed his ministerial novitiate under the old rule, was married on the 20 of December to the godly woman who cheerfully shared his toils and trials for forty-three years and yet lives to cherish his precious memory. In 1843 and 1844, he was stationed at Eutaw; in 1845 and 1846, at Franklin street, Mobile; then for four years he was presiding elder of Sumnerfield district, when it reached from above Wetumpka, Ala., to Pensacola, Fla. And thus in station, district and mission work, filling the most responsible and difficult positions, he labored with quenchless zeal and gallant success. When the General Conference of 1870 delimited and readjusted certain Annual Conference boundaries, he became again a member of the Mississippi Conference and remained on its effective list to the day of his peaceful death.

In 1871-2, he was stationed in Vicksburg and in succeeding years was appointed to Meridian, Brookhaven, Enterprise, Pearlburg and Brandon. He had just returned from Conference at Yazoo City and begun his second year's pastorate at Brandon, when the summons came and he entered his Master's joy. His last sermon was preached in Shubuta, whither he had gone to spend the Christmas holidays with his daughter, and to attend to some private business. The subject was "Consecration" and most earnestly did he exhort the congregation to a higher and holier life during the coming year. Monday night he spent with Bro. DuBois, a few miles in the country, and arose the next morning to usual health. In a little while however he felt faint and died within an hour—before medical assistance could be summoned. His death was in accord with his oft-repeated desire—that he might "die in the harness"—cease at once to work and live.

Bro. Heard had a genial, emotional nature which enabled him to carry much of sunshine and sympathy in to his ministry. This also gave color and character to his preaching. He was hortatory in style rather than exegetical. For metaphysical definitions and discussion he had neither talent nor taste. His was an eminently practical mind and bent on immediate results. He excelled in exhortation. Seizing some salient truth, he pressed it upon the conscience of his congregation with an intense solicitude, that often resulted in marked demonstrations. At camp-meetings he was in demand, and was a leader of the Lord's hosts. In the altar he sang, prayed, and exhorted as could few men we ever heard. When his tremulous voice rang out above the loud chorus, leading some old Methodist battle-hymn, and occasionally ejaculating an "amen!" or "Bless God!" the effect was often electrical.

In public prayer he had a remarkable gift. He talked to his Lord as friend to friend. And there was a breadth and variety to his petitions, and a richness to his unctious and earnestness of utterance peculiar to himself, that moved with power vast congregations. You could not feel that he was prevailing with God. The soul was uplifted on the sweeping tide of his joyous faith, and heaven seemed in the very midst. In many pulpits where his sermons may be forgotten, his prayers linger in perpetual fragrance. A man of mighty faith was Joshua T. Heard, and he was called of God to pray. Bro. Heard's genial spirit made him the friend of the young. They were never abashed in his presence, but gladly sought his company. He had a ringing, merry laugh, a rich fund of anecdote and a ready sympathy with young life, that gave him access to that class in his congregations. They were his warm co-laborers in all church work. And at conference and other occasions he was often selected to address the children. Mr. Sturgeon graphically describes a wooden image of St. Zeno, an ancient bishop which stands or sits in a church at Verona, with knees so short that there is no lap on which a babe could be dandled. The great preacher, with his well-known homiletical genius, makes this image type a class of preachers who are incapable of being nursing fathers to the Lord's little ones. No such a pastor was Joshua T. Heard. He loved children and among them found many of the richest jewels of his successful ministry.

He loved to devotion his brethren in the ministry. Often have we heard him rejoice that he had a place in such a noble band and prayed that he might die in the active work. He took pride in the development of young men and encouraged them in their labors. We never heard from him an unkind criticism of a brother, either in the pulpit or in private conversation, but always words of commendation and appreciation.

His home life was happy and beautiful. There was the most unreserved personal intercourse, and the joy of one member of the household was the pleasure of all. He had the reverence of his family, without any expression of authority or austerity. And the hospitality of his home was unbounded. No preacher was allowed to visit the community where he lived, without sitting at his bountiful board. How lonely is that faithful circle, now that the saintly husband and father is gone! Noble life, toilsome ministry, peaceful death. We will all miss his sunny face and warm hand-grasp at conference, but his precious memory abides. In sure and certain hope of a blessed resurrection we lay this flower on his honored grave.

The Holly Springs District Conference, as announced by Bro. Barcroft, will convene at Mt. Pleasant, Miss., July 17. I would be glad if those who expect to bring their wives, would inform me at once. Any one coming by rail should get off at Collierville, Tenn., M. & C. R. R., from which point, if they will let me know they are coming, conveyance will be furnished.

Books and Periodicals.

—Christian Thought, for June, is a capital number. We rejoice to know that a periodical of such dignity and worth is gaining ground among the most cultivated people. The new volume will begin with the next number. It is published at 4 Winthrop Place, New York, and edited by Rev. Dr. Deans.

GENERAL GORDON, THE CHRISTIAN HERO. 12 mo. $1.25. T. Y. Crowell & Co., 131 Canal St., New York.

A wonderful man was Gen. Gordon, and this is a thrilling story of his remarkable career. It reads like a tale of chivalry. Arthur and the Round Table has no more blameless knight. He met death bravely and his memory is cherished with more than patriotic pride. This edition contains a portrait from a photograph taken at Khartoum.

—Cassell's Family Magazine, for June, continues the interesting story of "A Diamond in the Rough." Illustrated. Its other articles are: "The Balloon of the Future," "An Evening with Sir Walter Scott," "The Forger's Forgery," "Arm Chair's Ancient and Modern," "Sweet Christabel," "An American Prison," "A Tale Told under the Snow," "What to Wear," "The Gatherer," etc. New York. $1.50 a year.

—The Century Magazine, for June, is on our table. The leading article is on the three Horneys, and his portrait of Sir John, William and Caroline. There is a second paper on the New Orleans Exposition. A Florentine Mosaic, Still-Hunting the Grizzly, and Orchids are beautifully illustrated papers. The "war series," containing articles by John Brown at Harper's Ferry, Stonewall Jackson in the Shenandoah, and the Battle of Gettysburg, grows in interest. The continued stories and the editorial departments are excellent. The Century Co., New York.

In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

CARVER & JAMIESON,

Publishers.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Kirtis Allen & Bro., Fifth & Vine Sts., Cincinnati, O., and J. A. Sauer, 100 N. Main St., New York, to receive all orders for the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

"Was Rome founded by Romeo?" Inquired a pupil of a teacher. "No, my son," replied the wise man. "It was Juliet who was found dead by Romeo."

The signature which should be the plainest part of a letter is frequently the most illegible. An Encripator who would help to remedy the defect.

An agricultural journal says "Spring is the best time in the year to move bees." It may be, but if it is so, why in the fall, don't wait until the spring to move it.

If there is life left in the bulls, Parker's Hair Balsam will promote a new growth of hair. It costs but little to try it.

A minister forgot to take his sermon with him to church, and his wife, discovering the mistake sent it to him in charge of a small boy, who was to receive ten cents for the job. Presently he returned for the money. "You delivered the sermon, did you?" she asked. "No, ma'am," he replied. "I left it to him; he's a deliverer of it him self."

Among the advertisements of the New Orleans, recently and lately, which came in last week, I have from John L. G. Broussau, of Beauregard, Miss. He took them for a severe cold and loss of voice with pains and approaching pneumonia. The cure was perfect. He adds: "As a preventive and restorer of a diseased liver, it is unequalled." He took both oil.

W. C. Shepard sells dinner and tea sets, refrigerators, bath tubs, ice boxes and cream freezers.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone P. O., Pickens county, Ala., having on her mind the ADVOCATE of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having closed the sale for one of those lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $75, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein invites all when visiting the city to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pleasure in showing, even if you do not desire to buy. He has the celebrated Mathew, Behring, Mason & Hamlin and Hale pianos at very low prices and on the easiest terms. Old pianos repaired or taken in exchange for a new one. Good second-hand pianos at low prices.

CHANGERS.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change cannot be made.

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE please keep this in remembrance.

Press the ADVOCATE circulation now.

For all points in Texas and California take the Southern Pacific and Star and Crescent via Houston.

THE GREAT JACKSON ROUTE.—Is the favorite to all summer resorts. It has been rebuilt with steel rails; has adopted the standard gauge with a well ballasted track, and increased speed. They offer the advantages of fast time, through cars, sure connections, and accommodating officers.

Notice to subscribers who order their address changed. Please give full address of last Postoffice, otherwise change cannot be made.

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend for the next year and you will not regret it.

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

Send fifteen cents in stamps for a copy of Kendall's Treatise on the Horse.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MANSFIELD, La., May 27.—The local election is waxing hot. The registration books and the poll books for three local option wards were stolen last night. One registration book, with all the names torn out, was found on Rev. R. J. Harp's gate. This insult to Mr. Harp caused much indignation. The poll books for the longest whisky wards were let alone.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 27.—She Theodore Thomas Concert troupe, which arrived this afternoon, report that their special train was boarded at Coolidge, N. M., by a band of cowboys, who, with drawn revolvers, made the musicians play and made Materna sing. The musicians began playing "Home, Sweet Home," but the cowboys, who were "The Arkansas Traveller," out of the troupe, gave them what they wanted. Materna complained of a headache, but the cowboys would not take no for an answer. Just as she was beginning to comply with their request the engine whistled. The cowboys jumped off and fired a volley as the train moved off.

ATCHISON, Kan., May 27.—Cyclones visited Nortonville, Goffs and Frankfort, in northeastern Kansas, between 10 and 12 o'clock this forenoon, doing a great deal of damage to property. No one was killed, but of the injured Mrs. Mayer will probably die from the effect of a skull fracture, Miss Mayer from the effect of internal injuries and George from the effects of internal injuries. At Frankfort the cloud formed in plain view of the town, about two and one-quarter miles to the southwest and struck at 10:40.

WACO, Tex., May 28.—All previous accounts of the violence of the storm in this city and county are overshadowed by the rain tornado last night, lasting from 7 to 10 o'clock. The rainfall was considerably heavy, and did not cease till this morning. Waco creek, a small stream which flows through the western and southern limits of the city and has a broad valley, was swollen as early as 10 p. m. Hundreds of residences dot its banks on either side; these were all inundated. Scenes of terror and confusion ensued. In the midst of the storm the people deserted their homes and fled in places of safety. T. Dinninghoff, a plumber, with his wife and three small children, remained in their house; it was washed away and went to pieces, and the whole family was drowned. Their bodies were found this morning and interred this evening. Howard Lewis (colored), his wife, sister and three children, living on the Teapucans, a small stream east of the city, lost their lives in the same manner. This makes eleven victims, and unconfirmed reports state that live others were lost.

The Brazos river rose rapidly, passing all the rises this year and reaching twenty-two inches beyond the great rise last year. All the bottom lands, comprising the finest cotton plantations in the State, are inundated. The losses in this way in this county will be at least $200,000. On the prairies the grain crop is utterly destroyed. In East Waco, a portion of which had already been inundated three days, the scenes last night and to-day beggar description. All night long, while the storm raged, the work of removing the women and children went on by the light of lanterns. No lives were lost there. Every store there is flooded and deserted and several buildings washed away.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The question of reopening the exposition has been considered by the Cabinet, and they are unanimously of the opinion that there is no warrant of law for it, and that it would be inexpedient on other grounds.

NEW YORK, May 28.—The steamer City of Rome, of the anchor line, reached here to-day having on board besides her 1821 regular passengers two French fishermen, survivors of the French fishing bark George Jones, which was wrecked on the banks of Newfoundland on May 27. The ill-fated bark after she was struck sank in less than a minute, carrying down with her twenty-four men, only two of whom were saved.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Miss., May 30.—The first shipment of peaches was made to-day. They sold at $1.50 per third-bushel box. The vegetable crop and corn is suffering for rain. Cotton is doing well.

SOME CROWNED, OTHERS CALLED.

BY W. L. C. H.

Some where along the lapse of days,

While some shall blame and some shall praise,

The servant shall have finished all,

The Son shall hear the Father's call.

Some where amid the circling years,

Full measure here by smiles and tears,

The teller shall have done his part,

And live shall soothe the weeping heart.

Some where adown the doubtful way,

Overlaid with darkness or with day,

The Master shall the traveler stop,

That faithful one, come higher up!

Some where beyond faith's sea of rest,

Where all who reach it shall be blest,

Where all that seek shall find repose,

And peace begin a new abode.

While ministers of the gospel are being called with unwonted frequency from their posts of duty among us to their heavenly reward, others are being inducted into the solemn responsibilities of the sacred office. William M. Sullivan and George

H. Willis were recently licensed to preach by the Foreknowledge of God.

BY REV. ANSON DOWLING.

That God foreknows all things the word of revelation teaches. It teaches this doctrine in at least three ways: 1. In using the word foreknowledge as expressive of the understanding of God in regard to all future events whether moral or natural; 2. As expressive of his superiority over all other gods. "Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods;" 3. In foretelling events which did come to pass. These several points are involved in revelation by prophecy. These all show that God understands everything however complex and however contingent.

Now, if God foreknows everything before it comes to pass, many believe that it must of necessity come to pass or God did not foreknow it. Therefore, if God foresees that A. will go to hell and B. will go to heaven, it must come to pass as foreseen. It is further affirmed that in foreseeing the final end of A. and B. God foresees their lives also. Hence they must have lived as foreseen or there had been defect in the foreknowledge of God. Therefore they conclude that God foresees whatever he foreordains. Hence he foreordains everything which comes to pass.

This presentation of the doctrine of foreknowledge takes away the liberty and freedom of God himself. It binds him absolutely to his own foreordination. It not only takes freedom from God Almighty, but it takes away all moral agency and freedom from man himself. When A. robbed and killed his neighbor he did simply what he could not help doing. When the court convicted A. of murder and sentenced him to be hung, it in effect convicted God of murder, because he ordained the deed from before the foundation of the world, having foreseen it. When B. repented and believed the gospel, and afterward preached the gospel of election and reprobation to the multitudes he ought to have felt that he was doing the will of God no more than his fellow, B. in robbing and killing, because he was just doing that which was ordained to be. Therefore A. and B. both do the will of God equally. If both do the will of God equally, both stand equally related to God in absolute justice, and are entitled to rewards of the same approbation. In this light John Calvin says that "righteousness flows from election" and "sin flows from reprobation." Then God does whatever comes to pass, and to punish sin and bless righteousness will pull down heaven and blow out hell.

When scripturally understood, the doctrine of divine knowledge is very full of abiding and sweet comfort. It maintains the infinite freedom of the Almighty and confers high dignity upon man, putting him in the proper sphere of moral agency and freedom. It is true that God does foreknow whatever does come to pass, however complex and contingent. However, it is true that the foreknowledge of an event is not the cause of it. This doctrine is true in its broadest possible sweep in time and eternity. While it is true that God foreknows whatever comes to pass, he also foresees what does not come to pass, and the foreseeing an event before it comes to pass may prevent or hinder its coming to pass. This relates to the foreknowledge of God in regard to sinful events. It is no more impossible for God to foresee events that may not come to pass than those that will come to pass. In this light and belief we pray unto God and become the beneficiaries of his wisdom. This was the faith and practice of King David. When he went to Kellah to save it he went to save himself from this fierce wrath of Saul. But becoming doubtful about the fidelity of the man of Kellah he prayed to God, saying, "Will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard?" And the Lord said, "He will come down." Then said David, "Will the men of Kellah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul?" And the Lord said, "They will deliver thee up." "Then David and his men * * * arose and departed out of Kellah. * * * And Saul * * * forbore to go forth." Let it be remembered that God said to David, "Saul will come down." The event was foreseen. And that the men of Kellah would deliver up David and his men into the hand of Saul. The event was foreseen. Did they come to pass? They did not. Why did not Saul go down to Kellah? Why did not the men of Kellah deliver up David? Because God foresees these events, and told David of the matter in answer to faith and prayer, and David arose and fled. So, then, these events were contingent because involved in the moral agency of responsible men, and the foreknowledge of God did not destroy their free moral agency. Other Bible facts could be given.

Instead of being compelled to commit sin in belief of the doctrine of God's foreknowledge, I am freed from sin. As God foresees my pathway and the dangers thereof, I receive benefit and protection by calling upon him in faith. If my God had no more knowledge of the future than I have, I would not trust in him. But I can safely trust him as my rock, my fortress, my deliverer and my salvation.

Called of God into the ministry, sent by the presiding Bishop to a circuit or station, at home in the parsonage and actually in the field of his year's labors, we may suppose that the itinerant is a man of one work, seeking only the glory of God and set as a flint for the saving of souls. So he should be, and so, doubtless, he thinks he is; still his indulges in occasional trading, horse swapping, land speculating, or turns his hand off and on in some other purely worldly channel, hoping to do full work for God and yet make a few hundreds to help out the meagre support this people give him. He is a man of fine natural parts and some culture. He is looked upon as a growing man who has a future of great usefulness and honor in the church. Such would be his future did he not give himself occasionally to the venture that is sure to pay, or to the swapping of animals in which he generally gets the advantage, or to the purchase of acres that are to yield fine crops or a large advance when sold, or to some other worldly solicitation requiring much of his thought, time and personal attention. These side-track ventures by which he seeks to make something extra for wife and children take up much of that thought that should be given to the subject-matter of his sermons and to the grand principles that must be thoroughly studied and mastered by him in order that he may intelligently work for souls. Thus his time is largely absorbed in that which is in no way conducive to his advancement in spirituality, his effectiveness in the pulpit or his performance of his varied and numerous pastoral duties. His mind is busy with the things of this world and his heart is more concerned for the temporalities of life than is needful or proper in a man set apart to the one work of soul saving. His anxiety about a support, leading him to take this matter out of God's hands and to engage in these speculative ventures that catch his eye, has the inevitable tendency of weakening his faith and rendering him just that much inefficient as a workman for God. Beyond doubt his efforts to make his own living or rather to add to that he receives as God's minister, when as an itinerant he has fully acceded to the Bible doctrine that the man who preaches the gospel should live by the gospel, tend to a practical distrust of God who has engaged to support and sustain him. The speculating, trading, horse-swapping itinerant preacher, having his eye ever on the watch for a paying venture, gives the thought and time and personal effort that belongs to God to the worldly advancement of himself and his faith, spirituality and ministerial character suffer while the flock over whom he has been placed do not get the strong, feeding sermons they ought to have from him nor does he have the time to spare from his secular interests that is needful for the discharge of his full duty in the all-important matter of pastoral visitation and oversight. Such a brother has surely forgotten what he answered the Bishop when at his ordination as elder he was asked, along with certain other very solemn and comprehensive questions, this one: "Will you be diligent in prayers and in reading of the Holy Scriptures, and in such studies as help to the knowledge of the same, laying aside the study of the world and the flesh?"

The words of Paul to Timothy are a fitting exhortation to every Methodist itinerant who hinders himself and enfeebles his work by his worldly spirit and ways: "Thou, therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier."

"From All Unholy or Common Uses."

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed find a clipping from one of our State papers containing an account of an "interesting literary entertainment" given by the press convention of Mississippi, on the evening of the thirteenth, in the Methodist Church at Water Valley.

To quote from the article: "The decorations of the church by the fair daughters of Water Valley were elaborate and beautiful, and evidenced a display of superior taste. Festoons, arches, pendants and appropriate mottoes (not for the church, but for the occasion, as I understand it,) of evergreen, bedecked with rare flowers, met the eyes at every point."

Then following a prayer are addresses of welcome, poem recitals, orations, essays, some of which met with hearty encores. All very beautiful, interesting or humorous, no doubt, and appropriate to the occasion.

The reading of this article has impelled me, through the medium of your paper, to express my profound astonishment that one of our churches should have been so desecrated. That it is a desecration, I refer you to the letter and spirit of the ceremonies attending the consecration of a building to be devoted to the worship of God, and doubly consecrated by the sweet memories of religious services away back from the hour we, as children, first received the impressions of our holy Christianity to the time when, perhaps, we were first made sensible of the necessity of a change of heart and accepted the divine invitation to come to Jesus. Or, perhaps, the one dearest our hearts had been laid before its altars to receive the last sad yet beautiful rites that Christianity offers her dead. That a church of God so holy and consecrated in our hearts, by such overwhelmingly tender reminiscences, should be made the scene of wit and humor heartily encored, merits in my humble opinion a strong protest and just rebukes at the hands of our church authorities! There has been a growing feeling miscalled liberality in our church in this direction which, unless checked, may bring it down from its present high standard to the level of a town hall. Secular organizations, temperance unions, popular meetings of almost every description find ready admittance to the doors of the Methodist Church. The world soon loses the respect they at first involuntarily pay to its sacredness, but presently something is done or said which brings reproach upon this church and causes grief to the hearts of those to whom her fair name is as the apple of the eye. Some may argue that the loan of our temples will cause the church to become popular with the masses and may bring them after awhile within its fold. This is a grievous error. Man naturally seeks a higher standard than his own thoughts and deeds, and the world can only be made purer and better by being drawn up to a higher level, and not by lowering the banner of the church militant to be trampled in the mire of popular opinion. It is casting our pearls before swine. Think you, Mr. Editor, the shades of Wesley or Whitfield would have looked with satisfaction and commendation on the (appropriate) mottoes and heard with pleasure the loud encores to the "Ticket of Leave" or "Asleep at the Switch"? If not, I ask that you open this matter for discussion and correction, and I shall feel abundantly repaid for having ventured from the privacy of a layman to present this subject as it appears to me.

Questions Theological.

MR. EDITOR: Does the Bible teach that Christ's sufferings, as a vicarious sacrifice for the sins of our race, were infinite? Does it teach that his sufferings even approximated the sufferings of all mankind even if all were eternally lost? Does it teach that he suffered even as much mental anguish and bodily pain as those (en masse) do who are lost? Does it not teach the infinite merit of finite mental anguish and physical pain as the redemption price of man's salvation conditioned on faith in God through the merit of these sufferings?

1. Christ's mind was a real, human mind; and, therefore, not competent to infinite anguish.
2. His body was a real, human body; and, therefore, not competent to infinite sufferings.
3. If his anguish of mind and bodily sufferings were infinite in degree, they were not infinite in duration.
4. If they were infinite, then God requires the infinite sufferings of Christ and the eternal sufferings of the lost both; whereas, if Christ had not suffered, the sinner only would have suffered, hence Christ's sufferings for the lost are a work of supererogation.

5. Could God be just in damning a sinner when his infinite love had been satisfied by infinite suffering?

6. If Christ's anguish and sufferings were infinite in degree, is not universal salvation the legal result? It seems to me that the doctrine of the Bible is, that Christ's humanity was offered a finite sacrifice on the altar of his divinity giving it infinite merit (the altar sanctifying the gift) available only by those who believe with a heart unto righteousness. Doubtless the exalted character of his mental and nervous nature enabled him to suffer both mentally and physically more than any other being could suffer while passing through the same ordeals. But the finite can not in the nature of things suffer infinitely; finite suffering offered by divinity may have infinite merit.

Short Articles.

BY T. A. S. A.

I was once sent as pastor to a charge where brethren and sisters gave me a good deal of advice in the way of quarterage. As I was young then and needed advice more than quarterage I took it and let the church off with a hundred dollars shortage on my assessment. The advice was various and valuable in many ways that I do not propose to mention. I give now that which some gave in reference to one another. There were four prominent laymen whom I will call, Judge Grip, Capt. Nip, Col. Rip and Mr. Slip. I wanted a man to lead class, and being in Judge Grip's office asked him as to Col. Rip. He replied that the colonel was a good man for anything but class leader. Everybody liked Col. Rip, but the colonel always swore on election days and in money settlements. How was Capt. Nip? Some said the captain sold too many pounds out of one barrel of rice. He did not think so, for rice would absorb water in damp weather, when Nip was not to blame. Still people complained of him—it would not do to make him leader. And Mr. Slip? Why, people had no confidence in Slip—he magnified things. Bro. Slip was not an intentional liar—no, Judge Grip knew that, and he was too good a friend to Slip; but if Bro. Slip went into a crowd on the street after class, he would stop to swap yarns with every one and he was sure to have the longest. I went round to Bro. Tip in order to find out how Judge Grip would do. "His name and his practices agree too well," replied Bro. Tip; "he squeezes a quarter till the eagle squalls." I took a week seeing all of them about Bro. Tip, and had as the verdict that if Bro. T. would leave off his tea he would spit to a T. I tried leading the class myself. When the year was out all said to the presiding elder that I was a good man and everybody liked me; but they all loved the church and a change was necessary to the prosperity of Zion. The presiding elder thought so too, and I am half inclined to think so myself.

It has often puzzled me to know how it invariably happened that when there were two calls to preach made to the same preacher, Providence would direct him to the congregation that had the best record for pay.

"I have no pleasure in them." A violinist, the friend of Ole Bull, with Ole Bull's violin in his hand, said substantially: "I have been playing fifty-two years before the public. I have learned to perform on nearly all kinds of instruments. Of these I prefer the violin, because it is a perfect instrument. If one string breaks I can play on three, if three break I can play on the single one any tune that I play on four. Again, the violin improves with age. This one which I hold in my hand was made over three centuries ago. But it is better now than when it left the maker's hand. Not so with the hand that I hold it or the man that plays it. I feel my fingers stiff, my eyes dim, my steps heavy and my wife never hears me play for my own amusement. I play for money now, but I take no pleasure in the music. My life depends on my profession, yet I am looking eagerly forward to the time when I shall lay aside the violin forever." How deep the pathos in these words! Seventy-two years old and the life work and the life love a burden! Yet sadder to feel now that the necessities of life press him to the work. Surely there is a lesson in it to us in the choice of our life pursuits. All our noblest plans are projected upon a plane where interest grows with the years. The soul is the Master's violin. If properly kept, the music evoked from it from this haud divine grows sweeter with the ages. Sweet as is the cooling of the cherub in the orrery, sweeter for the fervent "Jesus lover of my soul," from the tempest tossed of care. Sweeter still the refrain of the dying saint, "O come, angel hand;" but who can conceive the ravishing melodies of the song of Moses and the lamb sung by the choir of immortals who crossed the flood ages ago! "My wife never hears me play now." What toiling preacher or aged lover of Jesus ever says "My family never hear me in my praises?" Better, infinitely better, is the Christian's choice. Sweeter all through life grow the songs of Zion, and he who has learned the true service of his Master never proposes to retire.

Prohibition in Winona.

The following was kindly sent us by Rev. W. S. Lagrone. It speaks for itself with convincing eloquence: Having made a careful estimate of the commercial and business status of Winona, we are convinced that the operation of the prohibitory liquor law has not reduced the amount of legitimate business usually transacted here in the same length of time, at the same season of the year, while we are satisfied that the business relations between all parties are standing upon a more pleasant and satisfactory basis.

The improvement in the moral aspect of the community is perhaps more universal and decided than could have been anticipated by the most sanguine supporter of prohibition.

Peace and contentment reign within our borders. The streets are quiet and orderly at all hours of day and night. The duties of the city marshal sit lightly upon his shoulders.

The record of the mayor's court exhibits a most gratifying testimony that the spirit of violence, crime and misdemeanor is forsaking its stronghold and retreating to a kindred atmosphere and more congenial clime.

The Sunday-schools are filling up while the Christian zeal and work manifest in our midst is unprecedented in extent and earnestness.

Some intelligent gentlemen who honestly opposed the suppression of whisky on business principles are beginning to give in their assent to the satisfactory solution of the question which is being daily worked out before their eyes.

Three Commencements in One Week.

BY REV. W. G. BLACK.

MR. EDITOR: An engagement to address the graduating class at Millwood and preach the commencement sermon at Centenary, gave me an opportunity recently to visit that beautiful little town, Jackson, La. I was there just a week, and a delightful week it was. During that time I attended the commencement exercises of the three literary institutions located there, viz: Centenary College, Millwood Institute and East Feliciana Female Institute. All these were enjoyable occasions, and were largely attended. East Feliciana Female Institute, presided over by Miss Catlett, turned out two graduates, whose essays were very fine. The music, the calisthenics and the declamations were also good. Millwood graduated four fair Louisianians. Their essays evinced an extensive acquaintance with the rhetorical art. The undergraduates also acquitted themselves well. Without disparagement of other schools, I wish to say that for thorough instruction, firm discipline and home-like supervision no institution of learning among us surpasses Millwood Institute under the management of its present talented and accomplished principal, Miss McAlmont. The literary exercises at Centenary were, many of them, of a high order. If some of the pupils of that institution do not achieve honorable distinction and make their impress upon the world, it will be for some other cause than want of ability. This remark applies not only to the graduating class, but to others. President Adams is growing upon the pupils and the citizens of the town at a rapid rate. Considering the brevity of his presidency, his hold upon his pupils is wonderful. The buildings present a much better appearance than at my last visit, three years since—especially the chapel. The crowds in attendance were immense. Oh, that some liberal soul would do for our beloved Centenary what Seney did for Emory!

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS. REV. J. T. SAWYER.
REV. W. L. O. HUNNICUTT.

THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 1885.

The commencements have commenced.

The Bishops have a special message to the churches this week. "He that hath an ear, let him hear."

We have a capital Texas letter from Dr. J. R. A. Ahrens, on file for next week. It came too late for this issue.

The news from the churches is thrilling. Revivals are many and glorious. Not in years have we known such a season of refreshing. And some of these outpourings began at the District Conferences. From that mount of transfiguration experiences the brethren went home with shining faces and mighty faith. Let every pastoral charge receive a blessing this year.

As we go to press there seems to be a crisis in English politics. The government was defeated in an important measure and the resignation of the Gladstone ministry is possible. As the general election takes place next fall a dissolution of parliament may not be required. Should the Conservatives succeed to power, their tenure of office will be brief under the fiery leadership of such a man as Lord Randolph Churchill or the stilted imperiousness of Sir Stafford Northcote.

We are glad to see some journals secular and religious condemn the "unsightly" but common habit of young ladies allowing their escorts to hold their arms in evening walks. The old custom bequeathed by our ancestors of the lady taking the arm of the gentleman has been reversed, and now are witnessed scenes of disgusting immodesty and familiarity. We have no language to express our abhorrence of this now common practice, and we call upon parents to forbid it and young people to quit it. Young ladies suffer in the sacred and stainless esteem they should be held, by tolerating such familiarity. We know it is thoughtless conformity to a custom, and we also know it is an opportunity to heed the scriptural warning against "following the multitude to do evil." This is a fashion more honored in opposing than observing.

We claim the great Methodist privilege of "exhorting" after the pastoral address of the Bishops, published in another column. Our chief pastors have their eyes upon the whole church and its every department of service. The occasion, therefore, must be important and urgent, when they issue a special appeal. Pastors will greatly relieve the immediate demands of our treasury by sending forward collections at once. At several District Conferences brethren have reported that the entire missionary assessment has been subscribed. If those subscriptions, could be at once converted into cash, it would be well. Our missions are all prosperous—exceeding indeed the relative growth of the home church. It is too much for the Southern Methodist Church with nearly a million members to raise $265,000 for missions one year? It is a small request, but such an offering would crown the church with glory.

In the Northwestern Christian Advocate we find the following:

In the remarkable essay upon the hog which appeared in the New York Christian Advocate last week the Editor omitted all description of the Southern animal, which lives by himself, feeding on acorns. Also he omitted Charles Lamb's epistolary essay on roast pig, which might have been set over against Adam Clarke's left-hand blessing of the pig. The hog in Florida is but a hog in name. It is thug, lank, long-tailed, long-souled, and unhappy. The Lake Funiak Association have fenced their grounds with strong, high pickets, so close together as to shut out any pig of proper proportions; but the Southern pig is so thin that he percolates through every-where, and feeds upon the thrown-out food of private houses, grunting and rooting under all kitchen and dining room doors, and under the school-house, where he picks up, with loud grunts, the remnants of the children's lunches. The historical review of the hog, and his relations to literature and divinity, published in the Advocate, is too pessimistic for the latitude of Chicago.

That's nothing—It is said an old farmer had some hogs, that were so attenuated he had to tie knots in their tails to keep them from slipping through the pickets.

Pastoral Address of the Bishops.

To the preachers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

DEAR BRETHREN: By request of the Board of Missions we call your attention to the condition and wants of our missions.

We congratulate you upon the advance made in every department of our work, at home and abroad. Large accessions have been made to our members, and there has been a marked increase in the number of our church buildings and parsonages. Many desolate places have been supplied with the gospel and the ministrations of the church, and have become self-supporting charges. During the past year centennial contributions to local uses have very materially enhanced our resources and freed many a struggling church from embarrassment of debt. At the beginning of the current year we stand in better attitude than ever before in our history. We rejoice in the belief that this gain is not altogether on the temporal side, but indicates growth in grace, a deeper knowledge of our Lord and faith in his purposes, and intenser resolve to see those purposes accomplished.

In our foreign work the forward movement has kept pace with that at home. Obstacles have been removed, access to the people has become easy, and ways have been opened in every direction for the introduction of our gospel. Our missionaries, faithful in every extremity, have labored diligently to answer the multiplying calls made upon them. The wonder is that they have done so much with the limited supplies furnished them. They have borne patiently the oft-repeated refusals and delays in responding to their urgent entreaties for men and money, and, under straitened circumstances, have continued to extend the boundaries of their work and to advance their enterprises to supply the great need of the people.

The Board of Missions has gone as far as it dared, without more emphatic and practical sanction of the church, in its provision for the work. Year after year it has declined undertakings of great moment lest it should overburden the church. Last year large contingent grants were made in the hope that the inspiration of the centennial of Methodism in this country would move the hearts of many to give expression in this unselfish form to their gratitude to God. The tide of centennial effort turned homeward, and, while local interests were largely served, the Board was compelled to withdraw a painfully appreciable amount of its contingent appropriations. More than that, it was felt necessary to make a heavy reduction upon the regular appropriations, bringing them much below the amount conceded to be necessary to maintain the work at its present standing. Progress for this year seems to be impossible. Moved by strong appeal to send our gospel to other regions, unprovided with any missionary agencies, we are constrained to narrow our limits and repress our undertakings.

These things ought not so to be. With well-nigh a million of members, and immense and rapidly increasing wealth, we are fully equal to any call from God and dying men. We ask nothing extravagant or unreasonable. What we require for this work is far less in amount than is wasted in useless luxury or hurtful self-indulgence. Nor will any plea exonerate us from our responsibility. In this, as in all things else, we must submit to the judgment of the God who trieth the hearts of men.

We exhort you, brethren, by your love to the Lord Jesus Christ and his church, that ye be not slothful in this business. Look into your personal accounts with God and see that they be settled according to his word, the standard of judgment. Let every one of our preachers strive to secure, by faithful teaching and exhortation, the sum which his charge owes on this account; not blinding himself or them to the minimum requirement of the assessment, but trying them by truer measures of Christian devotion and liberality.

We beseech our laymen, who have in their control the money of the church of God, that they devise liberal things that by them they may stand; that every one give according as the Lord hath prospered him, not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. Shall the church's arm be paralyzed by your illiberal treatment of God's cause, and men die for want of the bread of life which you may give them?

Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be made rich.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

Signed in behalf of the College of Bishops.

H. N. M'YRE, Pres.
R. K. HARRISON, Sec.

Sardis District Conference.

This Conference met in the pretty and pleasant town of Sardis—the shire-town of the wealthy and productive county of Panola—on the morning of June 3. We reached the place at the early hour of seven and found the pastor, our special friend Dr. T. C. Wier, at the depot, to extend a cordial welcome, and assign us to the hospitable home of Capt. D. G. Pepper. The District Conference was called to order by Rev. C. N. Terry, the presiding elder, at 9 o'clock and Bro. Jno. A. Hooper was elected secretary. The Conference began well. There was a most festive spiritual interest—hymns were joyously sung and the prayers were fervent and fragrant. After perfecting the organization and the appointment of a few committees, the opening sermon was preached by the Rev. J. H. Brooks, the honored veteran of the district. The old soldier put on the vigor of youth and closed with a shout of praise. There was a quiver of power in his peroration and many hearts rejoiced.

The reports of pastors were altogether cheering. Although two successive crop failures have embarrassed the financial prosperity of that rich and beautiful district, there is an improvement in reports over last year. The pastors are better paid and the connectional collections well advanced. Special inquiry was made into the family religious life of the church, the conduct of church conferences, the work of the Sunday-school and the growth of temperance and prohibition sentiment. Presiding Elder Terry is an active man, and magnifies his office in a careful supervision of his district and cheerful co-operation with his preachers.

Some observations we made were especially gratifying. The laymen were pronounced in their advocacy of old Methodist methods. They discussed freely the best places of pastoral administration, and while honoring the under shepherd's office, were not slow to speak of possible delinquencies. Such jealousy for the integrity of old usages argues well for the perpetuity of our former glory. Then, again, the pastors were full of revival fire, and earnestly coveted the best gifts of our apostolic Methodist fathers. They labor to save souls and to develop a distinctive church life among our people. We lose much by neglect at this point. Many of our members never learn the differentiating features and doctrines of Methodism. And in our boast of a broad liberality, we minimize the great salient, and distinguishing facts in the history, polity and creed of Methodism which has made the last century almost a perpetual miracle. We no longer need to apologize for being Methodist. God has wrought too wondrously for us and by us, not to honor our great church.

We were gratified at the strong and stirring reports of the brethren on the temperance question. The paper read by Rev. E. B. Ramsey on Friday afternoon rang out the sentiment of the Conference as clear as a clarion. In their attitude to that great moral issue, even Bishop Thompson could not complain of any lack of vertebrae.

Most profoundly do we appreciate the privilege accorded us of presenting the claims of the ADVOCATE, and the cordial resolutions passed endorsing its editorial conduct. Nowhere have we found warmer friends of the paper, and we feel quite sure that in that district we will have a largely increased subscription list. A copy of the resolutions will be found in this issue.

The song of the locust is heard in all that land. From early morning to twilight, there is a ceaseless metallic, absorbing or drowning all other voices and noises. They are there by millions. It is well that intervals of seventeen years mark their coming. What a long history of silence, for the privilege of singing a few weeks and of displaying their silver wings. A fact that contains a lesson.

Sardis is a delightful town and ours is the leading church. There are many elegant houses and more elegant people. The Methodist church is a large building of admirable location and appointment. In the rear of the pulpit is a memorial tablet in honor of the sainted Rev. Andrew J. See, who was for some years the beloved pastor of that flock and built the church.

With many regrets that our stay could not be protracted, and with thanks for abundant kindness, we started Southward on Friday evening. In the charming home of Capt. Pepper, we found friends who can not soon be forgotten.

The delegates elect to the Annual Conference are: G. D. Shands, Rev. W. H. Echols, P. T. Callicott, W. O. Hunter; Alternates: W. W. Perkins, W. H. Young.

A Day Among the Colored Brethren.

En route to the Sardis District Conference we spent Wednesday last, at Tougaloo University, near Jackson, Miss. It was commencement day and Dr. Haygood delivered the annual address. Arrangements were made in Jackson for transporting out a number of visitors and the result was a larger attendance of representation gentlemen than at any previous commencement. Gov. Lowry, State Superintendent of Education Smith, Col. Power of the Clarion, and others, including this editor, formed the party. Tougaloo University was established and is sustained by the American Missionary Association. There is an appropriation by the State, of $3,000 to aid the normal department, and some assistance is also received from the Slater fund. Nearly three hundred students are in attendance and taught by a full and able faculty of white teachers, of which Rev. G. Stanley Pope is president. The essays, addresses, recitations and songs of the pupils made up an interesting programme. There was a conspicuous absence of the sophomore. But few adjectives and no superlatives characterized every original essay. That was rather surprising, for the colored people are usually fond of large, high sounding words. Dr. Haygood's speech was practical, pointed and candid to the last degree. He talked plainly and with great power. The universal verdict was that it was a masterly effort and productive of good. Several others short addresses from the visitors closed the exercises of the day.

The school is under wise management and thoroughly Christian. The pupils are taught handicraft of various sorts and specimens of their work displayed were very creditable. One of the professors happily stated that their aim was not to educate leaders, but to train the rank and file. Thus a trouble of many colored schools is avoided. Their pupils are never satisfied with anything but preaching or teaching. They aspire to leadership. Industrial training is an efficient corrective of that conceit.

Returning to Jackson late in the afternoon, we had the privilege of hearing a sermon from Maj. Penn, the Texas evangelist. His meetings in the Baptist Church are attracting large congregations. He and his co-laborer, Mr. Calmes, sing well, but the preaching is disappointing in matter and manner. At the "high noon of night" we took passage on the North-bound train for Sardis.

Centenary College Commencement.

Another engagement, of long standing in the interest of the ADVOCATE, prevented our attending the closing exercises at Centenary College. Reports from eye and ear witnesses assure us that a more delightful and successful commencement Centenary has not enjoyed since its post bellum renaissance. The audiences were very large and enthusiastic and that means much at Centenary. We have often wondered, by what mode of travel and from what points of the compass, so many persons congregate at that great intellectual Olympia. The commencement sermon by Rev. W. C. Black, was a great effort, worthy of the occasion, and of the gifted preacher. Though an elaborate discussion, the congregation followed with unflagging interest.

The anniversary exercises of the literary societies, always full of good cheer, were an unusually pleasant feature of this year's entertainment. The annual address was delivered by Dr. Joseph Jones, of New Orleans.

The address before the Alumni Association was by Centenary's first graduate, the able and scientific Dr. D. L. Phares, a professor in the A. and M. College of Mississippi. His presence there recalled many years of heroic history. What changes have been wrought since he went forth from those halls with the honors of alma mater! Many others have followed and become distinguished in the world, and many others alas! have mutilated in a higher institution whose curriculum is coextensive with the eternal years. An honored roll of alumni has Centenary College.

The baccalaureate address of President Adams was at once brilliant and profound. He has eminent gifts as an educator and large attainments as a scholar. His presidency has already become very popular—meeting the largest expectations of admiring friends. Seven fine young men graduated, the first honor being won by Mr. G. A. Galloway of Madison county, Mississippi. We are glad to know that he, and perhaps others have the work of the ministry in view.

Bishop Keener was present and presided at the meetings of the Board of Trustees. The Board feels hopeful for the future. Old things are passing away and a new day is dawning.

A Soft Nut not Cracked.

Under the title of "A Soft Nut," the Watchman, of Boston, makes answer to the Episcopal Recorder.

That paper published the following: "In his deeply touching and interesting account of 'Four Memorable Years at Hilo' on the island of Hawaii, the Rev. Dr. Humphrey, describing the great ingathering of souls in 1838-39, says: 'The sick, the aged and the infirm were baptised and received into fellowship at their own villages. Some believers were thus accepted who could neither walk nor be carried, and who lived far up in the mountains, where the only water for baptism that could be found was the few drops trickling from the roof of caves.' Well brethren, were the aged and infirm believers baptised or not? If they were, it was not by immersion. Dipping was in this case, at least, an impossibility. It would have taken weeks to fill even a bath-tub. What did become of these dear disciples? Did they get into heaven or not?"

The Watchman replied at some lengths the sum of which is in these words: "To the above questions they would answer without hesitation that the persons mentioned were not baptized, and that their being unbaptized no more impaired their title to heaven than the want of baptism clouded the prospects of the penitent thief upon the cross." That is certainly quite to the point, but is not satisfactory. The nut is not cracked. If so, our brethren of "much water" are involved in strange inconsistency. Immersion baptism is not necessary to a heavenly title. Indeed it is no wise "impairs" that title. Why then make it the distinction and differentiating feature of ecclesiastical organization? Why such zeal compassing sea and land for proselytes to that view? If it does not appreciate or depreciate one's hope of heaven it is manifestly absurd to make it the essential condition of citizenship in Christ's earthly kingdom.

But according to the Watchman's view immersion is only baptism and must be administered. If however, the physical conditions preclude, it may be omitted without impairing one's heavenly title. There are some places and circumstances therefore where the ordinance can not be administered. Then follows the conclusion that God has instituted a rite which is only to be complied with in certain localities and latitudes.

The Comforter.

BY REV. J. R. A. AHRENS, D. D.

Several years ago I heard our lamented Dr. Wadsworth say, that he was often pained because the Holy Spirit was so frequently designated by the neuter pronoun "It," which was tantamount to considering our Emmanuel a divine attribute. To a healthy mind, moving in the channels of divine revelation, the doctrine of the Trinity presents no justifying contradiction. A tree presents a trinity in roots, trunks and branches; the human intellect, in perception, imagination and memory.

Christ assures his disciples that he would pray to the Father to give them another comforter; another, who could be neither the donor nor intermediary, neither God the Father, nor God the Son. That comforter is the Holy Spirit, the third person in the Holy Trinity of equal power and glory with the Father and Son; the same who descended on Christ like a dove, while a voice from heaven declared him the Son of God, the same in whose name together with the Father and the Son, the disciples were authorized to baptize all nations, whose coequality St. Paul plainly taught by formulating the so-called apostolic benediction.

To administer comfort is the Holy Spirit's special mission. He is the comforter. Nearly all men are, or deem themselves, unhappy. Misery everywhere, hearts bleed, eyes are bathed in tears, lamentations are loud and long. Because of sin and its consequences human life has become a woeful tragedy. Those who appear stoically indifferent to life's ills, affect the indifference. Despair seeks relief in hilarity. Job enquired, that if his calamity and grief were laid in the balances together, they would be heavier than the sand of the sea. Not much hyperbole about that. Who has not had seasons of exceeding wretchedness, when life seemed insufferable, the cross crushing, distracting?

1. The Holy Spirit comforts by enabling us properly to estimate the value of sublunary things, viz, that all is vanity. Until he appears on the shore in the morning, all is night. The disciples caught nothing. All effort void. "But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore." Now the nets were soon full of fish. Vain endeavor, to fish for happiness during the night of unbelief. You possibly secure wealth, station, honor; but these are not intrinsic ingredients of the cup which we designate happiness. At last the fishers of happiness discover, that happiness is not the outcome of circumstances, but the result of a certain moral condition. Emanuel reveals himself to the heart. Now we realize with the New England bard: "Things are not what they seem." As if touched by a magic wand, supposed misfortunes are converted into real blessings, woe into weal, sighing into gladness. We now realize, that we are pilgrims and strangers who should view temporal matters in the light of eternity. The weeping child of sorrow learns to admit: "These light afflictions which last but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

2. The Holy Spirit comforts the penitent sinner. Jeremiah, convicted of sin and guilt, declares: "Behold and see if there be any sorrow like my sorrow." David puts it well: "My iniquities are gone over my head; as a heavy burden they are too heavy for me. I go mourning all the day long." The convicted sinner sees in God a consuming fire, with anger kindled into flame; whose wrath is pregnant with anathemas. Whither shall he flee? Distance and darkness are equally impotent to hide him from the eye of God. Even death serves as a shroud to bring him to judgment. My sins! red as scarlet, innumerable, committed under aggravating circumstances. My sins! like so many poisonous snakes twined themselves around my horrified soul. Barred in a gulf of deep despair, in a horrible pit. Darkness without, beneath and above, past, present and future. Ah! is there salvation? A city of refuge? A brazen serpent to heal those bitten by Satanic venom? Yes. Hallelujah! Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. For Christ's sake God pardons the sins of the truly penitent sinner, while the Holy Spirit at the same time effects the renewal of the heart, imparting the divine nature; now bearing witness with our spirits that we are enabled to cry: Abba, Father. As if he said to the weeping penitent: Be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee, thy God is reconciled, you are now a child of God and will ere long be a joint-heir with Jesus Christ.

3. The Holy Spirit comforts us in the grave of our loved ones. He testifies the impotency of human resources becomes plainly apparent. Neither skill nor love can chase away death. Then, too, we have said with Job, "I associate consoling us: Misericordious comforters are we all: Their intercession comforted the wound, increased the pain. But when the comforter revealed himself to the heart, the hereafter became visible. He led us to understand: "Beyond this vale of tears There is a life above, Unmeasured by the light of years: And all that life is love." He assures us, that we are not deprived of our loved ones: they only preceded us to the home of the soul. May the grave devour what is mortal; no grave to love and hope. We shall meet our loved ones again. Weep not, says the comforter, you shall embrace him again, you dear father; soon you shall kiss his again, your dear mother; soon you will be privileged to press your darling child again to your bosom. Blessed Comforter, I praise thee.

Death of Dr. D. D. Whedon.

The telegrams of Monday brought intelligence of the death of this distinguished scholar and divine. For many months his condition had been critical, and his death was unexpected any day. At an advanced age, and after a career of prodigious and varied labor, he has entered into rest. For forty years Dr. Whedon has been a conspicuous figure in American Methodism. As a professor in the Wesleyan University he displayed rare scholarship and there began his remarkable literary career. His style of writing had the nervousness of a rhetorician and the analytical acuteness of a metaphysician. Though scrupulously exact in statement, selecting just the synonym that expressed the delicate shade of meaning, his sentences had the rhythmic flow of a very streamlet. His work on "The Well" ranked him among the greatest masters of mental and moral science. His commentaries on the New Testament are deservedly popular. Indeed for the purpose intended, we have no hesitancy in pronouncing them the best of our acquaintance. In freshness, terseness and originality, we prefer Whedon to all smaller works. For twenty-four years he edited the Methodist Quarterly Review, and was only relieved by the last General Conference because of the increasing infirmities of age. In that position his brilliant pen had ample play. Many of his critiques are unexcelled in the world of review literature. In treating sectional questions, political and ecclesiastical, he was betrayed to an intensity of conviction that led to intolerance. And with keen satire, he sometimes, reprob-wound that rather needed healing. But withal, he was a scholar of whom American Methodism should be proud. In any company of savans he was a peer.

Sardis District Conference.

REPORT ON THE LITERATURE OF THE CHURCH.

The literature of the church is a handmaid of religion. St. Peter enjoins it upon us, to grow in grace and to the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. There is to be an increase of knowledge as well of grace.

Among the sources of religious knowledge, we mention the Holy Bible, the written word of God; our standard works, on doctrine and experience; the lives of persons eminent for piety and usefulness in the church; and our periodical literature, such as the church papers, magazines and reviews.

Mr. Wesley appreciated the great value of the press as a means of propagating religious knowledge; and, from his prolific mind and pen, our infant church received, great and small, about two hundred volumes.

All appreciate the great importance of God's word and of our standard books on theology. Just at this time our church is growing rich in memories, the biographies of eminent servants and fathers of the church. Religious biography is religion in the concrete. Gospel doctrine and saving grace illustrated in the current life and experience of believers.

What a rich legacy is left us in the biographies of such men as Dr. T. O. Sumner, Bishops Andrew, Paine, Kavanaugh, Pierce, and Parker, recently given, and to be given to the church. While speaking of recent books, we may not omit the History of Methodism, by Bishop McTear, this excellent history, and the lives in book form, such as we have mentioned, should be among the literary treasures of every Christian family.

The religious newspaper constitutes an agency of great power in the work of the church, contributing to the intelligence, piety, and zeal of our people. We live in a day of wonderful progress in art and science; and progress in plans and enterprises for the enlargement of the church, and for the propagation of the doctrines of Christ. At such a time, the church paper is indispensable as a source of aid as a means by which, to keep abreast with the advance of Christianity, and with the increasing weight of responsibility resting upon the church.

Your committee would urge with emphasis, the importance of a wider circulation of our religious literature; and especially of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, under the editorial conduct of Rev. C. B. Galloway, D. D., the special organ of the North Mississippi Conference. As such, it is worthy of our hearty commendation and of our earnest support.

The Nashville Christian Advocate, the general organ of the Southern Methodist Church, is deservedly popular with our people; much might be said in its commendation. It is worthy of a largely increased circulation throughout our wide domain.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to extend the circulation of our church papers in the bounds of Sardis District; and especially of our own Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It should be a weekly visitant in the home of every Methodist.

Resolved, That we hail with much pleasure the presence among us, of Rev. Dr. Galloway, the live and able editor of our Conference organ; and that we hereby express our earnest desire to have him visit Sardis District, a part of the ADVOCATE territory, as often as may be practicable.

Resolved, That we assure Dr. Galloway of our sympathy, and pledge him hearty co-operation in the noble enterprise, of which he is our worthy representative and editor.

T. O. WIER, Chair'n.

Rev. Inman W. Cooper, of Madison Station, sends the following pleasant note:

By request of the Woman's Missionary Society of Pikesville, Miss. I attended their entertainment, May 21. To say the visit was charming would express but the truth. A beautiful supper and many elegant people in it, the result was success. Eighty dollars were cleared—quite a handsome sum. Surely Pikesville is a nice town. The ladies are alive to the interest of Christ. We regret not meeting our friend and brother, Rev. Thos. Cameron. Our work is moving on well; large congregation. Dr. H. F. Johnson will lecture here June 30. We will give him a full house.

URGENTLY NEEDED.—Your missionary money. If you have any in hand please to send it to us. If your collection is subscribed please to collect the subscription at once and remit. If you have not raised the subscription on your charge please do so. Do not forget to collect the Centenary subscriptions for missions. We must have money.

R. A. YOUNG.

—Dr. N. H. D. Wilson, of North Carolina, is again very ill.

—The Wesleyan Christian Advocate has begun its eighth volume, new series, and forty-ninth, old series.

—Bishop Keener preached the commencement sermon at the Memphis Conference Female Institute, Jackson, Tenn., on Sunday last.

—Master Stanley C. Jester, of Corsicana, Tex., a little child of the church, baptized by Bishop Parker, sends one dollar for the monumental fund.

—Rev. Sam Jones was offered a $10,000 home in Nashville at the close of his meetings there, but declined it. His note in reply was characteristic of the man:

—The degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. John F. N. Huddleston, of the Congregational Methodist Church, Mississippi, by Hiram College, at its recent commencement.

—General Eaton announces, as a deduction from the facts of the last census, that at present there are 18,061 young women in this country, who are pursuing collegiate courses of study.

—It was gratifying to his brethren to welcome Rev. B. Carradine at the Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning. He has been absent across the lake for a month recuperating his health.

—Rev. J. H. McLean, acting Regent of the South-Western University, at Georgetown, Tex., had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him by Centenary College, at its recent commencement.

—A note from Rev. J. M. Weems, dated June 3, says Bro. Godfrey is still very sick. The attending physician thinks he will get up again, but is doubtful if he will be able to take the field any more this year. Many prayers are offered for the old veteran.

—The Centenary, published at Lancaster, S. C., and edited by Rev. A. W. Moore, is a new journalistic venture. The initial number is well gotten up, and is full of varied and valuable reading. Whether or not it will meet a "felt want," the future will determine.

—Dr. David Sollins has resigned the presidency of Emory and Henry College, and accepted the headship of Centenary Female College. The names of Prof. John L. Buchanan, Jas. A. Davis, E. E. Hoss and Dr. Dodd, of the Vanderbilt University, are all spoken of in connection with the presidency of Emory and Henry.

—The predestination controversy in the Lutheran Church is assuming considerable proportions. A congregation in Wisconsin asked a German University for an "opinion" on the subject, and now that opinion has become a vexed question. The difference is between a predestination "in view of faith" and a predestination "unto faith."

—Rev. Dr. A. M. Shipp and his son, Mr. J. W. Shipp, retire from the Vanderbilt faculty. The Biblical Department of the University has been reorganized. Rev. Gross Alexander becomes Professor of New Testament Greek and Pastoral Theology, and Prof. Tillet retains the chair of Systematic Theology. Other professors are to be elected.

—Our tenderest sympathy is extended to Rev. Jas. E. Bradley, of the Louisiana Conference, in his sore affliction. His little son, Edward Earle, aged three years, died on the 31st ultimo, after a long and painful illness. May sweet gospel comfort be vouchsafed the bereaved parents, and after life's race is run with them, a blessed reunion in the skies.

—The Wesleyan Christian Advocate reports Bishop Wilson at the Atlanta District Conference. Though yet feeble he presided at every session, and on the Sabbath started and thrilled an immense audience with a sermon of great depth and spiritual power. The revival meeting continues at Atlanta and all the churches are reaping a rich harvest. On Sunday Dr. Kendall, at Trinity, received thirty-five.

—At the thirty-fifth anniversary of the National Temperance League, England, held in Exeter Hall, the Bishop of London presided, and Dr. Newman Hall, Dr. B. W. Richardson and Mr. Samuel Morley, M. P., were the speakers. In the conflict against rum all denominations are united. There is no ecclesiastical proscription—neither close communion nor apostolic succession.

—The statistics for the past year of the United Presbyterian Church in this country contain the following figures: Pastors and stated supplies, 549; congregations, 568; members, 88,871; contributions for all objects, $355,248; average per member, $1.68; average salary of pastors, $925. The last two items are especially noticeable. A like showing can be made by very few religious denominations.

—We regret our absence from the office when Mrs. L. Cray Sadler called last week. She has been a warm friend of this ADVOCATE from its initial number and a valued contributor to its columns.

—Rev. J. A. Bowen sends joyful tidings from Durant as follows: "We are entering upon the second week of a glorious revival in Durant. Thirty conversions and twelve accessions up to date, and the work increasing at every service. The whole town is moved with Divine power."

—A copy of the Mansfield Female College catalogue has been laid out on our desk. It is neatly printed, and admirably arranged. In addition to the usual matter of such annuals, it contains an address delivered on "Arbor Day" by State Senator, Hon. E. W. Sutherland. The work has been done at this office.

—Two Chinamen, Fung Chon and Fung Won, were baptized and received into the Canal Street Presbyterian Church, this city, on Sunday last. They answered the questions through an interpreter and seemed to have an intelligent and solemn comprehension of the vows assumed.

—The Diocesan Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church in South Carolina, in recent session, had an animated discussion over the right of two colored clergymen to seats in the body. The brethren were seated, but the equality of the council was disturbed. Of that discussion, the end is not yet.

—Rev. G. W. Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference, is in the field as an agent for all our Methodist publications. We met him at the Sardis District Conference and was glad to learn of his success. If Methodists can be induced to read more, we may look for enlargement in every department of church activity. Bro. Bachman is doing good work for this ADVOCATE also.

—A volume by Miss Elizabeth Cleveland, sister of the President, is announced by her publishers, Funk & Wagnalls. It will appear the latter part of this month, and is entitled "George Eliot and Other Studies." A review of the advanced sheets by the New York Sun whets our appetite for the complete volume. This will be the first book ever written by an occupant of the White House.

—A meeting of the Protestant ministers of the city was held at the Young Men's Christian Association parlors on Monday last at 1 P. M. Rev. Dr. S. Landrum presided and Mr. Sherrard acted as secretary. After a full interchange of views a resolution was adopted extending an invitation to Mr. D. L. Moody to visit New Orleans in the autumn or winter, and hold a series of meetings. This invitation will be drawn up in proper form and presented to the several pastors for their signatures.

—Arrangements are being perfected for a grand meeting at the Seashore Camp Ground this year. It is yet a busy place. The sound of saw and hammer is heard during the day, and new substantial buildings are being erected. New bath-houses have been built and also a bell-tower. Other walks and avenues have been opened, more shade trees planted, and the beautiful encampment in various ways improved. As will be seen in another column, favorable railroad accommodations have been secured. Every facility and comfort will be provided to make the stay of visitors agreeable and profitable. A week by the seashore will be helpful to soul and body. Prominent preachers from several States will be present and occupy the pulpit from time to time.

—Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Lexington, Miss., sends us the following postal. It brings good tidings: "Prohibition succeeded here to-day. Our town council has passed an order forbidding the granting of any more license to sell whiskey for twelve months. Our ladies worked nobly in the cause. God be praised."

In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

GARVER & JAMIESON, Publishers.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Allen & Bro., Fifth & Yule streets, Cincinnati, O., and 19 Nassau St., New York, making them our special Publishers' Agents, and giving them the entire charge of the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

"Ten cream?" observed Briggs, at the boardinghouse. "That's what I call an oasis in the desert." "It is more like a desert in the oasis," replied the land boarder.

E. H. ADAMS.—In another column will be found the advertisement of this enterprising dry goods merchant, offering as a special inducement to prompt freight on all orders, whether large or small. Samples will be furnished, with prices, on application, and quality of goods guaranteed.

"Robbie," said the visitor kindly, "have you any little brothers and sisters?" "No," said Robbie, solemnly, "I'm all the children we've got."

J. H. KELLER.—In another column will be found the advertisement of "Soapina," the latest production of "The Great Southern Soap Works," established by Mr. J. H. Keller over thirty-five years ago. Soapina was entered for competition at the great World's Exposition, and was awarded First Premium.

An exchange says: "Mountains have no eyes, but we've seen a mountainier!" If without eyes, "ask another exchange," how can mountains speak?"

COFFEE AND TEA.—Mr. James Duran, the popular coffee and tea dealer of No. 111 Poydras street, makes an announcement of surprising reductions in the cost of the finest coffee and tea. Not only this, but for all cash purchases 25 per cent is given, while to country customers, ordering C. O. D., he will prepay all freight or express charges. See advertisement and note the figures. Send trial order.

Time is always represented carrying a syringe, and we suppose he will continue to carry this primitive agricultural implement until time shall be no more.

Persons suffering from exhaustion, pains, poor appetite, etc., find the New Life, Remedy for coughs, etc., and Life Tonic a constitutional remedy, invigorating the entire system. Endorsements pour in continuously.

"How do you sell your alligators?" "Impaired the wag of the party at New Orleans." "A dollar a foot, sir," replied the dealer. "All right. You may give me a foot of that one" pointing to one about ten feet long.

Two Chicago girls thought it would be just fun to black their faces, but unfortunately they used a preparation that went back—it operates like ketchup, and chemists say, "it is probably indelible ink, and if Payson's they are marked for life."

"Good-by, Mr. Smith; I'm off for Afghanistan. Professional work, you know." "Going to paint some war scenes?" "No; not exactly. I'm engaged to plaster the rocks around Herat with 'Day Chicago Canned Meats' and 'Try Chicago Breakfasts.'"

The signator which should be the plainest part of a letter is frequently the most illegible. An Enterbrook pen would help to remedy the defect.

DR. MEIGS CASE'S SPINAL APPARATUS.

This apparatus applies to the treatment of Spinal Disease the principle of extension, already well established as a most efficient method for the cure of diseases of the joints. With this it combines these additional requirements in spinal cases: Relief from the weight of the head and shoulders without the burden on some other part of the body; the stretching of the muscles (by means of the traction exerted by the weight of the body itself); and opportunity for exercise without restraint under these favorable conditions.

The results of daily exercise in this apparatus quickly demonstrate its utility. The patient improves rapidly in strength and height, the muscles concerned in maintaining an erect position are developed and invigorated, and a few weeks will frequently show a greater gain than can possibly be reached by months of treatment with the restrictive appliances in general use. For price, directions for adjustment, and other information in respect to this apparatus, apply to POMEROY TRUSS CO., 785 BROADWAY, N. Y., SOLE MANUFACTURERS.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone P. O., Pickens county, Ala., having so often read in the ADVOCATE of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 133 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having closed the sale for one of those lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you will see at least from $50 to $75 and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein invites all when visiting the city to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pleasure in showing, even if you do not desire to buy. He has the celebrated Mathews, Reising, Mason & Hammett and Hale pianos at very lowest prices and on the easiest terms. Old pianos repaired or taken in exchange for a new one. Good second-hand pianos as low as $20.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MANNFIELD, Ia. June 2.—Local opinion is probably defeated by about 300 votes in this parish. The largest vote by far since 1877 was polled.

RICHMOND, Va. June 2.—The most brilliant society event that has taken place in this city for several years was the marriage of Miss Julia Jackson, daughter of Stonewall Jackson, and William A. Christian to-night. The ceremony took place in the Second Presbyterian Church. An assemblage of 2000 witnessed the marriage, and several hundred persons were turned away unable to get in the building.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The Secretary of State received to-day from the United States minister to Madrid a cablegram stating that a government commission had declared Asiatic cholera epidemic in the Spanish province of Valencia.

ATLANTA, Ga. June 4.—The fund for a Young Men's Christian Association building has reached $75,000, $7000 of it was given by ladies. Sam Jones, the Evangelist, stirred society roundly last night by denouncing the dancers of the German, which he ridiculed as hugging, set to music. He also handled the "spider-leg dudes," to use his words, with gloves. The society of boys and girls are mad, and on of their number writes to-day defending the dances and the hugging.

NEW YORK, June 4.—A type-setting contest between Joseph McCann, of the Herald, and Ira Sommers, of the World, was decided to-day. The men set for three hours, McCann putting up 6325 ems of solid minion, without paragraph, and Sommers 6022. The best hour McCann set 2129 ems, beating the best record of 2004 ems, made by compositor Ahrensburg some years ago.

CHICAGO, June 4.—The Paris (Ill.) special says: A tornado of wind and rain, accompanied by terrific lightning and thunder, lasting fifteen minutes, struck the town this afternoon. Hall the Metropolitan Block was roofed, leaving a valuable stock of goods exposed to the torments of rain which fell. The Presbyterian Church and a number of other buildings were almost totally demolished.

ATLANTA, Ga. June 4.—A terrific storm of wind and rain swept over this city yesterday, destroying public and private property to the extent of about $80,000. All the creeks, bridges and their banks, and culverts, bridges and crossings were swept away or seriously damaged. The gutters and sewers could not carry off the water, and the streets on the lower levels became rivers. Cellars were flooded, mills stopped and business interrupted.

PHILADELPHIA, June 5.—The Memorial Hall, in Fairmount Park, the Art Hall of the Centennial Exposition, which cost $1,600,000, caught fire this afternoon and was at one time in imminent danger of destruction with its valuable art contents. Fortunately, however, the flames were extinguished after a few hundred dollars damage had been done.

SHERMAN, Texas, June 6.—A large meteor passed over this place at 10:30 last night, moving in a westerly direction. Shortly after its passage a heavy artillery was heard, followed by a rumbling, as of distant thunder. The explosion was so violent as to rattle the glass in the courthouse, and shake other buildings. A number of citizens, thirty-five miles south, and was accompanied with a similar explosion, shaking buildings, etc.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., June 8.—The situation in Jackson county is becoming quite serious. Hundreds of families are on the verge of starvation, and unless aid is speedily extended, the most disastrous results will be expected. Some of the more fortunate and influential people of the county have heretofore denied reports that from time to time have been made public, hoping things could be lived over till a new crop could be raised but now much alarm prevails, and public meetings are being held in all the villages, and the local papers are printing appeals for aid.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, June 2.—Dispatches from Bombay state that news has just reached there of a disastrous earthquake in Cashmere, a country of India. The seismic shocks began on Sunday, and have continued at intervals of ten minutes ever since. The shocks were very severe at Serinagar, the capital of Cashmere.

MADRID, June 5.—The cholera is increasing at Valera; 45 per cent of those attacked die.

LONDON, June 5.—Unofficial reports from the earthquake at Cashmere are of such an alarming character it is believed it will prove even more disastrous in its effect than the whole cities and towns in the valley are spoken of as destroyed. The absence of definite news is attributed to the demolition of telegraph lines in the general wreck and chaos, and in consequence the magnitude of the calamity and numbers of killed and wounded are left for the imagination to supply. An official dispatch from Serinagar gives the number of the killed and wounded by earthquake there Sunday and Monday last as follows: killed, 87; wounded, 100.

PARIS, June 6.—It is stated that the manuscript writing of Victor Hugo will fill ten volumes. Mr. Hugo indicated the arrangements for their publication. The contents of three volumes, which are almost ready for circulation, are various, and embrace both prose and poetry. The other seven will consist of notes and letters written during the years of the exile of the poet.

W. C. DUNLAP, Com. and Agent Palestine Institute. P. B.—Bro. S. B. McCutchen represents the Louisiana, Dr. Galloway the Mississippi, and Bro. Porter (Gilderoy) the North Mississippi Conference.

DENTIFRICE.—In this issue will be found the advertisement of Drs. J. P. and W. R. Holmes, of Macon, Ga., offering to the public their celebrated "Holmes' Mouth Wash and Dentifrice." In the manufacture of this superior preparation the Drs. Holmes have, without doubt, employed all other efforts to give a perfectly harmless, pleasant and beneficial dentifrice in fact, one that will take but a short period to earn a reputation on its own merit. A neat pamphlet on treatment of the teeth and gums will be sent to any address.

KENNESAW AND SHENANDOAH VALLEY ROUTE.—This popular line is doing a very large business and is doing a very large business and is doing a very large business. The line runs through the mountains from Calera, Ala., to Hagerstown, Md., a distance of over eight hundred miles, which makes the line delightfully cool and full of interest with mountain and valley scenery. The Kennesaw route daily trains to Washington and Philadelphia without change. The time is several hours quicker than formerly, and facilities are quite perfect.

MAT AND DECORATION.

BY GEORGE W. HUNGAY.

The beautiful, lilted month of the year,
Flower-crowned, melodious, sweet-scented May,
With her full chorus of birds in song,
And her green scarf over woodlands here,
To honor heroes, she still lingers here,
All nature seems peaceful and welcomes her stay,
And daffodils light up her way.
We will not leave till the latest camp gear
Is packed with care, decked with diamonds of dew,
And will the rose without a bouquet,
And lilies and violets for the blue,
And roses and daisies white for the gray,
We hide with her mantle of grass the wound
Made by shot and shell on the battle ground.

And Old Texan in Texas.

BY REV. J. B. A. ABBRENS, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: When you think of Texas, the adjectives great, grand and glorious find their true significance. Such developments and so much to develop! Though the laws of nature hold good here too. For example, Cypress and Hickory, on the Central railroad, above Houston, were apparently more thirty twenty years ago than now. Railroads have built cities, but here they slightly failed. I read once of the Virginia Legislature, in years gone by, enacting a law that at certain cross roads a town should be built; but the town was not built, notwithstanding the legislation. Like some towns, certain men have to be nursed and resisted from youth to old age; but when they never will be. Rightly the Persian proverb asks: "Are all stones diamonds, are all men men?" There were also some circuits and stations where we obstinately hold on against the dictates of wisdom. Love's labor

Hempstead is a growing town. During the late war it was a military post. I was assigned to the chaplaincy of this post when Col. C. F. Wilkes' Texas Twenty-Fourth Dismounted Cavalry Regiment, whose chaplain I had been, owing to demerit, was consolidated with a Tennessee regiment. While in this position I joined the Texas Conference during its session in Waco, Dr. Alexander in the chair. Dr. Marvin, subsequently a Bishop, was with us on a visit. In my boyish experience I expected to be appointed preacher of Hempstead station. You can imagine the state of my feelings when my appointment was announced: Spring Creek circuit, J. B. Ahrens. But often since I thank God for this disappointment. The appointment furthest from Hempstead, where my military duties kept me most of my time, was but twenty miles. Here and at the other appointments we had gracious revivals, adding up more than a hundred conversions and accessions to the church.

Here, near Hempstead, an amusing incident occurred at the beginning of the war. A Methodist preacher, as colonel, was drilling his regiment of cavalry. Ordering a certain evolution he discovered a railroad train rapidly approaching. He frightened, he screamed with great vehemence: "Look out, boys, the railroad is coming." The laughter which followed this announcement was loud and long.

The college building at Chappell Hill awakened many pleasant reminiscences in my mind. Here I spent three of the most pleasant years of my life as student and professor. Here Drs. William Halsey, Carter, Follansbee, Mood and Miller superintended a prosperous school known as Soule University.

To-day, June 6, I reached Georgetown. The commencement festivities are near high-tide. Here our illustrious Dr. F. A. Mood labored and died, and in the Southwestern University reared a monument to his name more lasting than granite. The location is most charming, the surrounding country very fertile, retired from centres of dense population and yet very easy of access, the community refined and thoroughly Methodist. To-morrow we shall proceed to elect a successor to Dr. Mood. Of this and other matters relating to commencement in my next.

Mirabile Dictu.

BY ***.

MR. EDITOR: There are some religious pictures flashed now and then upon the canvass of the church's history, whose peculiar findings ought to be photographed and preserved for the study and improvement of others in the future. The church, with her ministry, is a wonderful school of varied experience, and some of these experiences are so exceedingly timid and modest; or, perhaps, other considerations enter in and prevent them from coming to the front so that the public eye may gaze upon them. Somehow I have reached the conclusion that a glance at one of these religious pictures might do good, though condemned at first sight. Look at the picture and its shadings as the preacher and some members of the church made it the other day, little dreaming at the time that it would be hung up in the Exposition for other eyes to gaze upon it. Yes, the preacher was looking with some anxiety to the coming of his second Conference meeting. Of course he concluded, and he had the right to conclude, that the accepted pastor of five large congregations might reasonably expect to receive thirty-five or fifty dollars at the coming Conference, especially now that nearly a half year's service, faithful service, had been given to his people. On such faith, and backed by a Christian constituency of five large congregations, he ventured the tremendous financial risk of pledging his word to the vendor of provisions that he might expect fifteen or twenty dollars. There were some other creditors with demands of five and ten dollars that on his return from the Conference would be paid, but the good man who spread his table must be cared for. With a pledged salary of $800, averaging, according to the best standard arithmetics in the universities, $200 every three months, with some backbone and audacity, he pledged his word to his several creditors—this word was his honor, it was his invested capital, his reputation was huddled upon it, and this word was to pay after the Conference meeting.

The venture of the preacher was reasonable, it was honest; because there existed the solid fact that five large Christian congregations of honest constituents stood pledged to sustain him in such an outlay. There was nothing strained about the transaction. Well, the Conference, with its large gathering of people and officials, was there. The officers of the church in the dignity of Christian manhood and responsibility were there. They reported carefully what had been done in private for the preacher to keep soul and body together of himself and family; but mirabile dictu! three months had rolled away and not one dollar in hard cash put in its appearance for the pastor. The pastor of five large Christian congregations, with a pledged salary of $800, cast his eyes up and down the great gulf stream of finance, but not one dollar, with the imprint of the mint at New Orleans, "Put your trust in God," appeared upon the broad surface of that stream. There he stood in that solemn hour of finance; his word of honor, all his invested capital at stake and in jeopardy; his reputation trembling in the balances of financial disaster, and five honest Christian congregations his pledged supporters. There he stands the pity of angels—Impenetrable Bankrupt! Specie payment suspended! The bank of honor "busted!" Mirabile dictu!

What will his creditors say! What will the world say! What poor financiers these preachers are! Just at this moment a little slipper brig came dancing over the stream, having no connection with the five Christian congregations, bearing a small cargo from another port, that brought financial relief to the impecunious preacher and the vendor of provisions smiled again. On what slender threads does credit and honor sometimes rest?

Woman's Work.

BY MRS. S. O. WEEMS.

There are few, if a single woman, reared in our fair Southland who would not shrink with horror from what is called "Woman's Rights." Women are naturally timid, and look upon anything that forces them into conspicuous places, as a cross. The place where she delights to reign is in her own home, where her influence is felt and appreciated. In order to wield an influence there for good she must have spiritual power. We can not sit down idly in our homes or appear only for the adornment of society and obtain this.

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith and hath not works. Can faith save him?" So, if we would show our devotion to Christ, who hath done so much for us, we must work in his vineyard. When we remember the millions of women who are now suffering cruel bondage in heathen lands, it seems enough to quicken the energies and stir up the gifts of every woman in the church. In our Woman's Missionary Society we have a sphere of activity in which to develop all the talents and utilize the gifts of our natures. Though we may not be able to do any great things for the perishing souls in heathen darkness, our work will surely be a benefit to our own souls and have a reflex influence on the church at home. If our ministers will study this work closely, they will see that where woman's missionary societies are in successful operation that the missionary spirit and enterprise of the church is greater and little trouble is found in raising their collections. The dear women of the church can not enter into this work with a full purpose of heart to do their whole duty as members without receiving spiritual benefit. I can speak for myself. It has certainly been a blessing to my soul, making me more willing to bear the cross of Christ. When I look around upon the members of our missionary society and number those who are the most consecrated Christians I find them among the faithful ones who are always at the missionary meetings. There are many of our ministers enthusiastic helpers in woman's work, yet there are some who, though not opposed, do not see the good and use no effort to help on this work. To these we would recommend an earnest investigation of our work and its results.

ENTIRELY, MISSISSIPPI.

Courtesy.

Courtesy is, strictly speaking, a Christian grace. It is the offspring of charity, and since it derives its being from divine grace; since it is made the subject of divine command; since it is especially calculated to smoothe those little asperities which sometimes hinder even "the living stones of the temple" from being so perfectly joined or so fitly framed together as they should be; since it powerfully tends, likewise, to remove the prejudices and to allay the enmity so generally entertained by the world toward the church; above all, since, in combination with other causes it may contribute to win souls to God, we surely ought not to deem it unsuitable, but to make it the subject of our particular and attentive consideration. While some professed disciples of Christ seem to have substituted in the place of genuine courtesy a conformity to the manners and habits of ungodly men, which, very ill, consists with that simplicity of character which should distinguish the remnant of true Israelites, there are others who, through an honest disgust toward the impertinent fopperies of the world, and an ill-directed fear of becoming infected with the same spirit of guile and hypocrisy, have even run so far into the opposite extreme of churlishness as to be culpably negligent of the mere forms of civilized society.

The courtesy of the world is an imposing form. But the courtesy of a Christian is not a mere form. It is not the phantom of a feeling which has no real existence. It is the outward expression of an inward disposition, the conduct which a benevolent mind will on all occasions instinctively prescribe. It is the natural and unconstrained operation of unfeigned love. Let us but love our neighbor as ourselves, and it will be morally impossible to violate the laws of the country; for love worketh no ill to his neighbor. It will teach us cautiously to avoid whatever might unnecessarily wound his feelings; it will dispose us assiduously to study his inclination, ease and convenience; it will make us anxious to interpret his very looks that we may even anticipate his requests; it will enable us cheerfully to make a sacrifice of our own gratifications with a view to his. All this is perfectly easy; it is even delightful where love exists without dissimulation; but let this heavenly principle be wanting, take away from the form of courtesy the power and it becomes an arduous and irksome task, a yoke grievous to be borne.

SUMMERFIELD.

From Arcadia, La.

We are just back from the land of sand, deep sand, and hard to pull through. Sparta should have a glass factory working on that sand and getting rid of as much as possible of it. It might take some generations before the supply would be exhausted; still to the weary itinerant pulling through it in the hot sun it would be a satisfaction to know that some of it was being put to good use in the furnishing of glass for the millions. Eight miles south of Sparta is the Caster Church where we held the quarterly meeting. Largo congregations greeted us, and the "dinner on the ground" was sumptuous. The love-feast at nine A. M., Sunday, was an occasion of great spiritual refreshment. At eleven we preached the funeral of Sister Koonce, an elect lady whose consistent Christian life and triumphant death have left an abiding influence upon all that community. The sacrament followed the sermon and we had indeed a precious and melting time, the deep of many hearts being broken up and the tears of sweetest peace and satisfying joy flowing freely from the eyes of not a few. After dinner and during the three o'clock service God's spirit in great power descended upon all. Mourners crowded to the altar and side benches and into the aisle. It was fully six o'clock before we closed the meeting. Before the sermon, Bro. Johnston, baptized some children and a young man and his wife. He received six into the church formally and has since more to receive—fifteen souls in all coming out on the Lord's side, one of them an aged sinner. It was good to be there. We learn from the pastor that there is spiritual improvement all over the Sparta and Saline circuit. He has every indication of a grand work of grace being done this Conference year.

We organized the Caster Women's Foreign Missionary Society with the following officers: President, Mrs. M. E. Wardlaw; first vice-president, Mrs. Rebecca Blum; second vice-president, Mrs. Lou Downs; recording secretary, Mrs. M. J. Sheppard; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary Carlisle; treasurer, Mrs. Rebecca Winchell; solicitor for Woman's Missionary Advocate, Mrs. Mary Neal. These ladies will have a good report.

Rev. J. M. Johnston, the pastor, will, doubtless, be able to organize without delay the ladies at Bear Creek, Providence, Holder's, Sparta and Ebenezer. His assistants, Bros. Rushing and Allison, local preachers, will organize the ladies at Mpl Creek, Evergreen, Lake Village, Antioch and New Prospect. We found the people in the Caster ward of our parish wide awake on the question of prohibition. We will soon have a vote in Bienville, and though our enemy is strong and boastful, yet we expect to win. Doing their best and the great God backing them, surely the prohibitionists ought always to expect victory. The articles of Bros. Black and Billingsley were timely and strong. Let the church of God in Louisiana do her full duty, and even this stronghold of whisky will be wrenched from king alcohol. We were glad to learn from Col. A. C. Mitchell that a State Convention of the prohibition party is to be held at Shreveport on or about August 19, 1885. Let every parish send delegates of grit and backbone, men who love God and their fellow-men more than party.

Missouri Letter.

Last week was District Conference week in Missouri, no less than eight having been in session. It was my privilege to attend three of these Conferences and also to be present at the session of the Missouri Conference Woman's Foreign Missionary Society—which, I thought, was doing very well for one week. My own Plattsburg District Conference, which Bro. Bounds, of the St. Louis Advocate, called "a model session," closed Sunday night, May 24. The session was in all respects satisfactory—a large attendance, good reports, spirited discussions of all the interests of the district and a deep religious interest throughout which culminated in a very Pentecost at the Sunday morning love-feast. Dr. W. M. Rush, the Nestor of the Missouri Conference, was with us, but in great feebleness. The Conference decided to hold a district camp meeting in July, the location of which has since been fixed at the Plattsburg Mineral Springs, and I had the great pleasure of announcing to them that Sam Jones and Dr. W. M. Leftwich had consented to be with us at that time. Our camp meeting will begin July 8, and we expect Sam Jones to remain with us at least two weeks. The whole of north-west Missouri will turn out to hear the great Georgia evangelist who so electrified Nashville, and we are making arrangements to entertain ten thousand people at our "feast of tabernacles." We have secured an immense tabernacle which will seat five or six thousand people and will stretch it on the edge of a grove where other thousands can congregate. The springs are celebrated for their medicinal qualities, so that our camp meeting will offer healing for both soul and body. We are looking forward to this meeting with prayerful interest and trust that it will result in the awakening and conversion of hundreds and even thousands. Dr. Leftwich says, in a private letter, "Sam Jones is a wonderful man. His equal is not on the continent. No one like him." Sam Jones himself says, "The meeting here (Nashville) is beyond description."

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Missouri Conference closed its annual session at St. Joseph last Wednesday. They had a very successful meeting and a good attendance. The woman's work is growing, and I can most heartily bid it God-speed. I do not see how any one who studies the philosophy of missions can be out of sympathy with this more recent development of missionary enterprise, for as Dr. Scudder has well said, "Heathendom will never be taken for Christ until the family is entered." And in nine-tenths of pagan lands woman only can enter the family. So that the heart of woman is the strategic point in the warfare for the supremacy of the world. Then again the fact is becoming recognized throughout the East that Christian missionaries must direct their energies chiefly to the young. But little progress, comparatively, can be made in dealing with adults. In many places teaching is found to accomplish more than preaching, and more converts are made in the school-room than in the church. For this kind of missionary work woman is pre-eminently adapted and large results will certainly follow the efforts now being made in this direction. Is not much of the increased interest now being taken in missions due to the reflex influence of the woman's missionary societies, and will not this reflex influence be even more manifest in the future? The women who labor in our missionary societies and who become deeply interested in the evangelization of the world, will train up sons and daughters thoroughly imbued with the missionary spirit and the next generation, descended from such mothers, will not be content to merely "play at missions." And yet, despite all this, many of our preachers are found opposing "woman's work for woman." Shame on them! They make a feeble effort to bring Paul to their support, forgetting that some of the apostle's noblest and truest "yoke fellows" were women, and that he wrote, concerning them, "I entreat thee also, help those women which labored with me in the gospel." The sixteenth chapter of his epistle to the Romans is full of the gratitude and love he felt for the women of the early church, no less than seven of whom he there mentions by name. My own experience is that these women's missionary societies kindle the missionary zeal of the entire church, and so far from hindering the pastor in his work, they prove a most valuable auxiliary.

The secular papers announce the collapse of another communistic and infidel enterprise. Five years ago a colony of infidels founded a town called Liberal, in Barton county, Mo., which was to be the model community of the United States and where no religion of any description was ever to be tolerated. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat declares that the experiment is a failure, and that the town is shriveled, contracted, torn in two by dissensions, and promises ere long to become a deserted village. It is a fit ending to such an undertaking.

We have had some extensive revivals in Missouri this year and are looking for others before the year is over. "A brother who has taken the trouble to 'keep count' says that since last October there have been reported in the St. Louis Advocate 4,128 conversions and 4,145 additions in the three Missouri Conferences. The Rev. A. Mizell reports a very gracious revival now in progress in his charge, Moberly, Mo., which has resulted in over 120 conversions to date.

Mr. L. D. Dameron, publisher of the St. Louis Advocate, announces important improvements in the mechanical department of the paper to take place July 1. The St. Louis is, as you know, already one of the best of the Southern Methodist Advocate family, but Mr. Dameron's ambition is to make it equal, if not superior, to any religious journal in the country. N. B. CHAPMAN.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Sr., presiding elder of the Winona district, writes of the wonderful revival at Durant, Miss., as follows:

The good work is still going on here. The indefatigable pastor, Rev. J. A. Bowen, commenced a meeting in this place two weeks ago, and thus far forty odd have been converted. And there is no abatement of interest. Such a gracious work has never been experienced by this community. The pastor has had valuable assistance from Revs. W. R. Murrah, E. G. Kilgore, G. W. Bachman, R. A. Burroughs, G. W. Brown, T. W. Lewis, and last, though not least, H. C. Parrott and wife. The great day alone will reveal the result of the efficient labors of that good woman in this and other communities. Any pastor would do well to avail himself of her assistance.

The prohibition sentiment is growing rapidly. Holmes county sends a full delegation to the convention.

The following note from Rev. James A. Godfrey, written by his own hand, will be read with pleasure by many anxious friends. We are rejoiced at his partial recovery from an almost fatal illness:

I came home yesterday from Paulding; health improving, though I am very feeble. I go to Livingston, Ala., on Saturday.

I hope to meet all the brethren, both clerical and lay, who form our District Conference, to be held in Lauderdale, July 9-12, and I am very anxious that we have the editor of our Advocate with us. Please come.

Letters from brethren indicate a good degree of prosperity in our bounds.

Bro. N. B. Harmon is on the Paulding circuit, with his work well in hand.

GOLD'S SCHOOL.

One by one, as the days go by,
To learn our lessons we bravely try;
For every hour some task is set,
Pitiful, easy, short or long,
And whether we come to it weak or strong,
Somehow or other it must be met.

Graded well is this school of ours,
Each one's duties within its powers,
And his task the thing that he needs to know,
And many a time does the pages grow dim,
And before tired eyes the hard words swim,
And the hours go by so slow, so slow.

Various ages are gathered there,
Flaxen tresses and thin, gray hair,
Allies fall over the lesson books,
And often the little ones laugh in glee,
At the beautiful words their bright eyes see,
While the old attend, with grave, and looks.

Skilled teachers assembled here,
Patiently labor year by year;
Never mistake in their work was known:
Only the scholars, weary or vexed,
Idle, impatient, tired, perplexed,
Suffer from errors all their own.

The Spirit teaches the highest class,
Time takes all as they upward pass;
Joy is claimed by the happy few,
While tears, Experience, Labor, Pain,
Treasures of knowledge help us gain,
And conscience conducts the grand review.

But, patiently learning day by day,
We are longing to hear the Master say,
That our school-days here are done;
And after the long term shall pass,
To be transferred to that upper class,
In which the advanced work is begun.

The General Judgment.

Mr. Greene in the ADVOCATE of June 4, passed rather a severe criticism upon people and especially, public speakers, and ministers in setting forth a doctrine, "that has little if any foundation in actual truth."

The word of God teaches such a doctrine as the general judgment in plain language, so simple that "wayfaring men, though fools shall not err therein."

Men trouble themselves about things that do not belong unto them, because the mind is finite, and can't comprehend them. Because they are not able to harmonize certain truths taught in the Bible, with their idea of thinking, their modes of action, and experience generally, they become mystified, and close up by saying, in their opinions, no such things exist.

As long as we have the word of God to guide us, and will follow its plain teaching, there is no reason why we should fall into error. The great trouble with men, (and especially we young students of the Bible) is that we forget we are commanded not to be "wise above that which is written," and consequently, brush through, stumble over and finally fall into some pit of mystery lying between the plain cardinal doctrines of truth, and there we remain until some old veteran of the word, comes along and pulls us out, and starts us off afresh. We tread smoothly on for awhile, but soon another pit greets our next advance, and instead of going around it, we plunge in and are soon stuck worse than ever. Thus on we go, until our shanks are skinned, our brains are muddled, and we conclude, to take the Bible for what it says, and write it as we find it, and preach it as we are told: we are then prepared to learn something, though hard experience may have taught us, the lesson.

As to the ways and time in which the general judgment will take place no one but God knows, not even the angels of heaven. But if one wants to write it or preach it, he need not use "hackney phrases" to do so, for all he has to do is to open the Bible and there he will find it in language that can stand the criticism of the world. The doctrine is so plainly taught that it does seem it would require special effort to overlook it, and to evade it, is an impossibility.

St. Paul declares that: "He hath appointed a day (not days) in which he will judge the world in righteousness."

"The dead, small and great, shall stand before God." "The day of judgment is that important period which shall terminate the present dispensation of grace toward the fallen race of Adam, put an end to time, and introduce the eternal destinies of men and of angels."—Watson.

Now we must admit that the world will not last forever, therefore should it cease to exist to-morrow those found upon the world would be sufficient in number, to justify a general judgment.

St. Peter says: "The heavens and the earth which now exist are by the word of God reserved in store unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men."

My friend furthermore says, that those who preach such a doctrine, when they "officiate at the funeral of a brother or sister, represent them, as having gone to his or her reward." That is true if they have lived right; but is that saying that they have entered the full enjoyment of their labors, or even if they have, does that prevent them from being present at the general judgment, and being applauded by the assembled hosts of heaven and inhabitants of earth, and their destiny forever sealed in our presence? We answer no!

Also he says: "If such be true, is it just to send a man to prison for five years, before he is ever arraigned or tried?"

Not so. The inner laconismed already, and if he dies, the moment his spirit leaves the body it is doomed. God don't send people to hell, they go there of their own free will and accord.

He also comes out in so many words, and says in his opinion, "there is no such a thing as a general judgment," and gives as one reason that it has never yet taken place. Of course it has not, his examples of Moses and Elias, the rich man and Lazarus, and the thief on the cross are "far fetched" and have nothing to do with the doctrine in question.

And as to ministers painting frightful pictures, such is nothing more than they should do, for all the genius of the world combined, can't place a more frightful one, on the canvass, than have the inspired men, "who wrote and spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

The difficulty in this age of tender feelings and fear of harsh preaching, is that some preachers, cover up these dreadful realities with rhetorical flowers and fanciful wreaths, thus allowing many a poor soul to go to hell on "flowery beds of ease." We brethren need not be afraid of making the picture too forcible, for surely from the figures used in the Bible, it is a place of awful realities.

Peace not a Primary Blessing, but Subordinate.

BY REV. W. W. SULLIVAN.

The Psalmist says, "Great peace have they which love the law and nothing shall offend them."

While there may be Christians, who are blessed with this undisturbed peace of mind and conscience, still, a universal peace in communities, churches and families, such as was proclaimed to the watching shepherds at the birth of Christ can not exist until righteousness shall be established on the earth, and every knee shall bow to the name of Jesus. The doctrine that peace is of primary importance, and that whatever produces divisions is, of necessity, either wrong in itself, or so unwise that it ought to be abandoned, and can not be maintained. Great as the value of peace is, it is when rational at the very utmost secondary and subordinate. There is one thing of greater value, and that is righteousness. God has preferred righteousness to peace, in his own government, and has taught to do so in our conduct; for the wisdom which is from above is first pure, then peaceable.

By this principle the proceedings of Christian churches are, or ought to be regulated in certain trying cases of discipline, which disturb their peace; an evil which, however, is far inferior to the destruction of their piety. The general principle, therefore, may be laid down, that whatever the importance of peace may be, it is not primary, but subordinate. Peace, by every means possible, in consistency with the pursuit of more imperative duties should be cherished; still, it may be an incumbent duty and wisdom under some circumstances to sacrifice it. The question is, what is the end in view? Is it one for the attainment of which the risk of strife ought to be incurred? Or one, rather, which for the maintenance of peace, ought to be relinquished? Therefore, the extended conversion of sinners is an object which ought to be pursued with the utmost vigor, and by all scriptural means, whatever risk of division it may involve. The object is of the very highest value, of much greater value than the existing tranquillity of the whole church of God. Christ when looking forward to the victories of his cross in the world said: "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth, I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance with his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law, and a man's foes shall be they of his own household."—Matthew x and Luke xii.

No one can imagine that our Lord formed a low estimate of the peace of the world; yet the end to be attained by the preaching of the gospel, was so much more important that he would have it pursue its course, unimpeded by the afflictive evils which it incidentally produced. If, therefore, revivals of religion, and the spread of the gospel of Jesus Christ can be made in peace so much the better; but if they can not, still let them be made. If, like our divine Lord, we could look into coming years, and see that the kindling of apostolic zeal, in some breasts would influence the fire of unhallowed wrath in others, still like him we ought without shrinking to meet the result.

To condemn every thing by which the peace of the church might be disturbed, would be to make its actual state, however wrong, the standard and rule of its future condition. The disturbance of prevailing opinions and feelings in the church always has been, and always will be a disturbance of its peace. The very act and effort of change is itself a species of unequilibrium, of which the great levers of peace, those that are at ease in Zion are sure to complain. Accordingly Luther and his companions were bitterly accused of disturbing the peace of the church; and scarcely less so, were Whitfield, Wesley and their associates. But, if it was wrong to do any thing which might be the occasion of strife, then these great benefactors of the world—these now acknowledged reformers ought to have had their voices in eternal silence, then whatever state of slumber the church may fall into, it is never to be awakened, nor a single word of quickening to be breathed into the ear of the sleeper. So the love of peace becomes a mere synonym for the love of sin—slumber and the very sleep which ought to be disturbed becomes a plea for its own perpetuity. If a church should say: "Do not disturb our peace." The answer should be, "Are you then as holy, as watchful, as prayerful, as active and as devoted as you should be?" If you are not, these are the first things to be attended to, however your peace may be disturbed by the process. Surely then, the cry of peace should not be made an everlasting cure for evils that are loth to be disturbed.

It may be conceived that when discord arises in a church, all hope of prosperity is seemingly gone, especially if, as may probably happen, it should implicate the pastor, and other influential members of the body. In such a case there is still hope of great good being effected by a strict course of discipline, and carrying out the word of God, and especially so, if the discord be brought about by false doctrine of some, or bad conduct of others, many churches have been greatly blessed by a strict course of discipline. It is sometimes the case that discord arises in a church, from no other cause than the greater activity and fervency of some, provoking the displeasure of others. In this case the good is greater than the evil; for it must be better to have half the members of a church awake, although the other half may have their peace disturbed, than to have them all in a state of slumber. In such a case though there be some cause for regret, there is much cause for thankfulness, and none whatever for despair. That which the more lively and working members would have to give up for peace with those at ease in Zion, is what they can not resign if they would, and what they ought not to resign if they could. The duty of the wide awake members, is to seek after more spirituality, and fan the already glowing spark into a burning flame, and let their light so shine that the slumbering members may be aroused, quickened, and made alive to God. The revival spirit now manifest in the world bids fair to produce a more spiritual, Christian union than has existed since the apostolic age, and such a one as may be hopefully ranked among the signs of the latter-day glory—a union of heart and hand in the conversion of sinners, not among ministers only, or bodies of Christians, but among Christians individually.

What a beautiful and heart cheering sight it must have been in that gospel tent in Nashville, Tenn., filled with thousands of anxious listeners, and that successful revivalist, Sam Jones, not alone on the platform, but surrounded and sustained by all the clergy of the different orthodox churches of that city, and surrounding country. Brethren, do you want to see sinners converted, you, the whole world? Then work, work, work, and seek after an entire consecration to God, your peace shall then "flow as a river," and with Charles Wesley sweetly sing:

"Jesus the name that charms our fears,
That bids our sorrows cease;
'Tis in the alms-deeds ears,
'Tis life, and health, and peace."

Centenary College Commencement.

MR. EDITOR: As all who were interested in Centenary College, could not go and see for themselves, a few notes will, doubtless, be of interest.

The weather was quite favorable, nothing but dust being on hand to mar the pleasure of the hundreds that were in attendance.

The sermon by Rev. W. C. Black was grand and timely, thrilling every heart and giving a fuller assurance of the existence of the God and Creator of all things, speaking forth from nature and the Holy Ghost.

The people of Jackson and the surrounding country, did all that warm, devoted and hospitable hearts could do to make the occasion a grand success. Never before were there in attendance such immense crowds.

Those selected to deliver addresses, for the entertainment of the people, showed much ability and earnestness in the addresses prepared and delivered for the occasion. As time advances, profound thinkers keep pace with it.

The several societies of the institution admirably contributed much pleasure to their attentive audiences. To see those young men meet in their societies and conduct business with such ease and dignity, and deliver their addresses with even a burning eloquence, inspires the sweetest pleasure and fondest hope, in those soon to retire from the arena of life, for the future of our country and church.

Old Centenary herself, seemed to complacently smile upon their doings, and bid them be of good cheer and labor on to obtain the laurels and crowns which an appreciative Christian world stand in eagerness to bestow upon deserving heads. Her massive walls, neat halls, and grandest of chapels, as a mother upon the most important occasion of her son, she wore smiles of great pleasure and looked unusually grand and imposing, as her young men of finished education and polished manners, received the honors, so deservedly conferred, as they received the most excellent and timely advice from her learned and accomplished president.

While all hearts beat with profound sorrow at the remembrance of the late, lamented president, yet many hounded with cheering hope at the presence of his able successor, and at the apparent success to follow his wise administration. All earnestly applauded and cheered the eloquent speaker, when he said: "Let Centenary live until her massive walls have crumbled into dust, and then may another instantly rise up as if by magic, to take her place to succeeding generations."

Let our people, then, rally around this noble institution. When any of our people contemplate sending their boys abroad to other schools, let them remember two things: First their church vows, "to support the institutions of the church." You cannot afford to leave your own, for other institutions. You stand before a glaring world as violating your vows. Again, boys educated at home where they expect to live, and watch an opportunity to help each other on or up in business; whereas if educated abroad and return, they find no college sympathy or help. Other institutions may educate as well, but like the mother, they impart their nature and peculiarities to their graduates. Our boys need to take on southern sentiment and mannerism if they expect to live south. Nothing is more susceptible of proof, that all institutions impart their nature and complexion to their graduates. This means a great deal. Let us all lay it to heart and study it.

On the first Monday in September, 1885, let all our boys return and bring others with them. The writer returns to suffer still more of rheumatism, as it has renewed its hold upon me.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: In March, 1885, we were called upon to give up another member of our little missionary band. Dr. D. C. Kelley found it necessary to leave China on account of the feeble health of Sister Kelley. It was a great affliction to us all, and especially when we had so much need for laborers in this distant heathen land. When leaving, it was his expectation to return to China at no distant day, and this was a source of great consolation to us. We did what we could to assist their leaving, and about March 10, 1885, they took a farewell leave of us in the harbor of Shanghai. We hoped the sea air would strengthen our sister and restore her to former health. They had not been at sea more than a week when their dear little Mary was taken violently ill. All was done that could be done by the loving parent, but so severe was the disease the child was soon removed from earth to heaven. The little flower which bloomed here for a short season was transplanted into that heavenly paradise where it will never fade or die. Java was still many hundred miles before them and China was more than a thousand miles from them. What must have been the feeling of those dear parents when they knew their dear child to a watery grave—the great deep! With only a piece of sail cloth for its coffin and shroud the lifeless body was committed to its long resting place. Sorrow must have filled their hearts, and nothing but the grace of God could have given them the comfort they so much needed. It was then the joys and comforts of the Christian religion came to their support, and they were assured of a blessed hope of seeing their dear child live and by in the glorious home prepared by the Savior for all his disciples and all the children of God. The letters which came from the afflicted ones on their arrival bore evidence that their hearts were filled with grief at the severe loss they had sustained. Had there been a vessel at that port our brother felt his heart would be relieved of a great burden if he could but return to his adopted home. Our hearts were made sad when the news reached us, and we prayed our kind heavenly Father to sustain them by his grace in this severe trial.

I moved my family at once from the native city into Dr. Kelley's house which he had built with his own funds, and there for more than five years we lived and labored for the salvation of these people, going into the city almost every day to preach.

In the fall of 1885, having no church in which to preach within the city walls, as our native chapel had been given up, I determined, if possible, to have a house of some kind. Not far from where our native chapel stood I purchased a small piece of ground, and with the aid of some friends in Shanghai I secured enough money with which I had of my own to build a small church which would accommodate more than a hundred persons. The foundation was laid in October, 1885, and opened for regular preaching in December. Dr. Jenkins and Bro. Guanyingham took part in the dedication of this house in this great heathen city to the service of the true and living God. Our native preacher, Bro. Liew, took part in the services and addressed the audience in a most feeling and eloquent manner. Bro. Liew took great interest in the erection of this church, and ever after his labors there were abundant, for he was constant in season and out of season, preaching the word of God with great power. He was said to be the most eloquent, native preacher in this part of China.

In the spring of 1885 a young man, whose name was Yang Kyung San, a carpenter by trade, came to our native chapel to hear the gospel. His home was near the great lake beyond Soochow, where he had for several years been earnestly seeking for truth. When he heard the gospel of the Lord Jesus he became deeply interested for the salvation of his soul. At first he avoided any conversation with us, but seeing him return every day at the hour appointed for preaching I sought an opportunity to converse with him, as was my custom to do with all who would remain after preaching. After some weeks he seemed deeply interested in the Christian religion. Day after day he continued to come, and I became greatly interested in him. Our native preacher took great interest in him, and did all in his power to instruct him. He came also to my house, and then I tried to instruct him more perfectly. I was greatly interested in the account he gave of his early life, and how he was led to seek after truth. His father was a carpenter and used often to tell him of the wickedness of the Buddhist and Laotian priests. He taught them all that idol worship was false, and that it was an absurd notion that they could save men or do them any harm. He taught his children that it was useless to worship them and would not allow it if he knew it. His mother was fond of visiting the temples and would worship idols, but he had often heard his father laugh at her for believing all these silly stories about what idols could do. Yang Kyung San thought of these things and he determined to watch the priests as they prostrated themselves before the idols, who pretended to be able to drive away evil spirits and bring men's souls out of hell, and he found they were telling lies and deceiving the people to get their money. When he grew up to be a man he found what his father had said was true. He was convinced these idolaters were wrong, and were themselves deceived or were very wicked men. He determined to come to Shanghai and see who the Roman Catholics were and the worshippers of Jesus. He had visited Roman Catholic Churches and two or three Protestant Churches before he came to our little chapel earnestly seeking the right way. Yours in Christ,

J. W. LAMBETH.

Is there a Remedy?

MR. EDITOR: I read in your paper, of May 21, an interesting article by John W. Hall, of Hay St. Louis, in regard to the evils of an unemployed ministry. I think Bro. Hall is correct in his views on the subject and that it is one of vital importance to all. And also that it is important to discuss the situation and, if need be, seek a remedy therefor.

Leaving the main point in Bro. Hall's article (the importance of an actively engaged ministry), I turn to another important point of it. He says, "A backslidden ministry is not only powerless for good, but often proves one of the most potent factors of evil known to church or society." Just so. "Like priest, like people." Not only does the church suffer loss by a backslidden ministry, but the outside world is deprived of the light and constraining power of the gospel of Christ, for the church should be like a "city set on a hill which can not be hid," or as a candle on a candlestick that giveth light all around.

It is true some circuits are very poor pay, and they shamefully neglect to support their pastors as they should be supported. They can not expect much so long as they continue to pay so little for the support of the ministry. But with the present policy of "poor pay, poor preacher," how long will they remain as they are, do nothing circuits? Certainly not until a more powerful awakener has been brought to bear on them, to arouse them from their shameful slumber. Then it will be a more liberal circuit, and who knows? Maybe the banner circuit of the Conference. To this end a first-class preacher could be sent to this work (at least for one year), while the "little" preacher is being recruited in a more prosperous charge.

But while many are languishing for the bread of life and for want of a revival influence, I rejoice to know that many others, who are more fortunate and deserving, are experiencing an awakening and quickening power from on high.

The Work at Coushatta.

Bro. Sawyer has given through the medium of the ADVOCATE some very interesting letters from North Louisiana, indicative of progress along the line of church and mission work. To the items of interest I hope to contribute.

We, too, have organized a Woman's Missionary Society, consisting of twenty-two members. Officers, viz: Mrs. M. J. Paxton, president; Mrs. M. W. Egan, vice-president, and Mrs. S. J. Davies, secretary and treasurer.

A deeper interest is manifested in all departments of church work since we held a series of meetings during the latter part of May. May this spirit grow more fervid and earnest until it breaks forth in Pentecostal flame, dispelling darkness, infusing light among our people. We need a glorious revival here, a thorough awakening. Our people are generous, responsive to any worthy call for material assistance. Oh, that they may respond to the higher and nobler call, "Come unto me!" The ladies have recently furnished the parsonage. They have a way of their own in doing such things, while the men—well, they come to the entertainment, pay for their supper, smile benignly and encourage, then go away. Wise men.

No storm has either rocked or wrecked the preacher's home. But a steady, spanking breeze has been blowing with now and then "cat's paw" of substantial wind that urged the ministerial craft on its way surely and safely. Not half as scary as these periodical, abnormal squalls, and much better in every way.

Good congregations welcome the preacher at all the appointments. Our mission work on the river is especially encouraging. At Davis Springs, some thirteen miles from this point, there is a fine church organization. The people there can sing actually without an organ to accompany the music. It may not be as cultured or as aesthetic as some, but it sounds like it came from the heart. Do not tell anybody, but sometimes I have heard they shout. Lord have mercy on a Methodist Church where the people can not sing or maybe will not. No shouting there, I will assure you. The ADVOCATE has a fair subscription list in this community, and is highly appreciated.

Mr. Editor, can you not attend our District Conference on the fifth Sunday in August and canvass this district by appealing to preachers and people? I think you would succeed admirably. Come on, you will be warmly welcomed.

In Memoriam.

BY DEBOPH KRENN.

After a protracted and painful sickness, Nathan Kling Knox, one of Baton Rouge's oldest and most prominent citizens, passed quietly away on Monday evening, at half-past six o'clock, May 25, 1885, in the seventy-first year of his age.

He was born in Franklin county, Miss., and was the son of James Knox and Sarah Lewis. His mother was a member of the Methodist Church, a devoted Christian, regular in her attendance upon the house of God and in the reading of the Scriptures. In his sickness the early teaching of his mother came with great force to his mind, and his hope of it as determining all the religious impressions and views of his life.

He came to Baton Rouge a poor boy with a load of wood for sale, which he had driven in from the neighborhood. From this beginning, after a residence of fifty-six years, he became one of the most substantial citizens in the place. His excellent judgment, strict integrity, his unvarying kindness of heart and unaffected politeness of manner won for him the esteem of both the old and young and of all classes of his low citizens. The colored man recognized him as a true friend, and he was a great favorite with all children.

The breadth of his information on subjects was equaled by the precision, calmness and modification which characterized his views. He held his mind in check from all sudden impulse or feverish estimate of business affairs, and to this he added habits of industry, economy, of minute attention and constancy in whatever he undertook. His success was there assured, and he was one of the few men in active business for over fifty years whose obligations have never gone into protest. He resided for several years in Paris in early life, which gave him an excellent command of the French language. He was a generous, affectionate brother, son and father, with relatives, connections and friends near and far. He was very domestic and living for his wife and children. He was most charitable in his judgment of others.

It pleased God to draw his mind from the cares of the world to the contemplation of eternal things by lingering illness. He was convinced that he would never be well again, and he attended to the reading of God's word attentively, prayed often and frequently spoke of his end as steadily approaching. Always cheerful, gentle and considerate of others, he grew even more so during these last months of his life. His mind continued clear to the very last. Very early on Monday morning he said, "I know I shall go to-day." "To-day I will be home." He sent for his children and brothers, uncles and nephews, and spoke to each of them, giving a charge to his sons. To his daughter he said, "Tell Bishop Keener I shall see him again." To his son-in-law he repeated this, "I have sent a message your father." These were very much his last words. Surely the Lord's "merciful, long suffering and abundant in goodness and truth." His comfort is there in the contemplation of the life, and especially in the end of this noble man.

Rev. Wesley Boddie.

Rev. Wesley Boddie died at the home of his son, Nathan Boddie, Friday, February 27, 1885. He was his eighty-fifth year, having been born in Edgely county, S. C., in the year 1800.

As nearly as can now be ascertained it is supposed that he was converted in 1823 and joined the old Presbyterian Church in Edgely county. Soon after he was licensed as a minister, he commenced exhorting, and after he was licensed as a minister, he was appointed to a supply where he worked as a supply where he was a limited one, but he was a good natural abilities and was converted to God. Blessed with a powerful voice, he was one of the

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. R. ADAMS, REV. J. T. SAWYER, REV. W. L. C. HUNTER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1885.

In a short letter to the Wesleyan Advocate, Dr. Haygood advocates a shorter scholastic year of eight months, instead of nine or ten, as we have in the South. This he argues on the ground of economy and better collegiate work. The last month is mostly given to "drill" for commencement, the practical benefit of which is small, while the expense is considerable. There is force in the suggestion and educators may well give it consideration. Our short experience as a pedagogic convinced us years ago that the month of June spent in the school-room is practically thrown away.

In a characteristic article on "Reforms" in the Chicago Advocate, Prof. Austin Phelps propounds an interrogatory that contains its own answer: "Have you never known a pastor whose ministry was like a stern chase? He was not only not in advance of his age, not even abreast with his age, but a little and only a little behind his age; so near that he could always be in a victory but never there in the fight." The picture is accurately drawn, and the number of such is not a few. When issues are sharply defined and courage is demanded they are never at the front, but none shout more lustily after the battle.

Mr. Parnell, the Irish leader in the House of Commons, claims the credit of defeating the Gladstone ministry. In an interview he thus refers to the result achieved: "We have saved the only remaining industry of Ireland, whisky, from a permanent burden, and have put an end to coercion forever." Alas! for Ireland if whisky is her only remaining industry. No wonder she is poor and ignorant. That people can never prosper whose only industry is distilling whisky. If Gladstone's government went down on that issue, its retirement will be temporary, for "truth crushed to earth will rise again."

Change in English Politics.

As intimated in our last issue a change of administration has been precipitated in the English government. The Rt. Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone and his cabinet after five years of checked and courageous public service have resigned, and the Marquis of Salisbury has undertaken to form a Conservative ministry. The present is a Liberal parliament. On many test questions, when party lines were fiercely drawn, Mr. Gladstone has won an easy victory. Just why, in the vote of last week, so many Liberal members absented themselves and left the government in a minority, has not been explained. The London Times insists that the Gladstone Cabinet should not resign, and that if the Conservatives assume the reins of power, their administration will be handicapped from the beginning. The coalition of the Parnellites and Conservatives in the fatal vote which overthrew the Liberals is already embarrassing the Marquis of Salisbury.

An appeal to the country will be made in the fall when it is quite probable another Liberal parliament will be elected. The extension of the franchise, a measure adopted last winter, will increase the voting strength of the burroughs by many thousands. From these new votes is anticipated added strength to the Liberal party. If that be the case Mr. Gladstone will return to power if he so desires. The probability is, however, that he will never undertake the responsibilities of office again.

Though it is no secret that the Queen rejoiced at his downfall, preferring an aristocratic ministry, Mr. Gladstone has conquered a place in history accorded to no other name. His administration of home affairs has been prudent, patient and statesman like, while his foreign policy has been conservative, pacific and Christian. Had he favored the "jingo policy" of Lord Beaconsfield wars would now be deluging plains in blood that are waving with richest harvests. He has sought to avert the clash of arms and settle all international disputes by diplomatic correspondence or arbitration. Into his retirement the great premier will carry the benedictions of the Christian world. He is yet the grandest figure in English politics, and without his support the opposition can not move a step. We predict for the Conservatives a short lease of power.

Missionary Aggression.

While Southern Methodism seems to demand a more conservative policy in her Board of Missions, the Wesleyan Methodists in England are criticizing their Board on account of its lack of aggressiveness. Yielding to the stringency of the times and some falling off of receipts, the Board concluded to withhold appropriations for extension of work and only provide for existing stations, until the treasury could recover from its painful emptiness. At the recent anniversary in Exeter Hall, however, that policy was sharply criticized by more than one speaker. Mr. Fowler, M. P., the chairman, spoke with earnestness and vigor. Referring to the grand meeting, the Methodist Times quoted similar words uttered by another speaker some time ago. He said: "I am not greatly in love with the policy, which may be shrewd—I will not use any other term—that it is proper to insist upon having money in hand before it begins to work. Israel had never crossed the Jordan upon a policy like that. When God said to Joshua 'Go forward,' if he had turned round, and said, 'Yes, with bridges and boats, then I will go forward,' he had never gone forward. If in this Missionary Society we cease to be distinctly aggressive we shall lose what we have got. If we set ourselves simply to hold our own we shall very soon have no own to hold. If we accept for a moment the position that if the income is stationary the missions are to be stationary, all our glory is in the past."

That speech surely breathes the spirit of Pentecost. It is the faith that aspires to speedy conquest and the zeal that consumes. We can but applaud its temper, though we may modify its practical expression. Such a spirit in the general church is the great need of to-day—a spirit that will venture on the grace and providence of God. Too much discussion of disabilities and possibilities will paralyze the arm of faith. Wailed cities and stalwart, warlike Anakites chill the courage of the timid, but the daring faith of Caleb says, "Let us go up and possess the land." That is the Divine plan—use your exhaustless resources, rather than hesitate at possible consequences.

But our resources are human and divine, and both must be considered in evangelical enterprise and ecclesiastical administration. However mighty our faith in God's promises and presence, we can not ignore the limited sources of temporal supply or overestimate the available agencies at command. Good judgment, in addition to pure faith, must control our calculations. Appropriations are necessarily related to possible collections. Administration can not avoid the arithmetic without bankruptcy and bad debts. It is simple folly, and not faith, to appropriate millions, when hundreds only are obtainable. The safe and scriptural way is equidistant between these extremes. It is removed alike from wild fanaticism and cold materialism. It puts a premium upon the faith and courage that "laugh at impossibilities," the symbol of whose impatient zeal is an angel flying in the midst of the heavens, and at the same time has regard for the base of supplies—the commissariat that is to sustain the soldiers. And one is as much under divine appointment as the other—the hero who goes to the front of battle and the toiler who "tarries by the staff."

But that Exeter Hall speech, quoted above, is in harmony with the soundest spiritual philosophy—that aggression abroad is necessary to stimulate the church at home. There must be increasing demands in order to develop enlarged liberality. A nation will respond to the heaviest taxable burdens in order to meet the exigencies of war, but would repudiate and resist them in times of peace. And so the church will never pay a war tax unless we have war expenses to meet. A forward movement is the condition of a fuller treasury. And the church that fails to move will cease to be. If ecclesiastical history has taught clearly one single lesson it is the solemn verification of this statement: "If we set ourselves simply to hold our own, we shall soon have no own to hold." Aggression is the law of spiritual existence. The spirit establishes our "goings"—not our sittings and restings. And the history of our own mission work as a church for the past two quadrainiums, confirms the truth of this position. When the Board ventured to enterprise new missions and call for recruits to strengthen our foreign fields already occupied, contributions began to increase. The church responded to these larger demands with more liberal offerings. And the result is, while the country has suffered agricultural distress and general financial depression, our foreign missionary collections have advanced in seven years from $70,000 to $191,000.17. Had the policy obtained "to insist upon having the money in hand before it begins to work," Lambuth and Allen would still be alone and lonesome in China, our great work in Mexico and on the border would have no history, and the Empire of Brazil would still be unknown to the faith of our church. And furthermore, the same meager offerings would have continued with a steady annual decrease. The going out of new men and women sprung from the zeal of the Connection and thrilled pocket nerves never touched before. And while the Board has been a little in advance of the church—the demands for new work somewhat in excess of treasury receipts—the courage of aggression has made possible the grand history of the past seven years.

A Word to Presiding Elders.

We have observed a returning, old time appreciation of the presiding elders' office. The years of sharp criticism and suggestions of multitudinous modifications have passed. Its importance as a factor in our ecclesiastical organization can hardly be overestimated. Without it the history of American Methodism had not been written. The Wesleyan Methodists in England are discussing the propriety of divorcing their chairmen of districts from local pastoral work and sending them unencumbered out in the field as our presiding elders. But the value of the office depends upon the efficiency of the incumbent. If the man is unequal to the work, the position is brought into disrepute. Presiding elders, of all others in our itinerant ranks, ought to be men of consuming zeal and always burdened with the care of the churches. The work of the pastors and the esprit du corps of the entire district largely depend upon his zeal and fidelity. He must be a leader—planning new enterprises, giving emphasis at points where there is slackness, and watching with eager eye the possibilities of every open door. He must be consecrated in spirit—jealous for the integrity and success of every department of our service. It not unfrequently happens that pastors stress one line of work to the neglect of others. There his presence and guiding hand is needed. His duties are various and onerous, and his responsibilities very great.

But our purpose just now is to invoke the special efforts of presiding elders in increasing our missionary offerings. If they will it and work to it vigorously, this year will be the one shining exception in all history when the assessments will be paid in full. By special agencies and plans of their own devising they can aid the pastors and stimulate the church to do large things for the Lord. And to encourage them we quote the following from the Central Christian Advocate, only adding that we agree most heartily with the statement "that there are hardly any limits to the possible usefulness of the presiding elders":

"We note with greater satisfaction than we shall undertake to express at this time, an unusual activity among the presiding elders. They are becoming more abundant than ever in missionary work; in some quarters there are indications of a return so far as practicable to the older and larger quarterly-meeting services; they are addressing special letters to the charges calling attention to the various connectional interests. This activity will produce results of an enduring kind. There are hardly any limits to the usefulness of the presiding elders if they will push into the work with a whole-hearted service."

Nashville Methodism.

Some weeks ago a paragraph went the rounds of the press, charging the several denominations in Nashville with complicity in the liquor traffic. In the list given Methodist occupied an unenviable place. We did not publish the paragraph, because we questioned its accuracy and did not wish to take up reproach against a neighbor. And now as the facts are given, the injustice of the statement is apparent, and much mournful moralizing has been misapplied. The homilies were good and proper enough, but from the wrong text. And what merry-making has been indulged by the enemies of Christianity! They have laughed and sneered at such Christians and paraded the statement as proof positive of empty professions. The correction they will never see or hear. We extract the following interviews with pastors in that city, from the Nashville Christian Advocate:

Dr. Barbee, of McKendree, says: "No member of McKendree Church, so far as I know, is a liquor seller. In some instances liquor has been sold in houses or rooms belonging to church members. McKendree Church has been involved only in this indirect way and a very slight extent—and I am glad to believe that it will soon be free from even this degree of complicity with the evil thing."

The Rev. Gross Alexander, pastor of the West End Methodist Church, said emphatically: "Not a man connected with the West End Church is implicated in the liquor traffic."

The Rev. G. W. Winn, pastor of the North High Street Methodist Church says: "Not a soul belonging to my charge is implicated in the liquor traffic."

The Rev. J. D. Scott, pastor of the Foster Street Methodist Church, East Nashville, says: "There is no liquor selling among my people."

Dr. Leftwich, pastor of Tulip Street Methodist Church, says: "Tulip Street is not involved to the extent of a cent of money or gill of liquor, so far as I know."

The Rev. H. C. Tucker, pastor of Park Avenue Methodist Church, says: "Not a man connected with Park Avenue is implicated in the liquor traffic."

The Rev. Dr. J. P. McFerrin, pastor of Elm Street Methodist Church, is absent from the city at this writing. We will see him and get his statement next week.

A small number of Methodists in Nashville have been partners in wholesale grocery and provision houses in which liquor was sold. Under faithful pastoral influence these parties drew out some time ago, some of them at a sacrifice.

One of the largest property-holders among the Nashville Methodists said: "I always instruct my agents to let my houses remain unoccupied indefinitely rather than to let them for the sale of liquor or any other immoral purpose."

The Methodist druggists of Nashville, so far as we know and believe, do not abuse their license to sell liquors for medicinal purposes. (It behooves them to be careful, for whisky is an insidious devil.)

The grossest exaggerations have gone forth. A paper in Baltimore, hostile to Methodism, stated that there were fifteen Methodists in Nashville, who were keeping saloons. There is not one.

Prayer as an "Undue Influence."

An interesting case is before the Supreme Court of Kansas. And as the lawyers say, "It raises a new question." That it should be seriously argued before an intelligent, dignified court of law in this Christian country, is a source of mingled wonder and amusement. The facts are these: After hearing the testimony and argument in a certain case, and receiving the instructions of the court, a jury retired to agree upon a verdict. One of the jurors proposed that their deliberations should be opened with prayer, and, no objection being made, offered a fervent petition for divine guidance. As the verdict was not favorable to the defendant, his counsel, ascertaining in some way the facts above stated, moved to set it aside because of "undue influence exercised by one of the jurors by means of public prayers in the jury-room." In his elaborate argument supporting the motion, he admits the right and propriety of private praying, but claims that public petitions are an "undue influence." He says: "One long practiced in the wielding of this subtle influence can play upon the feelings and judgment of his weaker brother; and, the more gifted in prayer the leader is, the more powerful will be his influence."

It is certainly significant that while Christianity, as a regenerative power is being controverted, and prayer as a positive agent is ridiculed as unscientific and untrue, that its "undue influence" should be learnedly set forth in a court of law as a ground for reversing a verdict. A lawyer, who is supposed to be skilled in the interpretation of testimony and acquainted with the influences that affect the hidden springs of motive and control the complex machinery of the human mind, gravely contends that prayer may be a powerful factor in determining opinions and reaching conclusions. That is a concession from an unexpected quarter. It is an admission of the fact that there is profit in praying—that it in some way controls the conscience and reaches the judgment. And so positive is its operations, that the learned counsel pronounces it an "undue influence." Instead, therefore, of its being a harmless, profitless pastime, it may be influential, even to excess.

Just how prayer affects the mind and conduct, the learned counsel does not attempt to explain. He accepts the fact without venturing upon its philosophy. From the teachings of revelation, however, and our observations of praying people, we know it tends to stricter conscientiousness and a holier purpose to do right. And what qualifications for jury service are more important? According to the law and testimony, without fear or favor, passion or prejudice, the jury is to render a verdict. They are put under solemn oath to do determine the case and if prayer will assist in eliminating every wrong spirit and intensifying the imperatives of conscience, it seems a very proper thing for a jury to pray. It may not be well for crime and criminals, but in that the country will rejoice. And such an influence could hardly be pronounced "undue." Indeed it is exactly due both to the law and the land.

Platform and Pulpit.

Saturday and Sunday last were days of labor, pleasure and perapration to this editor. With the mercury up in the nineties and the blood bounding with the excitement of public speaking, the stream from the pores was rather more profuse than the flow of ideas. But, we trust, the days were not without positive blessing.

On Saturday the Prohibition Convention of Lincoln county met in the shire town of Brookhaven, and was well attended by representative citizens. The ladies were present in large numbers to lend the influence of their presence to the great reform. Judge Chrisman presided, and, by appointment, the editor of the Advocate, delivered a somewhat elaborate address. The enthusiasm of the day, was not noisy, but the expression of profound conviction sat with deliberation upon every brow. They were not men politicians, seeking the spoils of office, but patriotic citizens demanding legal protection for their homes and families against the curio of liquor traffic. Some stirring resolutions were adopted and thirty delegates were appointed to attend the State Convention, which meets in the city of Jackson, on the first day of July. This cause is growing with marvelous rapidity. The voice of Lincoln county is the sentiment of three-fourths of the counties in the State.

In the afternoon we took passage on a South-bound train for Summit, to preach the commencement sermon of Prof. Bethea's High School, the next day. In the beautiful home of Mrs. Atkinson, we found delightful hospitality. To share again the shelter of that roof-tree we hope will be our pleasure. The Sabbath was excessively warm, the congregation overflowing. In the center of the church sat the pupils of Prof. Bethea's school and the young ladies of Lea Female College. An earnest gospel message was delivered as heat we could under the oppressive heat.

Dr. J. W. Harmon, the laborious and eloquent pastor was present, as was also the much loved ex-pastor, Rev. H. Walter Featherston, at present president of Kavanaugh College. Dr. Harmon reports progress in his pastorate and Bro. Featherston is having gratifying success in his school. Prof. Bethea has demonstrated due capacity as an educator and is deservedly popular.

In the afternoon, we went down by private conveyance to McComb City, distant three miles, to fill an engagement for a sermon at night. The neat, new church, recently dedicated, is now occupied by our congregation, and pastor Nicholson is happy. It was a heroic undertaking, but he has succeeded beyond all expectation. The church is a thing of beauty and we hope will be a joy to many thousands of souls. An afternoon and tea at Bro. Hibbert's, a short prophesying to a large congregation at eight o'clock and a night spent with Bro. Bridges, an old college friend, filled up the hours of a pleasant visit. Before the gates of the morning were fully opened we were journeying toward the Crescent City at the rate of thirty miles an hour, and stepped into the office at 112 Camp street a little after nine o'clock, ready for a hard day's work.

After all the ominous and awful statements to the contrary Romanism is not growing in England. The going over of a few men like Cardinals Manning and Newman and the occasional perversion of a silly young lord, have set all Christendom to prophesying the conquests of Rome. We have fed on these solemn calculations since early childhood, but as a matter of fact the Pope is less a power in England to-day than thirty years ago. These figures are from a reliable source. The proportion of Roman Catholics in England has decreased from 5.09 per cent. in 1833, to 4.5 in 1882. In London, with a population of four millions, the number of Roman Catholics is only 150,000, and this mainly by Irish immigration.

A little child died at Gretna, just across the river, on Tuesday, of last week, with a disease resembling yellow fever. The five physicians called in to examine the case were not satisfied as to its nature, but thought it just to the public to report it as "suspicious." Vigorous sanitary measures in that neighborhood have been adopted, and as yet no apprehension is felt. If a strict quarantine is observed, we have no fears of an unhealthy summer.

The Gospel in All Lands, the most valuable missionary periodical on our exchange list, is offered to itinerant Methodist preachers in the United States or Canada for one dollar a year, postage paid. The regular price is $2.00. Address the Gospel in All Lands, 805 Broadway, New York.

—Four colored men have been admitted to the bar at Columbia, S. C.

—Crop statisticians estimate that the total wheat supply for 1885 will show a shortage of 152,000,000 bushels.

—Boston University graduates this year one hundred and twenty-two. Twenty-seven of these are young women.

—The Methodist Church at Yewson, Miss., was destroyed by fire on Sunday morning last. The loss is estimated at $2,000 above insurance.

—The peach crop of Delaware and Maryland promises to be the largest in ten years, if not the greatest known in the history of peach growing.

—Rev. E. Paxton Hood, of London, a voluminous and popular author of religious and historical works, died on Saturday last, at sixty-five years of age.

—The death of Rev. J. A. Anderson, of the White River Conference, and Rev. David Sturdy, of the Arkansas, is announced in the Arkansas Methodist.

—The Foochow Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, maintains fifty-five preachers, and fifty of them are natives. Every presiding elder is a Chinaman.

—Mr. David Duncan, son of the late Dr. Jas. A. Duncan, of Virginia, is business manager of Christian Thought, the bi-monthly periodical edited by Dr. Deems.

—Bishop Wilson has been visiting Raleigh, N. C., and preached on Sunday in the Edenton Street Church. He also preached an able sermon at the University.

—Rev. Henry Evans, editor of the Irish Christian Advocate, one of our most valued exchanges, has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Victoria University, Canada.

—Within the past three months the several Methodist Churches in Chicago have received over a thousand members. There has been a like ingathering in other denominations.

—The Centennial Conference volume approaches completion and is soon to be given to the public. It has about six hundred pages and is a book of permanent value to American Methodists.

—The Edgefield, Tenn., Baptist Church needs prominent and praiseworthy mention. For years it has not any time owed its pastor a week's salary. It pays him weekly.

—The entire Chinese exhibit at the Exposition has been presented to the University of Michigan. President Angell, of that institution, was Minister to China during the administration of President Hayes.

—Dr. L. C. Gariand, Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, has been on visit to Tuscaloosa, Ala., and delivered an address before the University at that place. He was once the president of that institution.

—The Centenary of the formation of the Presbyterian General Assembly in America will be celebrated in 1888. Appropriate action preparatory to the interesting event was taken at the recent Assembly at Cincinnati.

—Miss Helen Taylor, an advocate of woman suffrage, has accepted invitation to contest a seat in Parliament. Wonder if this Helen will inspire the genius of some Homer to give the world another immortal epic!

—Ginn, Heath & Co., of Boston expect to issue soon "Outlines of Practical Philosophy," by Hermann Lotze, translated by Prof. Geo. Ladd, of Yale College. Other works by this great author have received and take pleasure in announcing addition to the series.

—Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, of Baton Rouge, was in Lake Providence last week organizing temperance unions among the women. She has a long list of appointments in North Louisiana, and is demonstrating marked efficiency as a leader in that great reform.

—Nobody can accuse Sam Jones of being sordid or avaricious. Indeed he displays a strange disregard of temporalities. In one place where he had held a successful revival he took out $1,500 was offered him, he took out $200 and directed the committee to distribute the $1,300 among the families of the saloon-keepers who had been converted and thrown out of business.

—Anything that the Rev. William Arthur writes is worth reading. "Tongue of Fire" is a classic and author worthy of the world's honor he receives. We therefore speak early for his forthcoming volume, which will be published in three parts, but will form one work. I. Positivism and Mr. Frederic Harrison. II. Agnosticism and Herbert Spencer. III. Deism and Sir James Fitzjames Stephen.

THE PRAYER SPEAKER.

BY JOHN B. WHITTIER.

Along the aisle where prayer was made,
A woman, all in black arrayed,
Chose, kneeling, between the kneeling host,
With gliding motion of a ghost,
Passed to the desk and laid thereon
A scroll which bore these words alone—
"Pray for me!"

Back from the place of worshiping
She glided, like a guilty thing,
The rustle of her draperies, stirred
By hushing feet, alone was heard;
While, full of awe, the preacher read,
As into the dark she sped:
"Pray for me!"

Back to the night from whence she came,
To unimagined grief or shame!
Across the threshold of that door
None knew the burden that she bore;
Alone she left the written scroll;
The legend of a troubled soul—
"Pray for me!"

Gliden, poor ghost of war or sin!
Thou'lt stay a common need within!
Each tear, like thee, some nameless weight,
Some mystery unarticulate,
Some secret sin, some shrouded dead,
Some household sorrow all unsaid,
"Pray for me!"

How oft, the type of all thou art,
Admitted to the common heart!
With face in veil and seal on lip,
To mute and strange communionship
Like thee we wander to and fro, Dimly imploring as we go,
"Pray for me!"

Ah, who shall pray, since he who pleads
For want, perchance hath greater needs?
They who make their loss the gain
Of others shall not ask in vain;
And heaven bends low to hear the prayer
Of those from lips of self-depair:
"Pray for me!"

In vain remorse and fear and hate
Beat with bruised hands against a fate
Whose walls of iron only move
And open to the touch of love;
He only feels his burden fall
Who, taught by suffering, pities all.
"Pray for me!"

He prays best who leaves unguessed
The mystery of another's breast;
Why cheeks grow pale, why eyes o'erflow,
Or heads are white, thou needest not know,
Enough to note by many a sign
That every heart hath needs like thine.
"Pray for me!"

South-Western University.

BY REV. J. H. A. AHRNS, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: Born in a college, Methodism has always made common cause with higher education. Its universities and colleges rank second to no other in the United States.

In the Lone Star State, Ruterville College was chartered before the organization of the Texas Conference. This institution, whose property is now in the hands of the Germans of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was rapidly succeeded by McKinzie College and Soule University. The latter was endowed to the amount of $50,000 by Cois. Feider and Kirby, each giving one-half of this sum. Never was a school in a more prosperous and hopeful condition than this, at its zenith, 1860. But the ravages of war and subsequent impoverishment of our people, together with yellow fever, brought disaster, from which it has vainly striven to recover.

The Southwestern University, by action of the various Annual Conferences in Texas, is the successor to the chartered rights and privileges of the three institutions named. It opened on October 6, 1873; thirty-three students matriculating. Since then there has been steady increase, until during last session the number of matriculants, including those of the Young Ladies' Annex, attained to 301. The university has two official Boards: one of trustees, to manage the finances; the other of curators, whose duty it is to elect the regent and faculty and confer degrees, both honorary and regular. The initiative in matters of conferring degrees must invariably come from the faculty. The trustees are laymen; the curators, representative preachers of the six Annual Conferences of our church in Texas. During our recent convocation the university was honored by conferring the honorary degree of D. D. on Rev. Homer S. Thrall, of San Antonio, and on Rev. R. S. Finley, of Tyler.

There was much joy at Georgetown when the news reached there that Centenary College had bestowed similar honor on Rev. J. H. McLane, chairman of the faculty and professor of mental and moral science of the South-western University. Dr. McLane is a man of rare gifts and acquirements. Assisted by an able faculty, the institution under his management did not only not suffer on account of Dr. Mood's demise, but even made considerable progress, numerically as well as financially.

The new regent, Rev. J. W. Heldt, D. D., of Lagrange, Ga., will be received with open arms. I know of no position in our church in which a man's ability could be more exhaustively taxed and show to greater advantage than in that of this regency. It is a pity that the salary allowed to the occupant of this position could not be fixed at a higher figure than $1,800 per annum.

I had the pleasure of meeting with our mutual friends of New Orleans, Prof. S. J. Jones, Ph. D., and wife, the latter a former missionary in the City of Mexico.

Of the addresses and sermons during commencement I dare scarcely speak. Rev. M. H. Neely, of the North Texas Conference, is a capital sermonizer and impressive speaker. The sermon on Sunday night, addressed to the young people, by the editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, on the "School of Experience," was indeed a noble effort. Thought, imagery and language of choicest quality united in securing from the large and cultured audience the unanimous verdict: "Well done!" The address to the literary societies, on Monday morning, by Rev. H. M. Dulose, of Houston, was strong, chaste, exquisite.

Columbus District Conference.

The District Conference for Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held at Sturgis, eighteen miles west of Starkville, June 6-9. The good people of Sturgis received us kindly, and by their many acts of hospitality gave satisfactory proof of their competency to entertain a Methodist Conference. The Rev. J. D. Cameron, P. E., in the chair. The opening sermon preached by Rev. T. W. Dye. All the preachers were present except one, and though some of them had received but a meagre remuneration for their labors still they seemed to be in good spirits and ready to rejoice that their names were registered in heaven.

The Conference exercises were pleasant both to preachers and people. The congregations were good from the beginning. Notwithstanding it was a busy time with the farmers, they left their work and attended the Conference, and, I trust, they were paid for so doing, for the business exercises were of a character to benefit them and the preaching was in power and demonstration of the Spirit. While every business interest of the district was carefully looked after, I am glad to state that the hours for preaching throughout seemed to be the most prominent and interesting hours of the occasion.

It was a disappointment in not having you with us. However, your interest was looked after. Bro. Leech was appointed by the Conference to wait upon the congregation and solicit renewals and subscriptions to our religious papers and especially the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

The following persons were elected delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference: G. Y. Woodward, Wiley Lewis, Dr. W. L. Lipscomb and Gen. N. D. Guerry. Alternates: Dr. S. S. Smithwick and R. W. Jones.

The next Conference is to be held at Brooksville.

The following resolution was presented by Dr. S. S. Smithwick:

Resolved, That we, the stewards of the Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference, use all the means in our power to raise all the collections assessed by our Quarterly Conferences for the support of this ministry this present year.

The following paper was presented to the Conference by Gen. N. D. Guerry:

This special committee appointed to suggest such changes in the working of our District Conference as in their judgment will enlarge its usefulness, beg leave to recommend to our Annual Conference to memorialize the next General Conference asking that body to make the following changes in our Discipline:

1. Take from the Quarterly Conferences the power of granting license to preach and require that the applicant shall first be recommended by his church to his Quarterly Conference and by that body to the District Conference, where, after showing an approved examination on the prescribed course of study by our Board of Bishops, and satisfaction given as to character and qualifications, license may be granted, and should the applicant desired it, may be recommended to the Annual Conference.

2. Give to the District Conferences the control of our local ministry, the examination of character and recommendation for orders, also the assignment of their work within the district in order to widen the field and enlarge the usefulness of this class of our brethren—all under the direction of the presiding elder.

R. M. SMITH, Sec.

To the Young Ministers of the Mississippi Conference.

Having just read in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE the just and eloquent tribute to the memory of Rev. Joshua T. Heard by Rev. Dr. C. B. Galloway is the suggestive and proximate cause of this address which has been long contemplated by an old minister of said Conference.

In the year 1842 the writer was the successor of Bro. Heard in the Raymond and Clinton charge, Mississippi Conference, where he had labored the previous year with great acceptability and usefulness as was his custom everywhere. This result, as was attested by all, was not so much the sequence of special ministerial ability and elaborate exegesis in his pulpit ministrations, as it was the manifest display of an earnest and consecrated heart with flaming zeal for the cause of Christ in the salvation of souls. The elements of power in his ministry, which are distinctly set forth by Dr. Galloway, and on the great primal tests of ministerial character, were the distinctness of his conversion and call to the ministry. And these are the primal elements of power in the ministry of the gospel of the grace of God. No other qualifications, however extraordinary in human estimation, can give efficiency to ministerial labor. It is the sine qua non of pastoral power. As a corollary of this Divine endowment is the conviction of the heavenly mission of the minister which inspires him for his work and gives unflinching nerve in its performance. Nothing else can sustain him in the herculean labor of his calling. Every true minister realizes the utter inefficiency of all other qualifications and the pertinency of the apostolic exclamation, "Who is sufficient for these things?" In addition, as prerequisite and imperatively essential to success, is the entire consecration of all our ransomment powers through life to the one work of our high calling. No diversion, however plausible and seemingly imperative, will prove disastrous to the accomplishment of the minister's mission and prove utterly futile in respect to the object for which the diversion is made as illustrated in numberless instances. There is one other consideration which the writer would press with intense concern in this connection upon his younger brethren in the ministry. The culture and development of the specific elements of ministerial power with which the divine Redeemer has endowed you without seeking, to apportion any other preacher however attractive or influential. Your work is specific and mandatory, for which you are especially fitted by Divine appointment. Cultivate these gifts with all diligence. Be yourselves. Fix your mind upon your work and no power in earth or hell can prevent its accomplishment. This counsel is given by your unworthy brother who realizes in the close of an imperfect and unfaithful ministry, protracted through near half a century, the solemn verities which he would emphasize.

H. M. BOOTH.

To the Bishops, Ministers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN: At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, held in Augusta, Ga., in connection with the commencement exercises of Palus Institute, May 30 and June 1, 1885, the undersigned was directed to prepare a circular address, which should also serve as an official report to the Annual Conferences at their approaching sessions, setting forth the present status of our work, as also, our necessities, and the outlook for the future.

I beg, therefore, to submit to you this paper as an officer of the church, having in charge one of our connection enterprises. In view of the fact that hitherto no formal report of this work has been made to the Annual Conferences, it may not be amiss to give you a brief resumé of its history. In their address to the last General Conference our Bishops said:

The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, organized by us a decade ago at the request of the remnant of our colored membership, has maintained its integrity and made some progress. They are in great need of facilities for providing themselves with suitable pastors and teachers of their own race. Whatever assistance we can render them in this respect especially, will be best bestowed, and we invite to this subject your favorable consideration.

At the same session of the General Conference, (the session of May, 1882,) representatives of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America appeared, and after reciting their peculiar relations to our church, and the necessities and poverty of their church, said:

We therefore come to you, who know the value of an educated ministry, and who know our wants as well, if not better, and we respectfully ask that your ecclesiastical body do consider some plan whereby we may receive some aid in this direction.

These recommendations of our own Bishops, and this appeal of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America were referred by the General Conference to the Committee on Education. That committee reported the following resolutions, which were adopted by the General Conference with great unanimity:

Resolved, That our Bishops be authorized and requested to appoint in consultation with the Bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, a preacher or layman of our church, properly qualified for the work, who shall be a commissioner of education in aid of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, whose duty it shall be to solicit subscriptions, contributions, donations and bequests from whatever source he may find accessible, for the purpose of creating an educational fund for the benefit of said Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

Resolved, That our Bishops be also authorized and requested to appoint three members of our church, who, together with the commissioner of education and three members of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, to be appointed by their Bishops, shall constitute a Board of Trustees, for the custody and control of this educational fund, when it shall have been raised.

Accordingly a Board of Trustees was appointed with Rev. J. E. Evans, D. D., as commissioner. As soon as sufficient funds had been collected, the "Paine Institute" was put in operation in rented rooms in the city of Augusta, Ga., where it was located upon the joint recommendation of the Bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, and of Bishop Pierce, acting by appointment for the college of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The school was placed in charge of Rev. Morgan Callaway, D. D., of the North Georgia Conference, assisted by Rev. George W. Walker, of the South Carolina Conference, and it was opened for the reception of pupils January 1, 1884. The hired house, which the limited finances of the Board compelled them to use, was soon as full of pupils as the teachers were able to instruct, the roll for that year showing an attendance of 125.

In December, 1884, for Providential reasons, Dr. Evans resigned the commissioner's place and Dr. Callaway resigned the presidency of the Institute. Prof. Walker was then elected to succeed Dr. Callaway and the faculty was enlarged by the election of Rev. W. C. Davis, of the South Georgia Conference, and his sister, Miss Sallie G. Davis, to professorships in the school. I was appointed by Bishop McTyeirs to succeed Dr. Evans. I entered at once upon the duties of the office, and have given my undivided time to the work.

While most of my labors have necessarily been bestowed upon Paine Institute, I have endeavored both by speech and pen to encourage and foster Christian education by the colored people among themselves, and especially have I tried to stimulate the zeal of our ecclesiastical officers, the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. I am glad to be able to assure the church, through you as her pastors and representatives, that our work is growing upon the confidence and sympathy of our people everywhere.

The school thus far in the year has been increasingly prosperous. The attendance has increased, the enrolled numbering 146, and the pupils have made marked progress, mentally and spiritually. God has smiled upon us and friends have been multiplied to us. Pupils have come from South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. We have been enabled to meet current expenses, with the exception of fifteen percent, on salaries. Still we are greatly hindered for lack of a suitable building of our own, and other necessary equipment for our work. If we were able to purchase certain buildings and grounds of which the Board has knowledge, the support of the enterprise would be easy and light, and our work could be more perfectly systemized, and much more and much better fruit be produced by it than even the excellent results already accomplished. These premises could be had probably for $15,000, and certainly for $20,000, a small amount surely to ask nearly a million Methodists to raise for such an important work. We beg the mention of the Conferences, by personal contributions and by appeals to our people within your bounds, to help us to secure these much needed helps. We ask also that the Conferences take such action, looking to this result as in your wisdom and piety you may adjudge best. Respectfully submitted.

W. C. DUNLAP, Commissioner.

Our New Church.

MR. EDITOR: I informed you some time since of our purpose to build a new house of worship. I now write to report progress. Our Building Committee went on the principle of making haste slowly. We took ample time to decide what kind of a house to build. We had before us plans of city churches in all parts of the country. We discussed at length the merits and demerits of such architectural peculiarity. The proceedings of the committee were characterized by remarkable harmony, and the plan finally agreed upon was adopted by an unanimous vote. Having thus decided exactly what kind of house was needed, we then employed architects to draw the plan and superintendent the erection of the building—one of the first architects in the nation. This will be universally conceded when I give his name—G. M. Torgerson, architect of the main building at the New Orleans Exposition. We next advertised for sealed bids, and, having several bids before us, awarded the contract to the lowest bidder, Mr. C. M. Rubush.

Our house will be a two-story brick 50x80 feet, with rear projection 12x20 feet. The basement will be 12 feet in the clear; the auditorium 23 feet. The tower will be 150 feet high. The basement will have two rooms cut off from the Sunday-school room by sliding doors, so that all three rooms can be thrown into one for lectures, etc. The rear projection forms below a pastor's office; above it constitutes a chair recess just in rear of the pulpit; the inside finish will be very tasteful; the front will be of pressed brick with trimmings of terra cotta, white stone and galvanized iron. The sides will also be of pressed brick. The windows will be of stained glass, modern in style and beautiful in appearance. It is the universal opinion of those who have examined this plan that this will be one of the handsomest church edifices in the State. The contract requires the completion of the building by the first of December; the committee, however, reserving the right to postpone the inside finish of the auditorium.

MR. EDITOR, I know you will open your eyes in wonder when you learn that we are to get this building completed, except seating and furnishing, for $9,500, for there are many buildings in the State far inferior to this that cost more than twice that sum. Meridian has better facilities for building than any city I know of, builder's material being, if I may use the word, phenomenally cheap. This ladies of our aid society—a noble band of Christian workers—are enlisted in this new temple enterprise. They have already about $200, and expect to raise about $1,000.

Yours,
W. C. BLACK.

Another Soft Nut to Crack.

Only a few days since the great Baptist weekly, the Watchman, allowed a baptism by pouring in the case of a sick person who could not be immersed. All right! I just read the following notice:

A SEVERE WINTER IN ICELAND.

HALIFAX, June 16.—News is just received by a vessel from Iceland that the past winter has been the most severe in fifty years. Nearly all the cattle perished from cold, and many persons were frozen to death. Vegetation was also destroyed.

Think of the thermometer forty degrees below zero for many months together and lower still long enough to kill vegetation and destroy nearly all their stock, and then talk of the New Testament requiring immersion for the remission of sins! Think of that! Of course the commission to go into all the world and preach and plunge, or dip men, women and children into water—if six feet thick ice could be cut away to get at water—a simple absurdity of course, I say that commission did not take in the Icelanders, the Esquimaux, Lapps and the thousands of dwellers in the lands where immersion would be death. The ordinance of the gospel must be such that they can be instantly obeyed on every spot of the earth where men abide. Immersion is not possible in the frozen regions. This would it would take to warm a tank of water to immerse ten converts would cost more than a year's wages of a Laplander. Warm a tank! Melt an iceberg to dip a sick Iceland! Then look at the hot countries of the equator and its vicinage. Why so much water as is needed to immerse a man can not, for love or money, be obtained in the Sudan country half the year round. Take it away. Do not say any more.

A LOOKER ON.

MR. D. L. Moody, the great evangelist, has sent us the following notice of an interesting meeting:

A convocation of ten days will be held in Northfield, Mass., commencing August 5, and closing August 15, 1885.

The buildings of the Northfield Young Ladies' Seminary, and of the Mt. Hermon Boys' School, will be thrown open to visitors.

Accommodation can be had at the hotel, and at the houses of citizens of Northfield.

The railroads will run special trains to convey visitors to the adjoining towns of Brattleboro, Greenfield, Keene, etc., where ample accommodation can be found.

Christian workers are invited from all parts of the country. Applications for accommodation will be received until July 10, addressed to D. L. Moody, Northfield, Mass.

TO OUR AGENTS.—On the first day of July, bills will be sent to our agents for all orders received up to that date. Please remit promptly where accounts are found correct, and in cases of error please return bills for correction.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 1885.

"LIGHT."

BY WM. VITT FAIRBANKS.

From the quickened womb of the primal gloom
The sun rolled black and bare,
Till I wore him a vest for his chilly breast
Of the threads of my golden hair.
And when the broad out of the firmament
Arose on his airy bars,
I penciled the line of the manichian blue,
And sang it round with stars.

I painted the flowers of Eden's bowers,
And their leaves of living green,
And mine were the dyes in the sinless eyes
Of Eden's virgin queen.
And when the dew on the trustful heart
Had fastened its mortal spell,
In the silvery sphere of the first-born tear
To the trembling earth I fell.

When the waves that burst o'er a world accursed,
Their work of wrath had sped,
And the Ark's lone few, the tried and true,
Came forth among the dead;
With the wonderful gleams of my bridal gleams
I bade their terrors cease,
As I wrote on the roll of the storm's dark scroll
God's covenant of peace.

Like a pall at rest in a seamless breast,
Night's funeral shroud I lay,
When shepherd's swains on Bethlehem's plains
Their lowly visit paid.
Then I fastened on their right the herald's bright
Of Heaven's redeeming plan,
And they chanted the morn of a Savior born
Joy, joy to the outcast man!

Equal favor I show to the lofty and low;
On the just and unjust I descend;
Even the blind, whose vain spheres roll in darkness
And tears,
Feel my smile, the best smile of a friend,
Nay, the flower of the gate by my love embraced,
As the rose in the garden of kings,
At the church's altar of the world's altar,
And to the ray butterfly wings.

The desolate morn, like a mourner forlorn,
Conceals all the pride of her charms,
Till I add the bright light close the night from her Bowers.

And lead the young day to her arms,
And when the ray roves seeks eve for his lover,
And sinks to her balmy repose,
I wrap the soft ray by the zephyr-fanned west,
In curtains of amber and rose.

From my sentinel sleep by the night-dreaded deep
I gaze with unslumbering eye,
When the cynosure star of the mariner
Is blotted from out the sky.
And guided by me through the meridian sea,
Through speed by the hurricane's wings,
His compasses dark, lone, wailing bark
To the haven home safely he brings.

I waken the flowers in their dew-expanded bowers,
The birds in their chambers of green,
And mountain and plain glow with beauty again,
As they back in the maternal sheen.
O, if such the glad world of my presence on earth,
Though fretful and dwelling the while,
What glories would rest on the home of the blest,
Ever bright with the Deity's smile!

When Does Judgment Day Come?

Mr. Green, of Jackson, La., has an article in the ADVOCATE, of June 4, the title of which is, "When Does Judgment Day Come?" He endeavors to show the inconsistency of "people, and especially ministers and public speakers generally," "invariably drawing frightful pictures of falling rocks and smoking mountains, of all earth's millions assembled before God, who is seated on a great white throne," to receive their irrevocable sentence; and then, when officiating at the funeral of some deceased brother or sister, representing the dead friend as going to his or her reward, being now in heaven among the angels." He at last comes to the conclusion that there is "no general judgment day." "First, if there is one," says he, "it certainly has never yet taken place. In the meantime where have all our dead friends been?" He decides that if there will be a general judgment day, as they can not be in heaven nor hell, they must be in purgatory or roaming along the banks of the Styx! Certainly the judgment day has not come; neither are our friends wandering aimlessly by the Styx; neither are they "lying inactive in their graves in dreary suspense."

God, in his wisdom, has prepared a place where Paul, Abraham, Lazarus, Moses, Elias, Stephen and the converted thief and all who have ever died in the faith are assembled, praising his name night and day. They are waiting for the general judgment day to admit them into the full enjoyment of heaven and its privileges. He has also prepared a place for such persons as "Dives" and the unconverted thief and all wicked persons to go and reap the fruits of their mispent lives until "death and hell shall be cast into the lake of fire," which is the second death (Revelation xx, 14), and they go with them.

He asserts, "There are many passages in the Bible to indicate that every man goes to his last account as soon as he dies." Mr. Bonson, a learned commentator, also asserts, "We do not find a word in the Scriptures of any particular judgment taking place immediately after death." Which statement is correct?

If we turn to our Bibles we will find that there will be a general and final judgment—that "then time will close, and eternity commence; the material world will be dissolved, and the assembled universe receive an irrevocable sentence from their righteous Judge." In Acts xvii, 30, 31, we read: "And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent: because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained." Here Paul, in his discourse to the Athenians, asserts that a day has been appointed for judging the world. Again, in II Peter ii, 9, we read: "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." In the third chapter and seventh verse we read again: "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." When Christ had given his twelve disciples power over unclean spirits and all manner of sickness and disease, and sent them to the "lost sheep of Israel," he said: "And whosoever will not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house, or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily, I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah, in the day of judgment, than for that city." (Matthew x, 14, 15.) Sodom and Gomorrah had been destroyed nineteen hundred years when Christ uttered these words, and surely the inhabitants had not stood their "trial." For their wickedness, or it would not have been spoken of here as a thing of the future, and in comparison with something that was to take place at some future time.

In Matthew xxv, 31-46, we have an account of this awful day from Christ himself. All nations shall be gathered before him, "and he shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divides his goats." The wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Again, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." (Revelation xx, 12.) Etc. The Bible, then, tells us emphatically that there will be a final and general judgment, and the best thing for us to do is to be prepared for it.

Look Forward.

While there is time and strength for new achievements look to the past for lessons only, and to the future for occasions to apply them. When receding time shall have cast a mellow light upon the things which bellow youth it will be pleasant to array those things and those days of brilliant hope in retrospective dreams; but the pleasure which this affords should be reserved for the hoary years to come. When youth dissipates thought in idle retrospection it plucks beforehand the flowers on life's decline, casts a shadow over the bright face of hope and narrows the limits of future possibilities. While the springs of energy are gushing in full force, and the head may be held erect, and the spirit sustained by phantoms, pause only to understand, look forward, move upward.

The world, however, loves the seeming, and in its hours of idleness will praise the fanciful; but it is the real and the substantial that forms the ground-work of all that is constantly good and that will hold the world in continued allegiance. Yet many are those who will forsake the path of rugged realities for that of flowers and music and sunshine, the pleasures of which are broken by every day of cloud and storm and last for a season only. Let life have one end thought and object around which feeling may crystallize into faith; then will conduct be uniform and effort fruitful and earnest. Aim to secure a high place until there is strength to reach it, and a foothold upon solid rock against the days of feebleness; for the wings of imagination will fail under the weight of years, and the aged mind must have in store the fond of reality. Reject, therefore, whatever sinks aspiration into half sleep and destroys the taste for practical attainments by engendering passion for a soft ideal existence.

G. D. PICKELS.

The Church.

"I love thy church, O God!"

The word "church" may mean a house where God is worshiped. It may indicate all the good in earth and in heaven—that is, the church militant and the church triumphant. It may signify a "collective body of Christians, or of those who profess to believe in Christ, and acknowledge him to be the Savior of mankind," "united under one form of ecclesiastical government, in one creed and using the same ritual and ceremonies."

We have little faith in a creedless church. We know one such, and in its pale we know there to be Deists, Universalists, Unitarians, Arminians, Calvinists, and then all grades of skeptics—anything below theists. This church in different places distinguishes too often and too easily. With no oneness of theology and, possibly, none too much of the love of God and none too much of love for this heterogeneous mass of brethren, permanent prosperity is not the characteristic of this church, nor of any one like it.

I know that the ministers and members of these churches speak of our confessions and disciplines as "made creeds;" but we look upon them as an honest declaration of what we think the word of God teaches, and nothing more, and due to the world and especially to those who might think of uniting with us.

"But, then, you are a Methodist." Yes, and as much believe that the Methodist Church is a church of God as much as we believe that there is a church of God anywhere on the earth, or that there ever was one. We know how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." In the third chapter and seventh verse we read again: "But the

There is nothing in the Bible which makes the continual laying-on-of hands (or apostolic succession) necessary in order to the existence of a church. Nor is there anything that teaches the successor of baptismal hands of any particular mode in order to the existence of a church; and if the Bible required it, those churches can not now show that they have it. The past, and especially the dark ages, present some dreadful flaws, had links, broken links in these boasted chains.

With glad charity we admit that other churches are churches—are churches of God's great army, and we "bid them God-speed;" but by so doing we do not unchurch ourselves. We think we see the unmistakable signs of a church in the Methodist Church. She has a creed—we think, a Bible creed. It has its ritual—ritual enough. It has its ceremonies. It has the ordinances—baptism and the Lord's Supper. It has its public, social and private worship. It has a large measure of love to God in its bosom and love and fellowship among its membership—a good amount of Christian fellowship. Then she has a church polity that is not anti-scriptural, and one which works like a giant, successful charm; and to some of us, who have been in this one hundred-year-old church for more than half of a century, she is the "house of God," a gate to heaven through Christ. Blessed be God! the gate so stands ajar that the glory often comes this way to enlighten and cheer us on our way to the city into which this gate introduces us, when the King of Glory and his saints go in.

"Brethren, the church is of God."

"Dear as the apple of my eye,"

And graven on his table."

It will be preserved to the end of time, and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It is preserved "for the promotion of his worship and the due administration of his word and ordinances." Do you not all say with me:

"If ere to bless her sons
My voice or hands deny,
These hands let useful skill forsake,
Thy voice is allance die."

LOCAL ITINERANT.

Plans for Raising Money.

MR. EDITOR: By your permission I wish to say a word or two to your readers, as it is said by some that not only our church, but others also, are less spiritual than in other days. This, in part, is true, and, as in other things, there is a cause for it. And this is one reason why we should attempt to look well at ourselves, find out the cause and attempt to remedy it. A want of means to carry forward all the interests of the church, and a covetous spirit that has hold of our people, has called out questionable (not to say, sinful) methods of raising money. Money is needed, and money must be had.

It is quite common for the churches of to-day (when the pastors will allow it) to endeavor to raise money by fairs, festivals, etc. These plans are having a deleterious effect upon the spirituality of our membership and cripple our efforts to save souls. God never intended that plans adopted by the church should militate against the spirit and simplicity of our holy religion, or that they should hinder the development of the spirit life that is within us. All things connected with Christian duty will work good both to the party and to the cause in hand. By adopting these plans we see at least three evils:

The church is not benefited by such collections. The party loses all the reward that God intended he should receive, as there is no development of the spirit of liberality, which is to be cultivated, and he feels in a measure relieved of the care of providing "things honest in the sight of all men," which is intended to be born and felt of all men.

Again, it opens up new ways for the world to enter the church. And it often fills the less religious with the spirit of worldly amusements. The church is enough like the world already. And, as an apology for such things, you will find many that are ready to say that these amusements "are innocent and remunerative, and no one ought to object to them." At such places, and often in God's own house, there is such lightness, frivolity, gaiety, etc., displayed as is unbecomingly named. These things will lead the church into the way of the world, and the world into the church. It is chilling the life in us; so that we are not winning the world to Christ, but vice versa.

Again, often the plan is a deceptive one. As the amount raised is not more than the cost and care that are bestowed by the few that get up the entertainment for the enjoyment of the many, hence it would be much better to contribute in a straightforward way the money God calls for, developing in the church the grace and spirit of liberality, and thereby causing the church to get such a hold upon the world and the confidence of all that the way is opened to the hearts of many who could be reached by no other means. The argument of some in defense of such plans is fully met by the apostle: "The end justifies the means," "whose damnation is just." Good is not the salvation of souls. The plan of salvation as taught in the Bible is complete, and the system of finances as taught there is complete, and must be adopted if the whole church would succeed in all its enterprises for the arrest and deliverance of our race. Its moral, spiritual and financial systems are but the one system of God, and one part can not be worked detrimentally to another, and the whole succeed.

The State versus Whisky.

The people—the sovereign people—are the source of law and authority in this country. Hence if we have bad laws, and suffer in consequence, we are to blame if we quietly submit to these wrongs without making an effort to have our grievances redressed through our representatives in the State Legislature. Below will be found some facts and figures taken from the official returns of the Census Bureau, which I wish the voters, white and black, to study. I make an itemized account of the State against the liquor business. The figures are appalling, or should be, I think, to every honest, tolling taxpayer; yet the account I make out against the whisky business is correct, but can not be collected, for it would bankrupt the whole business to meet its liabilities.

Official returns show that in 1879 there were 153,618 licensed saloons and 4,497 wholesale liquor stores, besides breweries and distilleries, which, added to the foregoing, run up the figures to 162,652 liquor establishments in the United States—all in full blast. It requires a force of 511,210 persons to keep these establishments in working order. These—more than half a million men, women, boys, or demons—are the parties against which I make out this terrible array of figures in the itemized account which follows:

There were manufactured 311,040,000 gallons of fermented liquors, which, at ten cents a pint, cost the consumers $272,832,793. Whisky and brandy manufactured, 339,623,680 gallons, at 80 per gallon, foot up the sum of $1,277,742,080. The wages of men engaged in dealing death and damnation by the drink, at one dollar per day (a clear loss to the nation), amount to $152,363,000. There are 1,494,325 tipplers, which, it is safe to assume, lose one hour each day from their business. Counting their wages at one dollar per day involves a national loss of $42,129,600. This tippling force recruits an army of 600,000 drunkards, who lose half time through drink at a cost of $90,000,000. To support the paupers caused by intemperance, $80,000 in number, at twenty-five cents per day for each, costs the nation $2,000,000. Their time lost to the nation, worth $50 per year, costs $1,000,000. Thirty thousand maniacs and idiots, the victims of intemperance, cost the nation twenty-five cents each daily, amounting to $2,700,000. Their time is a loss of $1,500,000. Sixty thousand drunkards die annually who ought to live five, ten, or more, years, earning at least $100 a year, which involves a national loss for one year of $6,000,000. On the same basis of calculation 450 suicides cost $45,000. Seventy murders involves a loss of $70,000. These items foot up a grand total of $2,982,382,566.

This enormous amount charged by the State against the liquor business, if divided among the 50,000,000 inhabitants, gives to each man, woman and child $58. It is but fair to say, however, that the liquor ring may offset a part of this huge account; but after all legal offsets are allowed there will be a vast unpaid balance against them.

"Methodism and Temperance."

The above heading to an article in the ADVOCATE of the twenty-eighth ultimo, over the signature of Rev. J. M. Pugh, was a rejoinder to some strictures I offered some time since to a communication of his previously written, headed, "Report on Temperance." He says I misquoted him. Perhaps I did not quote quite enough to fairly represent him on some points. I wrote under the conviction that his wording, or the tenor of his communication, reflected on preachers, Conference, etc. I may have written carelessly, but to me that inference was plainly deducible. While I believed his heart in the right place, I thought that article needed some explanation. In his rejoinder he quotes thus from me, "No brother ever heard it advocated on any Conference floor, nor in any General Conference, nor has he seen it stated in any Methodist periodical (unless to be refuted), that the distillery was necessary and pardonable in order to consume the grain and create a market for the farmer." (Italics his.) I made this statement on general principles, but since he controverts I will emphasize the parenthesis, unless to be refuted. He intimates that my reading in Methodist periodical literature is limited. This is too true to be successfully contradicted. The article he refers to as having appeared some years since in the Nashville Christian Advocate. I am sure meets the exception my parenthesis was designed to make. I have no distinct recollection of the article he refers to, but have no question that it was published to be refuted. No editor holds himself responsible for all he admits to his pages. Other periodicals than the Nashville Christian Advocate have published communications certainly that they might be refuted. Some years ago, when the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was under the editorship of Rev. L. Parker, D. D., since Bishop, now dead, an article appeared in its columns arguing that the Bible sustained the idea of distilleries and the manufacture of ardent spirits. This was over the signature of a Methodist men of social standing. The communication was one of some others in a controversy being carried on in that paper on prohibition. To my regret that sophism was never exposed; but without a question that thing was published that it might be refuted. No one who ever knew Bishop Parker would ever think otherwise. I believe its refutation at that time would have done good.

In the abstract there is no difference between Bro. Pugh and myself on the subject of temperance. His happy style in some way seems to make the impression that there is. His peroration leads the casual reader to conclude that he has vanquished me on the temperance question. "Doubtless I am better posted on his temperance record than he is on mine. I am willing to acknowledge him a leader in that reform, and am ready to follow him in any clearer cut movement to drive the monster from the land. To rush it headlong down a steep place into the sea of oblivion or to command it to its place of darkness and suffering before its time. What drew me out in my first writing was, and my main object in this, to resist the idea of a necessity of a change of our general rules to specific ones. Bro. Pugh failed to quote any authority sustaining the inefficiency of these rules to deal with whisky makers and whisky sellers in the church. His article was utterly void of any such illustration. Our General Conference, the highest authority known among us, did utter an emphatic decision as to the efficiency of these rules. This decision was well endorsed by all the Annual Conferences voting in their capacity. Deep piety, profound learning and a fixed and unmitigated enmity to the whole whisky business voting in that expressed judgment. His quotations to show that some of the general rules are specific show most fully that they are not. For instance, "Buying and selling goods, that have not paid the duty." I claim this to be general, and that a member trading in tobacco without paying tax or a revenue license can be dealt with under this clause. "Singing those songs or reading those books which do not tend to the knowledge or love of God." The specific part of this is certainly very general. We may still ask which songs? what books? "Taking such diversions as can not be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." The brother thinks this can be very readily applied to dancing and some other things, yet dancing is not mentioned nor are other things. Again and again I have had intelligent church members to contend most earnestly with me that there was nothing in the discipline, not even in the general rules, against dancing or theatre going. If such offences are dealt with, they must be specified under a general rule. I have called whisky sellers' bondsmen for the good, moral (?) conduct of grog shop keepers and the signers of petitions for grog shops to account, not doubting then nor questioning now; but what expulsion in every such case would have been sustained by the highest authorities of law among us. Aside from the vote of the Annual Conferences on no change in the general rules on that clause nor can the good brother show from any authoritative decision in our church that such action would have been without legal warrant.

He quotes from my article as follows, "I think there are few Methodist preachers who would not lift both hands to their utmost height to hurl the whisky trade and manufacture from the face of the earth," and argues that the hands did not go up to hurl it from the church, that is, "not a sufficient number of hands were raised or votes cast to banish it from the Methodist Church." That vote was not to restrain whisky in the church, but on a change of the general rules. I have confidence in my brethren that they were ready then, and are now, to banish whisky from the church and to hurl it from the face of the earth. The hands were not ready then, nor do I believe they are ready now, to go up for a change in our general rules. He admits that certain offences may be reached by the rules, though not specified. But asserts that "No distiller, or dealer in intoxicating liquors, or the signer of a petition, to establish a grog shop could be reached under the rule; but now they can," that is, since the introduction of Chapter V in our book of discipline. Now, as strange as it may seem to him, I insist that the very wording of Answer 3, Chapter V, goes to show that the general rules are of themselves sufficient. The wording is, "Let all our preachers and members abstain from the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, and if they shall engage in such a manufacture or sale let the discipline be administered as in case of imprudent or improper conduct." Paragraph 23, commencing on page 28, has this reading, "First, by doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind," etc. If Chapter V had never been inserted, if all in paragraph 23 was stricken out after the words above quoted, unless whisky selling, whisky making and the signing of petitions for grog shops, are sins are not included in "no harm" and "avoid evil of every kind," they can be specified under that preamble and dealt with accordingly. Certainly if that paragraph means anything, it is meant to deal with "imprudent or improper conduct" of every kind. When it is shown by decisions, illustrated with cases in point, I may write acknowledging my defeat.

Rev. R. T. Parish.

MR. EDITOR: I feel constrained to say something to you in regard to our good and much-loved brother, R. T. Parish. We have lost the best and most exemplary minister I have ever known. He was not inclined to him heavy burdens on others and not touch them with his own hand. No, he shined to the world that he did not shun labor neither at home on his farm nor among brethren as an ambassador for Christ. He never disgraced the cause of his Master by holding back and saying he would not preach because the people would not pay him. Nay, he proved to the world that his Master had called him and he felt bound to do his work, knowing full well that the Lord would sustain him.

Now his Lord has taken him to himself to his long sought and blessed home where his labors will forever end, and I trust, his example will have a blessed influence on his family as well as on all who knew him. Oh, Lord, help them to imitate his example and follow him as he followed Christ. I think if there was ever any one pure in heart, it was Bro. Parish. I knew him before he professed religion. It was at my grandfather's (Rev. Jesse Gibbs) class meeting that he was happily converted. His heart was filled with thanksgiving and his mouth with praise. Oh, may we all try to meet him in that good world where we shall be forever at rest. I humbly pray.

Resolved, That it is with universal regret we are forced to part with Bro. T. B. Winston; but our loss in reference to same will result in great gain to another community.

Resolved, That we heartily commend to the people wherever he may locate, our worthy brother, Prof. T. B. Winston, as a gentleman in every way deserving their confidence and support both as a Christian and teacher.

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be entered in the minutes of this Quarterly Conference; that our church papers be requested to publish same, and that a copy in manuscript signed by the presiding elder and attested by the secretary, be furnished Bro. Winston. Respectfully,
J. O. V. MURPHY, for Committee.

A Leaky Parsonage.

MR. EDITOR: What is to be done when the parsonage begins to leak? Most people have some way of repairing or recovering their houses, but the preacher has no land, no timber and but little money at this season of the year to mend such leaks as have been recently discovered at this parsonage. It leaks in dry as well as wet weather, for wagon loads of corn have poured on us lately with many nice luxuries from the country such as are needed and appreciated every day. I do not know what others would do with such a house, but I propose to leave the leak unrepaired. We are looking forward with interest to our coming camp meeting, which will embrace the fifth Sunday in August. Mr. Editor, we would be glad to have you with us again. Come, if possible.

MRS. MOLLIE J. CANNACK.

The Thermometer of the Church.

The past winter was very severe in this latitude, and one more severe than usual. Out of my library window, where I can read it from my chair, I watched often and anxiously through these weary and dreary months, but there no indication of warmer weather. It is as cold this morning as it was yesterday. So we kept waiting and waiting until, at last, the spring came in its beauty, and the spring tide is heard in the land.

I have heard the weekly prayer meeting called the thermometer of the church. It is said that the numbers attending it indicate the degree of spiritual warmth purveying the congregation. A crowded room would be an infallible sign of revival, as any one who shows the state of religion to be very low—below zero. A distinction is to be made between duties and privileges. All privileges are not duties, and all duties are not privileges. It is a duty to meet at public worship on the Sabbath day, but it is not a duty to attend church times and days, though under some circumstances it may be a privilege. Our people would attend public worship in the middle of the day and spend the rest of it, including the family, in the religious instruction of the Sabbath and in the culture of the soul, the Sabbath would be more profitable than times and to two or three meetings on sides. There is a religious distaste to be shunned as not good for the individual or the soul. The tendency, however, is the other way. And it is so hard to persuade men to do their duty, it is hardly worth while to caution them not to overdo.

To a prayer meeting is one of the privileges of the Christian life. A duty when circumstances do not prohibit, and there is far more hope of inducing people to go to it as a privilege than

I can not close my notice of this book better than by quoting his advice to readers:

"If my friend, I have such an opinion as I have portrayed, do put your trust in physicians to the exclusion of other remedial agencies. They have no monopoly over disease and I personally know them diseased and there are ever so many ailments which I could far prefer that the patients should go to Heaven direct from their powerless hands than that they should be saved to earth to use any of my 'unauthorized' medicine. And that the Lord's commendation be true, how many thousands duped, and yet rescued, as he was, personally testify?"

[illegible]

The next day Jules started for F with his kind new friend. We followed them to a workshop in the Boisfort. Twenty-four blind youths were busily at work; some used brushes and brooms, others used chisels, and others again making use of the most delicate workman's tools. They were a gay, happy set of workmen, singing, whistling, chatting, while their busy fingers never stopped second.

"Good-morning, my friends," Mons. Clarke said. "I've brought you new comrades."

At the sound of his voice the bearded faces were turned to him.

"Ah! it is our good monsieur," cried together. "Welcome back, monsieur; we thought you were never going to leave us."

"Yes, monsieur, we have received such a large order for trunks," said one, a bright, intelligent-looking fellow.

"As many as the English Administration ordered from its blind workmen," Mons. Clarke asked, laughing. "A hundred and sixty thousand at one time."

How shocked and hurt these good Christians would be, should they hear it! It would news that kept them away from the sick-bed, of course, they were needed at prayer-meeting where there are others able and willing to fill any gap in his absence. ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL

REV. W. L. O. HUNNICUTT.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 1885.

Pay what thou owest.
Tell less than thou knowest.
Know more than thou showest.
Have a care where thou goest:
So shalt thou live long
And never go wrong.

The press is a poor place to expose or remedy private grievances. In the first place it reveals to the many what would only have been known to a very few. And then, again, we suspect the justice of a private cause that needs public defense. The persistent power of right will assert itself and, sooner or later, command recognition.

Since the invention of the art of printing more persons are engaged in the manufacture of books than under the old slow process of copying. And more horses are employed in carrying passengers to and from railroad trains than in the days of stage coaches. And so all progress has its compensations and adaptations. Labor-saving machines increase the demand for labor. There is work for every man, and it takes but little diligence to find it. The great army of the unemployed and discontented is made up of those who don't want work, or only certain kind of work at the highest wages.

Mr. Beecher is regaling the public with his theological vagaries. He denounces orthodoxy with indignation that is anything but righteous, and really raves at the thought of a hell. He says:

The worst thing in the old theory of sin is the theory of eternal punishment, and men were made to believe it or be damned. I say you are damned if you do believe it. It is hideous and horrible, and makes creation a stumble, and God a slaughterer, and men worse off than animals.

We have never seen it stated anywhere that belief in eternal punishment was the condition of salvation. The Bible very plainly teaches that repentance and faith are the conditions, and it is so formulated in the creed of every evangelical church. But the question is, not, as an exchange says, whether the doctrine is horrible, but whether it is true.

The course of the Conservatives in the English Parliament since the resignation of Mr. Gladstone is not altogether creditable. They formed a combination that overbore the Liberals, but are unwilling to assume the reins of government unless Mr. Gladstone gives assurances of support. They are endeavoring through the influence of the Queen to extort certain concessions which will enable them to make capital for the autumn elections. Such "dickering" is veritable weakness. When Mr. Gladstone overthrew the Beaconsfield ministry, he succeeded to power without asking or demanding anything. If Lord Salisbury was unwilling to assume the entire responsibility of the government, it was unmanly to approve a combination with the Parnellites that secured an adverse vote. The negotiations thus far have only added to the enthusiastic popular favor in which the retiring premier is held. His entrance into and exit from the House of Commons and his passage along the streets are signals of wild cheering from the populace.

In referring to the change of church relations of a young minister of the Northern Methodist Church, in that State, the Colorado Methodist makes a judicious observation:

We honor Mr. Arundel for going out of the Methodist Church, and we would have honored him much more had he gone several years ago. * * * He ought to have gone before he felt constrained to preach many things contrary to Methodism.

Surely, in all honor and fairness a man should not use the privilege of a pulpit to declaim against its authorized and recognized teachings. If he is at variance with its theology, he should surrender his credentials, go out and then speak his convictions in all good conscience. We heard several years ago of a Methodist preacher, who had determined to leave the church, appointing the following Sabbath to explain his reasons for the proposed step. The congregation assembled and the pastor began; but a level-headed steward, speaking for his brethren, commanded him to desist. The brother was compelled to retire. A nice little sensation was thus prevented and the dignity of the church maintained. There is ample room outside for all theological adventures and ecclesiastical tinkers.

Whitworth College Commencement.

The closing exercises of this popular institution of learning began on Thursday evening, of last week, with an exhibition of the preparatory department. Mrs. Leila Cummins, the principal of this department, received well-merited praise for the charming exercises by her little pupils. On Friday evening the classes in elocution, taught by Miss Heury, gave an entertainment which was much enjoyed and warmly applauded by the patrons of the college. The commencement sermon, on Sunday, was preached by Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg. At a rather advanced age the Doctor is as eloquent as of yore. The large congregation was intensely delighted with his discourse. Some of the points were as striking as they were timely and practical. In the evening this editor addressed the Christian Association for a weary while. The graduating essays on Monday, the grand concert on Monday night and the commencement exercises on Tuesday, including an address by Dr. C. G. Andrews, were well-compelled to miss. Attendance upon the Board of Trustees, at the University of Mississippi, compelled us to leave on Sunday.

The college has had a successful year, and Dr. Johnson is to be congratulated.

The following note from Rev. Dr. J. W. Lambuth will be read with much regret. Our laborers in the foreign field are in need sorely, and, if possible, recruits ought to be sent out this year. Bro. Minglehoff has made full proof of his ministry, and we sorrow over the affliction that compels his return.

"MR. EDITOR: I am sorry to say we are to lose in a day or two another missionary from our already small number of efficient workers. Bro. Minglehoff has not been well since his attack of measles last summer, and is now to leave us not to return. He has had another severe attack of bronchitis, and his lungs, being in a very bad state, necessitate a change from this climate at once. It is a sore trial to us to give him up, for he is one of our very best workers and engaged in the itinerant work. He must go at once or die in China. We hope the change will restore him to perfect health, and that he may be able to engage in the work at home or go to Mexico. I think the climate there would suit him. I presume Bro. Royall will have to take his district work, and thus leave me alone in my district except Dr. Dukes, who is with me. We are meeting with some encouragement from all our churches; but the unsettled state of things in China is very much against the spread of Christianity. Our itinerating everywhere is suffering from the want of foreign missionaries. I have plenty of work on my district alone for ten itinerant preachers, which includes a tract of country of some sixty or eighty miles, with some fifteen walled cities and hundreds of towns. Only three of these walled cities are occupied by us, and only three or four larger villages. Preaching the gospel to these people is and will be the great work which must be faithfully done before we can expect to see them converted to God. Faithful work has been done by faithful and earnest men of God, and great good has been the result. We have some able preachers of the gospel in China from among the natives who have been educated in our Christian schools. We have also some able and good men who have never had the advantage of a good school education, and these men are doing a good work."

SHANGHAI, CHINA, May 15, 1885.

The center of Methodist population and power is changing. As our foreign mission work enlarges and wins new victories, ecclesiastical frontiers are delimited and centers of influence are shifted. Who knows but that the greatest glory of Methodism will yet be found in the far East? Bishop Hurst says: "If from all lands where our people are now singing centennial psalms our church were euddeuly blotted out, there is aggressive force enough in India Methodism alone to sail to all the continents and islands and plant it over again."

The following from the Standard, Chicago, indicates that light is dawning in the upper parallel. We commend it to brethren who fancy they have solved the great Southern problem: "Men at the North, underestimate the difficulties in the work among the colored people. A Northern man whose training was in warmest sympathy with the slaves, but who is now pastor in one of the largest white churches in the South, said, 'I confess that the further we get from the South the easier this question seems. Proximity to it makes it a very difficult thing to manage. The colored people will not permit us to help them.'"

The Stars of the Twilight.

It is hardly possible that there is a language so prosy as to be without a poetical expression for that time of the day when day and night seem to blend. The Hebrew was not, of course, that prosy language. In it "twilight" is derived from the verb signifying "to blow gently, or to breathe," as we often speak of the zephyrs of evening and the morning whispere. But a slight stroke of the pen would change this verb to another signifying "to kiss," as if the blending of lights and shadows were the kisses of parting or of greeting. But still more tender and poetic would the expression be if it referred to the kisses of children who as the twilight deepens come "to whisper good-night and be kissed." And the sadness of Job could be imagined when he could wish that day to be commemorated by the suspension of all children's good-nights, leaving the parents to chilly night of freezing affections and children to a restless and undefined sense of loss and foreboding of evil.

The stars of the twilight are not very many; but they are particularly brilliant. They are generally two or three of the principal planets and six or eight of the largest fixed stars. In Genesis we are told that they are "for signs, for seasons, for days and for years." So especially do they serve in twilight. The evening star and the morning star are so familiar that we need but allude to them. Yet if we pause to reflect that these are planets which revolve around the sun within fixed periods, we can still better understand how they are for seasons and for years. So, too, when it is remembered that the earth itself traverses its annual orbit, we are reminded that certain fixed stars occupy certain positions in the heavens according to the season of the year. Further reflection upon the fact that these large fixed stars are not uniformly distributed over the zodiac will remind us that at certain periods of the year the stars of the twilight are much more numerous than at other times. One who has studied the heavens also has noted the fact that at certain seasons of the year twilight lingers much longer than at others on account of the zodiacal light, of which, perhaps, no one has yet guessed the real cause.

The stars of the twilight are not for mere love poetry or reverie. The mariner thanks his stars or curses his stars. Why? Not because he is superstitious; but the twinkling of the starlight has a meaning in weather forecasts. Even the old poets represent the pilot as going out to study the stars. Full well did he know the meaning of the merry dance of the bright orb in the broad blue belt spreading fan-like over the sky and the delusive music of the south wind. Though no cloud appeared, he reeled his sails and anxiously kept watch. Again, how often has the farmer from his day's toil gone home and sat upon the eop and thought of the Divine blessing exuding from the twilight upon his crop! There he has lingered dreaming (thank God that even the weary laborer can dream sometimes, though life's hard realities jostle him awake) until deep sleep has dropped from the heart's ease in angel hands, and sweet rest cut off the long, rough road between him and heaven and slipped his pillow against the posts of the gates of pearl.

There are stars of the twilight in the morning. To the watcher for the morning the first lifting of Lucifer over the hills in the gray east is especially joyful. Who has not waited for the morning—perhaps, the morning of all life's day dawns? That morning, fraught with light or sorrow for all days, has found us awake and watching. One by one the great stars and constellations of the night have rolled overhead and gone down. We know it is near. It comes, and after it a broad belt of red. Only here and there are seen the larger stars. One by one they fade. Then only the largest. The sky grows blue around them. Already birds are singing; nature is awake. The watcher looks to the stars for his inspiration. They have vanished; but golden sunlight floods the world instead.

Everywhere we are reminded that we tread upon a turning world—everywhere twilight hopes and memories are fading or rising. Hope tells us what might be; memory tells us what might have been. Doubt lingers with its twilight haze, hesitating to say whether what might have been were best unrealized or whether what may be does not sound the knell of all that is worth hoping. There, too, rise the long, finger-like shadows from what has been and what will be; the dark streaks here where once the silver-flooded cloud swam in air, and here the bright gleams which to-morrow thicken and huddle in the thunder storm. Yet who would not linger under these stars; some with the sweet influences of Pleiades, and others with the bands of stormy Orion? For even here life extends and multiplies itself. The soul lingers to catch the footfalls of the funeral cortege of the past mingling with the heyday clatter of the future's children. Reflections come from the darkest clouds that make earth lovelier in its sorrow. Tearful adversity waits but a little till some rising sunlight transmutates the briny drops to diamonds. The lost come back under the stars, and the wished-for leap full of life from the womb of the future. Faith grows and gropes in twilight. But if she grows, it is to take in more of that heavenly light which traverses such abysses of cold night to shine upon this world. If she gropes, it is to reach out her hand and feel the touches of another hand that will lead her through even the valley of the shadow of death.

Figuratively, life has its two twilights. How gloriously shine all the stars of our morning twilight! How dark, indeed, must that life be that could wish them blotted out of the calendar! Stars single and in clusters, how they gleam even yet in the far horizon of memory! They had much to do in fixing destiny, for they had so much to do with thought, fancy, wonder, conception, hope, resolve, endeavor. Toddling babies, we prattled in star language, and ambitions that were too high for the old were commonplace with the yearling child. Ever through life we seem to have come down and still down until the clouds have hid the stars, and where glowed their morning splendors now only glare the lightnings. O ye stars, whose forgotten songs I would learn again, shine on till hope's morning dawns once more!

But if the morning twilight stars shall not come, there is an evening. Life passes. Hopes are realized and blighted. Days of triumph and of defeat blend, and in the flying years we see a picture in which we hardly know where triumph ends or defeat begins. Our bodies grow full and round, stoop and fall; but we can never tell what particular good rounded our form or what specific sorrow bowed it. But we know that one by one the black hairs have stolen away and the gray have crept into their place. One by one the stars of the morning hid their faces, and the angels of the children talked to us only in our dreams or memories. Slowly, but surely, day has glided by, and the sun, glorious for his light, sometimes parching with his heat, has gone down, and the twilight of life is upon us. The pilgrim of threescore and ten has traversed the road and waits at the gate of the house with many mansions. The hireling in the vineyard has been called from his labor and stands by waiting to receive the penny for which he has toiled. It is well to linger a little before turning to the cot where wife and children wait. Ah! yes, let me look over the vineyard as the yellow twilight of the sky blends with the stars of life's evening, and catch the footfalls of him who still at eventide walks through his more than Eden. Shine out, then, O ye stars, that have been hid by day and even yet are struggling, mayhap, with clouds. The day of life is done. Is it well, O stars of the twilight? Have the promises and prophecies woven into the song of the morning stars been realized? What songs await me now? Whispering stars, stoop and tell your secrets so long held back. Breezy stars, fan the aged brow and bid the weary rest. Kissing stars of the western skies of immortal longings, stoop, kiss me good-night. Then go down with me to sleep while the merry chorus of night's constellations dances on till resurrection's morn calls to eternal day.

Selecting a Text.

To many it may seem strange that a preacher should find any difficulty in selecting a text. Is not the Bible full of texts, and is not all Scripture given by inspiration of God, and left not profitable for doctrine, for reproof and for correction in righteousness? True, texts are abundant; but that very abundance only increases the difficulty of making a choice. The more texts, the more liability to error and the greater the perplexity of the mind in choosing. This is the method of preaching is adopted. Whether the text furnishes the theme or the theme suggests the text the difficulty of selecting remains. All Scripture can not be presented, but only a very small part on a given occasion. The question is, What part? The preacher is to go before his congregation professing with a message from Heaven to them. A voice, as from the eternal throne, says to him, Cry! And still the preacher asks, What shall I cry? Christ instructed his disciples not to study beforehand what they should say when arraigned before magistrates on account of their religion, for, said he, "It shall be given you in that very hour what ye shall say." But in regard to preaching Paul says to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Propriety in the selection of a text is often of more importance than profundity in its exposition.

A few years ago I walked till I was weary, almost every day for a week, through the great Centennial Exposition, at Philadelphia, looking all the time for something of striking importance, and pressing constantly forward lest I should spend more time on some portion of the Exposition than it deserved. Everything was intended to interest; but I desired to glance at much and see the best, and so walked up and down the twenty miles of aisles from day to day without being able to decide what should engage my attention for any length of time. Similar perplexity must be experienced who would select a text from the sixty-odd books of the Bible. The text must be suited not only to the preacher's mind and heart, but to the condition and wants of his congregation. The salvation of souls may depend upon his selection of a text.

On Monday the preacher's rest is somewhat marred by the easily, but often banished thought of a text for the next Sunday. On Tuesday he begins to inquire what his text shall be, and on Wednesday tries to fix his mind on something appropriate. On Thursday, finding no light on the theme in hand, he tries in vain to find another. On Friday determines to settle, on something, but finds he cannot. On Saturday, in agony of soul, he prays for a text. The possession of a hundred approved skeletons or fully written sermons helps not the preacher in this case. To select from the hundred is still to select, and may be a guilty limitation of choice. The minister of God, uninstructed by his sovereign, still groans for an answer to the all-important question, What shall I cry? As of old, so now, no doubt God, by his Spirit, furnishes the answer to this question; for he, the Spirit, says Christ, shall take of mine and shall show it unto you.

How often has a text, with many of the particulars of a sermon, flashed as with the quickness of lightning into the preacher's mind while he has been wrestling with God for a message to the people! The canon of revelation is closed; but the office and functions of the Holy Spirit are not suspended. Does not God, by the Spirit, virtually reveal a sermon to every true minister every time he preaches, whether he preaches an old sermon or a new one? If the Spirit make not the old one new, it is a skeleton of dry bones indeed. Mr. Beecher may study and polish his sermon with laborious pains each day in the week; but Mr. Spurgeon wants but an hour or two on Saturday evening to get his best sermon ready for Sunday morning. Such a preacher keeps his furnace warm all the week, raising it to the melting point toward the close, and then brings forth what the Spirit makes of the molten metal, fresh and burning, on Sunday. One preacher presents a polished statue; the other, a living being.

The best sermons are the fruit of much labor, both of study and prayer—the text as well as the sermon being the special gift of God to the preacher. Ask God for a text, for it shall be not only a seed from which a sermon may grow, but a word of more power to the hearer than all the sermon.

Preachers and Games.

The following has been sent us by an elect lady. Had not our correspondent Gilderoy discussed the subject so thoroughly in a recent issue, we would have something to say as requested. Brethren will see that their conduct is watched and their influence compromised by light imprudences. We should all take heed as workmen that need not to be ashamed. Our daily life should comport with the dignity of our calling.

Mr. Editor: If it is not out of order or asking too much, will you please give us your views through the ADVOCATE about preachers going out into the world, mixing and mingling with sinners in their various amusements, their sports and games, and spending all their leisure time lounging around town playing marbles and croquet? I do not mean a game at home in their own yards for recreation, but out in public, with sinners and the world promiscuously. Some come home from an appointment or the marble yard first, and not infrequently leave these places to go into the pulpit. Think you that preacher carries power and influence with him? Some of our young preachers (and some that are not so young) indulge in these things and contend it is no harm, and some of them even go to shows, tableaux and play parties. I have been associated with ministers a great deal, and I know whereof I speak. If you disapprove this course, I would be glad to hear from you very pointedly on this subject. I love the church. I love her ministers, and have always been their friend. It is only for good that I make this request; for I love a holy consecrated church, and ministry, and the church will never rise above the preacher. Dear brother, I do think an article on this subject from you, would be timely and opportune. It might cause our preachers to think, for their influence for good is paralyzed by this imprudence.

—Of the 57 parishes in Louisiana, our Baptist brethren are without a church in fifteen.

—The Rev. John H. Dye, junior editor of the Arkansas Methodist, has also been doctored. This Arkansas Industrial University did it.

—Washington and Lee University has conferred the degree of LL. D. on Bishop A. W. Wilson. Bishop Wilson has been twice honored with that degree.

—Rev. J. B. H. Woolridge, of the South-West Missouri Conference, is dead. He was a good man and true, and a workman that rightly divided the word of truth.

—On a recent Sabbath one hundred and fifty sermons were preached in London Methodist chapels in behalf of missions. These English Methodists are true to the spirit of Thomas Coke.

—Rev. A. P. Linn, a valued and well-known member of the Missouri Conference, died peacefully June 10. How many of our brethren are being called to their reward! This is a year of conversions.

—Rev. Phillips Brooks, of Boston, had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him by the University of Oxford, England, last week. This is a rare honor, but Phillips Brooks is one of the greatest preachers of the age.

—Rev. Thomas Harrison is holding meetings in Denver, Colorado. The "pink" where the services are held has a seating capacity of 2,500, and every evening hundreds have to be turned away. Already quite a number have been converted.

—We made a mistake in publishing the name of Bro. Bradley's little son, who died recently at his home in St. Charles, La. His name was Ed Earle, and not Edward Earle, as printed. The name is Scriptural, as will be seen by consulting Joshua xxii, 34.

—In referring to the completion and dedication of a handsome Methodist Church in the city of Lynn, Mass., Zion's Herald concludes: "The most noticeable fact connected with this consummated church enterprise is that it is not ornamented with a mortgage, or burdened with even the smallest indebtedness."

—When a man has to ride six or eight miles to an appointment," said Bishop Merrill, "what excuse can he have if he has not a sermon thought out and wrought into his soul, struggling for deliverance by the time he reaches the people?" That depends. If the brother begins his sermon with the ride, it will be a "poor preach."

—We regret to hear of the continued serious illness of Mrs. Keener, wife of Rev. John Keener, presiding elder of the Mobile district. She is at present at Bishop Keener's Ocean Springs home. A bright, lovely young Christian, many prayers are offered, that length of days and large usefulness may be her earthly portion.

—The editor had a very pleasant duty to perform on the evening of the eighteenth instant, at the residence of Mr. Jesse Warren, in Brookhaven, Miss.—the celebrating the marriage of his youngest daughter, Miss Anna and Mr. Charles McNair. We wish our young friends years of the truest happiness and most blessed usefulness.

—In a letter to the Holston Methodist from Bristol and Sullivan College, Rev. D. S. Hearn makes pleasant mention of Rev. S. H. Wertheim of this city, who took prominent part in the commencement exercises as follows: "I could indulge in the superlatives of strong words in writing of the oratory of this, my gifted friend, but I forbear!"

—Mrs. Mahala Porter Ames, wife of the late Bishop Ames, died after a brief illness in Austin, Texas, on the first instant, at eighty-four years of age. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in girlhood, and must have remained in its communion quite seventy years. She died in peace with her Savior's name upon her lips.

—Rev. J. W. Hounell, presiding elder of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, writes of a gracious revival at Indianola. The pentecostal spirit seems to be abroad in all that land. He says: "Bro. W. Dorman is having a good meeting at Indianola. The best element of the country are joining our church. The whole charge is on a boom, and all the connectional claims will be met at Indianola and Falsouth."

Emory and Henry College has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. T. A. S. Adams, President of Centenary College, and Rev. J. P. Garland, of Lynchburg, Va. Dr. Adams is an alumnus of Emory and Henry College, and we doubt if that honored institution has a more scholarly son. This is an honor richly merited.

Miss Frances E. Willard's first book, "Nineteen Beautiful Years," has been very popular. We read with delight in the younger years of our ministry and yet retain the blessed impressions its perusal made. A new edition is now to be issued with a chapter added, entitled, "After Twenty Years," and the book is to be sent out as a summer premium for all subscribers to The Union Signal.

President J. H. Harrison, of the Southern University, located in New Orleans, has our thanks for a copy of his catalogue for 1884-5. This is a catalogue for the education of the colored people, and under the organization of Prof. Harrison has become a potent factor in our educational system. Our profoundest sympathies are with him in his great work, and our heartiest commendations for his marked success.

Our old friend, Rev. Josiah Bancroft, presiding elder of the Greensboro district, Alabama Conference, writes the editor a private letter, in which he says: "Just in from a long trip on the district. Matters somewhat in advance of last year. Preaching all well, working faithfully. You have a most cordial invitation to attend the Greensboro District Conference." Thanks. If other engagements did not forbid, we would be present.

Rev. R. M. Blocker, writing from Birmingham, La., under date of June 15, reports a gracious meeting in his charge. He says: "We protracted our meeting here from last Sunday night week, and closed to-night with thirteen accessions to the church and many conversions. There were about twenty persons still asking for prayers. The church has been greatly blessed. I don't think I ever attended a better meeting. Glory be to God."

We are glad to see that Rev. E. E. Rose has been elected President of Emory and Henry College. He has for several years occupied a chair in the institution and served as vice-president. He is a progressive man and marvellously full of books. Emory and Henry commences a new year under favorable auspices. The endowment fund is growing—nearly ten thousand dollars having been subscribed. In 1886 the semi-centennial of the founding of the college will be celebrated, and committees have already been appointed to arrange for the interesting event.

Major Joseph T. Hardie, of Selma, Ala., has for years been a prominent and active Christian worker. While conducting a large business he has found time to do much evangelistic work and with gracious success. We shared in his labors and their results both in Jacksonville and Vicksburg, and have prized his Christian friendship. In 1880 he settled in business and compromised with his creditors at twenty-five cents on the dollar. Then followed harsh criticisms. Because of his previous prominence in Christian work, his integrity was assailed and his Christian professions caricatured. But without recrimination he set to work and has so far regained his integrity as to pay the remaining seventy-five per cent. of his indebtedness. Though not legally liable, he has obeyed the voice of conscience. The Selma Times well says, that "he is a man of the strictest integrity."

Rev. Sam Jones passed through the city on Friday afternoon last for New Orleans, to conduct a series of meetings. He is accompanied on this trip by Rev. W. C. Dunlap, agent of Palmetto Institute, and Rev. J. A. Bowen, of the North Mississippi Conference, who has himself rare gifts for evangelistic work. Indeed it is an open secret that Sam Jones would like to associate Bro. Bowen with him in this apostleship. Dr. Carter, Rev. B. F. White, Bro. Carver, Jamieson and Evans, and the editor met Bro. Jones at the depot and endeavored to detain him for a day or two, but his engagements were imperative. He agrees, however, to come to New Orleans in January or February. Until then his time is fully occupied. We would be glad to have him earlier, but will arrange for his coming at the time suggested and pray for Divine blessing upon his labors. Though constantly at work, he is looking well and is overflowing with good cheer.

SERMONS AND SAYINGS OF SAM JONES. A copy of this work by Dr. Hardie has been received. It is a compilation of eighty pages, containing short-hand reports of several sermons and many striking proverbs by the great Georgia evangelist. Price, fifty cents. Address Rev. J. J. Lafferty, Richmond, Va.

Books and Periodicals.

THE WOMEN OF THE REFORMATION. By Mrs. Anne Wittenmeyer. Price, $2.00. New York: Phillips & Hunt.

We are greatly obliged for a copy of this superb volume, and have read it with real profit. The author has been a diligent, painstaking student of history, and with rare discrimination has grouped the stories of this book. Joan, mother of Richard II, Anne of Bohemia, queen of Richard II, Marguerite of Valois, Jeanne d'Albret, the illustrious queen of Navarre, Anne Boleyn, Elizabeth Knox and others are photographed with the skillful hand of a genius. We quite agree with Mrs. Kate Brownlee Sherwood in her graceful introduction to the volume, when she says: "It is a brave story, touchingly told, and a precious bequest to mothers and daughters of America."

CHRISTIAN UNITY AND CHRISTIAN FAITH. New York: A. D. F. Randolph & Co. Price, $1.00.

This is a series of discourses delivered in St. George's Episcopal Church, St. Louis, by ministers of various churches. The rector, Rev. Dr. John Fulton, conceived the idea and extended a cordial invitation to certain ministers to deliver discourses in his church on the Sunday evenings of Lent. The Bishop of the diocese approved the plan and presided on two occasions. Dr. Fulton contributes an introductory essay of broad catholic spirit. The sermons are by Dr. J. D. Nicolls, Dr. W. W. Boyd, Dr. C. P. Madden, Rev. J. G. Merrill, Dr. M. Rhodes and Dr. W. V. Tudor. The whole make up an excellent and valuable volume.

The Century Co., of New York, will accept thanks for a bound volume of their quarterly magazine. It embraces the numbers from November to May, and includes some of the finest articles, illustrated and other, that have appeared in the Century during its entire history. The volume is well bound and is a library of choice literature within itself.

Cassell's Family Magazine, for July, is on our table. We look with pleasure to the monthly coming of this valuable and readable periodical. This number is one of the best of the series. The editorial department is exceptionally good. Besides some capital serial stories there are articles in this number of scientific, historical and literary value. The frontispiece "Poles Apart," is exquisite. $1.50 per annum. Fifteen cents single number. Cassell & Co., 730 and 741 Broadway, New York.

The Quiver, for July, is on our table. This is a valuable illustrated magazine for Sunday and general reading. The first article in this issue is entitled "Sunday Thoughts in Rome," and is from the pen of Rev. J. Stow, Lord, D. D., Not Done in Rome, The World and Christ, The Children of the Bible, A Peep at the Old Convents in Cairo, The Holyed Disciple, etc., together with several charming serials make up a very readable number. The price of this monthly is only $1.50 a year. Cassell & Co., 730 and 741 Broadway, New York.

The North American Review, for July, has been received, and has an excellent table of contents. Land and Taxation is discussed by David Dudley Field and Henry George. Two Years of Civil Service Reform is an admirable paper by Dorman B. Eaton. "Is Christianity Declining?" is a question asked and answered in a vigorous article by Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst. Prohibition in Practice is a second paper by Gail Hamilton against the third-party movement. Extradition of Dynamite Criminals. An Enklist Imperialist Bubble. The Subterranean History of Man and European Influences in Asia, are other articles that make up the first issue of a second volume. The number is a second volume. The price of this monthly is only $1.50 a year. Cassell & Co., 730 and 741 Broadway, New York.

The third year of Electra's existence begins with no diminution of interest. The first number gives us, among other interesting articles, a charming sketch of Charlotte Brontë, under title, "A Flower of the North," from the gift pen of Miss Rosa W. Fry. A realistic short story, "The Sandal-wood Necktie," by one of the best story writers of the Northwest, "The Notes on Colonial Florida," which begin in this number, are carefully gleaned and entertainingly told by "Ceel Keith." The serial, "Daisy and I," shows a continuously increasing power in the talented young author, back part. Pals under the shoulder-blade, Fullness after eating, with a disinclination to exertion of body or mind, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, weariness, Dizziness, Flushing at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, Headaches near the right eye, Restlessness, with giddiness, highly colored urine, and CONSTIPATION.

TUTT'S PILLS are especially adapted to such cases, one dose effects such a change of feeling as to assist the sufferer. They increase the Appetite, and cause the body to take on flesh, thus the body is nourished, and by their tonic action on the Digestive Organs, Regular Stools are produced. Price 25c. 44 Murray St., N.Y.

BARGAINS FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS.

To close out remainder of stock on hand I offer 4 Sunday-school Libraries (Union), comprising each 100 volumes, 18 mo., illustrated, from 72 to 288 pages each, muslin backs, all different—price, $20 each. Will sell one or more for $10 each. Also one $25 Library, containing 100 larger volumes, cloth bound books, of Nashville Publishing House, comprising nearly all the juvenile publications, at from 40 to 75 cents, for 15 cents each until sold. A variety of Union and Methodist Question Books, Catechisms, Song Books, etc., at half price. Six copies Complete Church Record, the best ever issued—original price, $5. Will sell for $2.50 each. PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Allen & Bros., Fifth & Vine Sts., Cincinnati, O., and 140 Nassau St., New York, making them our Special Publishers' Agents, and giving them the entire charge of the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

The vacation season is coming on apace, and the usual large orders for canned goods are being filled for the proprietors of Summer resorts, where fresh fruits and vegetables right out of the orchard and garden are the chief attraction.

W. L. CUSHING.—The advertisement of this well known machinery agent will be found in this issue of the Advocate. The entire list of articles advertised are the product of first class manufacturers in the line of goods, this fact combined with the well known reputation of Mr. Cushing for his straight forward manner of all his dealings, guarantees to the purchaser every facility against imposition and shoddy machinery. Write for price lists and testimonials, 160 Gravier Street.

Rev. A. C. Crain, 222 St. Joseph St., New Orleans, the well-known agent of the Am. Bap. Pub. Socy., in a statement dated June 16, '85, says: "I have used the New Le. Remedy in my family for chronic catarrh and tetter. Both were cured. The best constitutional remedy I have seen. It is a better anti-periodic than quinine."

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone Hill, O., Chickens county, Ala., having so often read in the Advocate of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having viewed the sale for one of those lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request that who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $100, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein invites all when visiting the city to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pleasure in showing, even if you do not desire to buy. He has the celebrated Mahusius, Bennett, Mason & Hamlin and Hale pianos at very low prices and on the easiest terms. Old pianos repaired and taken in exchange for a new one. Good second-hand pianos as low as $50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, June 16.—Wm. Vanderbilt's private car was the last of the three which made up the special train which was to convey Gen. Grant to the depot about 9 o'clock, and at once entered the Vanderbilt car and took his seat on a sofa. Mrs. Grant, Mrs. U. S. Grant and Mrs. Sartoris were also in the car, while the children of the household were under the care of Col. Fred. Grant in a forward car. Gen. Grant passed a restless night, and this morning looks much depressed and emaciated.

MEMPHIS, TENN., June 16.—All the public gambling houses were closed this afternoon at 4 o'clock by order of the Criminal Court in session to-day and President Hadden was a witness before that august tribunal. President Hadden said he had them well regulated, and that the city was receiving quite a revenue from the houses. It was the unanimous desire of the grand jury that the houses should be closed by the city authorities, and in obedience to that request an officer was detailed to notify proprietors to close up. The order was promptly observed.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The United States steamship Iroquois, of the Pacific Station, has sailed for Panama for Guayaquil, Ecuador, under sealed instructions from the Secretary of State in regard to the case of Santos, the American citizen, held there under arrest. It is understood that the Iroquois is instructed to make a formal demand in the name of the United States for the prompt release of the prisoner and to afford him all possible assistance.

WACO, TEX., June 21.—Evangelist Sam Jones opened his services here to-day, preaching to a congregation of 4000. No one was hurt.

SHERBROOK, DAKOTA, June 22.—Every building in this town is being burned over Saturday except the county building, which was held down by the safe. No one was hurt.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, June 17.—The Queen has ordered Mr. Gladstone an earldom in recognition of his services to the Queen and the country. Mr. Gladstone asked that he be allowed to forego the honor.

LONDON, June 19.—It is known that 140 persons were killed by the explosion in the Pendlebury colliery, near Manchester, yesterday. The chamber in which the explosion occurred is so filled with debris that thus far only forty-five bodies have been recovered.

MADRID, June 19.—The cholera returns, official, for yesterday are as follows: Madrid—new cases 36, deaths 12; Valencia (city)—new cases 26, deaths 10; Murcia (city)—new cases 26, deaths 10; Murcia (province)—new cases 26, deaths 10; Castillon de la Plana (province)—new cases 85, deaths 44.

LONDON, June 20.—By an explosion to-day in the Burley pit, at Appleton, North Staffordshire, ten persons were killed.

LONDON, June 21.—Lord Salisbury had a narrow escape from injury while going down to his country seat last evening. Just after he arrived at Hatfield Station a goods train came into collision with the engine of the train he had just left. Both locomotives were badly wrecked and several trainmen and passengers were injured, but no one was killed.

The disaster in the Pendlebury colliery, near Manchester, proves to have been more terrible than was at first reported. The number of miners now known to have been killed is 163, and many more are still unaccounted for.

LONDON, June 22.—The political crisis is ended. Lord Salisbury will be formally proclaimed Premier to-morrow. The following is an authentic list of the new Cabinet: Prime Minister and Secretary for Foreign Affairs, the Marquis of Salisbury; First Lord of the Treasury, Sir Stafford Northcote; Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks Beach; Lord High Chancellor, Sir Hardinge Gifford; Lord President of the Council, Viscount Cranbrook; Lord Privy Seal, the Earl of Harrowby; Secretary for the Home Department, Sir Richard Assheton-Cross; Secretary for the Colonial Department, Col. MY NATIVE LAND.

BY WHITTIER.

Land of the forest and the rock,
Of dark blue lake and mighty river,
Of mountains reared aloft to mock
The storm's career, the lightning's shock,
My own green land forever!
O never may a son of thine,
Where'er his wandering steps incline,
Forget the skies which bent above
His childhood like a dream of love.

Foot Washing.

BY REV. ANON. BOWLING.

By the phrase of foot washing, I mean a ceremony of washing feet as practiced in some churches in this country. This ceremony is held more than once a year, and is an occasion of much curiosity by the outside world. The churches that celebrate this rite usually celebrate the Lord's Supper at the same time. The members of the church couple their feet, and wash each the other's feet. Men wash men, and women wash the feet of women. This manner of church service is held by the Primitive Baptists wherever they have organic life, and it is believed to be conducive to humility and brotherly love. In doing this they affirm that they obey the words and follow the example of Christ. They believe that by the words and act of Christ he enjoined foot washing as a church service and duty.

To understand the words and act of Jesus Christ in washing the feet of the disciples, several things must be considered. In considering his act it must be remembered that he performed the act of a servant, not that of a brother. Hence, when he had washed their feet, he said to them, "Know ye what I have done to you? I call me Master, and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the servant is not greater than his Lord." Did the disciples understand Christ as enjoining church service? If so, the inspired record is silent in giving any account of their obedience. This fact is not to the theory. Not only is the record of God silent in regard to the disciples observing the example of Christ in foot washing, but church history also makes no mention of its observance by the apostles and their immediate successors. Then the words and act of Christ must be understood as not enjoining foot washing as a church service.

From statements in the Bible in regard to washing feet the act of Christ may be expalned. When the servants of David informed Abigail that they were sent to take her to be the wife of David, "she arose and bowed her face to the earth and said, let thine handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord." This was not a church, but house service. Simon, a Pharisee, desired Jesus to eat with him, and yet neglected some of the duties of hospitality. This lack was supplied by a woman, who was a sinner. It surprised the Pharisee that Jesus should allow such service to such a person. Jesus said unto Simon, "Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: but she bath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head." This washing of feet took place in the house of Simon during eating, or while waiting to commence eating. The office of washing feet was that of a servant. The woman became a servant to Jesus by washing his feet. Speaking of widows who should be entitled to church charity and support, St. Paul says, "They must not be under sixty years of age, must be destitute of help by blood relations, must have been married but once, well reported for good works, brought up children, lodged strangers, washed the saints' feet, relieved the afflicted and diligently followed every good work." In this cluster of virtues and graces is found that of feet washing as belonging to home hospitality. This work the widows did at home.

Finally, it must be remembered that when Jesus washed the feet of the disciples it was before or during the feast of the Passover. To be consistent, therefore, those who hold to foot washing as a church ordinance must of necessity hold on to the old paschal supper. To hold to the paschal supper is to reject the Lord's Supper. But the paschal supper and foot washing were celebrated together by Christ and the apostles. Hence they are inseparable. No Christian of to-day can hold to the paschal supper and the Lord's Supper at one and the same time.

The Primitive Baptists are the only church people in this country who hold to foot washing as a church service. In this particular this church has departed even from the practice of their ancestors. Speaking of the Anabaptists of 1637 Masheim says, "The ceremony of washing the feet of strangers, who came within the reach of their hospitality, is looked upon by them as a rite of divine institution." Washing the feet of strangers is more in accord with the word of God than the practice of washing the feet of each other as a church service. Hence foot washing in the church is a departure from the word of God and practice of the ancient church.

Primitive Methodism and Modern Revivalism.

BY REV. JAMES H. RIGG, D. D.

There are many differences among revivalists to-day. That was to be expected. "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. There are differences of administration, but the same Lord. There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all." But there are some features in the work which are common to the great majority of revival workers to-day, and as to which their work differs from the revival work of John Wesley. The Wesleys were before all else preachers, and all their spiritual results flowed directly and manifestly from their preaching. Except in a comparatively few cases, and these chiefly the cases of some Anglican or Wesleyan minister, it is otherwise to-day. Brief exhortations, carefully organized prayer meetings, often protracted, the penitential form, the inquiry room, these are the ruling characteristics of revival work to-day. The Wesleys followed up their preaching by prayer, and sometimes the prayers that followed were long-continued, where the effects of the preaching had been great and deep; but still the preaching, usually long preaching in the case of great movements, sometimes amazingly long, was the grand means and instrument to which the subsequent prayers were the natural, the inevitable sequel.

Revivals to-day are, in effect, organized on system; in Wesley's time they burst forth from under the reasoning and the testifying of the mighty preachers. We have now the weeks of careful preparation, the widely diffused placards, the revival arrangements made beforehand in the chapel or church or preaching-room. All this was known to the Wesleys. No doubt the difference in social conditions and surroundings is sufficient in part to explain the difference I have now noted. In the middle of the last century, outside of London, there were no towns larger than would to-day be regarded as middle-sized country towns. Earnest preaching, besides, was in itself something strange and startling. The coming, to any place, of the Wesleys or of Whitefield could not but be known. The preacher was recognized as he rode into the town; the news spread swiftly all around; the event came upon the still life of old provincial England like the sudden peal of an alarm. No amount of preparatory advertisement and organization at this day can produce as great an excitement as was produced in 1745 by Wesley's riding into the market-place of a provincial town or through the heart of a mining population. Still, the difference of which I have spoken is a point to be noted, and stands in close relation to other distinctions of tone and of method between the original Methodist revival work and the revivalism of to-day. There are indeed differences yet more marked than those I have already noted, between certain forms of modern revivalism and the work of the Wesleys. The very word "revivalism" which I have just used, is suggestive of a generic distinction of tone and method between the work of the two periods, or at least some of our modern work and the ancient.

It seems to imply that the work has now become a regular system, with its own professional technique. But waiving that collateral observation which has come in merely by the way—the other differences to which I refer are those which have been carried to their most novel and striking development by the "Salvation Army," and more recently, although hardly to the same extent, by the "church army." I mean the use of public processions with instrumental bands and with banners, and, still more, the use of quasi-military forms and methods and nomenclature, in dress and drill and organization and official style and title. The early Methodists when compelled to move together and cling to each other in times of fierce persecution—or when following to the grave their brethren and sisters who had "died in the Lord"—or when filled with grateful triumph, because of signal deliverance from cruel assaults, or of signal manifestations of spiritual and saving power would join in singing, especially as they went along country roads, through field or wood or village, their singing, it should be observed, being very sweet and harmonious, the singing, for the most part, of Charles Wesley's touching or triumphant lyrics to inspiring and appropriate melodies. But of such processional organization, such instrumental parades and such quasi-military exhibitions, as have become familiar to us to-day, nothing was known in early Methodism. If, therefore, it be said, as it is often said, that our modern revivalists are doing the work which Wesley did in his day, the saying, so far as it is true, must refer, more or less, to the moral and spiritual effects produced on the character of the converts. So far as respects the methods employed, our modern revivalists, stand for the most part, in strong contrast to the Wesleys and their coadjutors. For, as it noted, the Wesleys founded a school of preachers, the general characteristics of whose preaching and evangelistic work strikingly resembled those of the preaching and work of the Wesleys. They were pre-eminently preachers, one and all, the men of whom I speak. The preaching was very sparingly enlivened with anecdote. Nor was it, in general, broadly or predominantly sensational. It was theological, it was expository, it grappled with the conscience, it dealt with character in detail, and with pointed and piercing analysis. Long preachers, indeed, these early Methodist preachers were not, except a few of the greatest among them, such as Wangh, who killed himself by his long preaching and his screaming and the gifted Bradburn. They were not unqualified, like the Wesleys themselves, on great occasions to hold vast crowds for hours together hanging on their lips. But still they were, before all things, preachers, and many of them were accustomed to deliver sermons of extraordinary power, both of exposition and application.—Sunday at Home.

Address of the Central Centenary Committee.

To the Preachers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

DEAR BRETHREN: The church is entitled to the most definite information respecting what has been done in commemorating the first completed century of American Methodism. Two years have elapsed since the meeting in May, 1883, of the General Centenary Committee, appointed by the authority of the General Conference. The "Plan of Centenary Observance," as adopted by that committee, was widely published, not simply in our church papers, but in pamphlet form, and was placed in the hands of every minister and layman at the ensuing Conference sessions. An address to the members of the different Conferences was read at their several sessions, fully explaining the character of the several Conference Centenary Committees. In that address was the following language:

While the leading object of this Centenary observance is the spiritual improvement of our people, by reviewing God's signal mercies during the century, it is most important that we show our gratitude in such form as to make the church far more efficient for the future. It will be borne in mind that the usual regular collections should in no wise interfere with the Centenary contributions. These latter are a thank-offering in acknowledgment of the Divine blessing upon the labors of the past hundred years. Coming but once in a life-time, they should be on a commanding and monumental scale, that future generations may know how we celebrated our greatest event. Moreover, while the General Conference expressed a willingness to include in the aggregate Centenary collections such special local contributions as might be made to relieve church property of burdensome debts, and to erect or greatly improve churches or parsonages, yet our people are everywhere urged to keep chiefly in mind the great leading objects of our Centenary celebration—namely, a loan fund of $500,000 to be administered by the Church Extension Board, the special mission buildings for educational and other purposes in China, Mexico and Brazil, and the strengthening of our schools and colleges with the most liberal aid and the creation of a "Centenary Educational Fund."

These special objects for the liberality of the church are recommended after the most mature consideration. These being realized, we will be able to plant and strengthen our Methodism in all her fields, both at home and in heathen lands. While these three objects will share alike in the distribution of all undesignated funds which come into the hands of the Central Centenary Committee, yet donors may give full direction to their gifts. This enables patronizing Conferences to concentrate upon such educational institutions as they may prefer. The strengthening of those already in existence appears much more important than the creation of new ones, a bare of dollars are needed to properly equip and endow existing institutions. It is to be hoped that much may be done in the way of creating a Centenary Educational Fund, to be administered by the next General Conference. Let the church plan and do large things for Christian education during her Centenary year.

To assist in carrying out this observance, a Central Centenary Committee, consisting of three ministers and three laymen, was appointed, and their duty was defined to be "to correspond with the Annual Conference Centenary Committee; to prepare and publish all necessary documents, and to secure the intelligent and hearty co-operation of the whole church, particularly in the matter of collections for connectional objects." That committee secured the services of a competent clerk, whose whole time for more than a year was devoted to giving the widest possible circulation to the matter prepared under the direction of the committee. Hundreds of thousands of copies of a circular letter were placed in the hands of the preachers, so that one might be found in every family and home of our Methodism. A Centenary manual was sent out by the thousands to ministers and others.

Bishop McTear's "History of Methodism," prepared at the request of the Centenary Committee, had a sale of over 5,000 copies within six months after publication, and has been received with great favor both in England and America. Gracious revivals of religion crowned the efforts of faithful pastors, and the net increase of membership in our church in a single year was fully 37,000. Over and above the regular collections for missions, church extension, Conference claimants and ordinary local improvements, which amounted to $805,122, what was reported as distinctively Centenary contributions amounted to $1,322,785. These Centenary thank-offerings, or those so far reported, were as follows:

Missions—Foreign, 833,520 63; Domestic, $1,377,834,807 63
Church Extension Loan Fund, 29,445 80
Education, 181,362 32
Sunday-school Fund, 7,458 76
General Fund and undistributed, 11,069 60
Local objects, 4,001,716 00
Total, $1,322,785 00

This sum does not represent all that has been contributed for Centenary purposes. While the Woman's Board and the Parent Board have each already received some $16,000 from the Centenary Fund, yet the $33,520 63 reported for foreign missions, it is believed, does not represent all that has been subscribed for that purpose. We beg for fuller reports from all the Conferences, and ask for prompt collections of any outstanding subscriptions, whether for education, missions, Church Extension Loan Fund, or Sunday-school Fund. The reports of the several secretaries of Conference Centenary Committees are all carefully tabulated and await any additional items. The reports in the papers show much larger amounts given for education than have been reported officially to the secretary of the Central Centenary Committee.

We rejoice in the fact of such large advance being made in equipping our churches at home. Great success has attended all efforts to remove burdensome debts and to build new churches and parsonages. This was earnestly desired as one of the great results of our Centenary observance—the building of better houses of worship and strengthening of our institutions of learning. Money given to these objects was wisely bestowed. We urge, however, that increased attention be given between now and May, 1886, (when the final report of the Centenary Board of Trust shall be made,) to foreign missions and church extension. While the necessities of the Board of Missions were such that they needed to anticipate the Centenary thank-offerings for missions, let them not be disappointed in receiving the full amount for the needed buildings in Shanghai and Mexico. Let no pastor be content without a Centenary thank-offering from every member of his charge. Any uncollected subscriptions should receive prompt attention, as the connectional Boards are needing funds for their important work.

Signed in behalf of the Central Centenary Committee.
E. R. HENDRIX, Ch'n.

From Wesson.

MR. EDITOR: You saw from the dispatches that we lost our church in this place by fire on the fourteenth instant. The church was ignited by flames from burning frame stores in close proximity to it. The origin of the fire is a mystery yet to be solved. About twenty business houses were destroyed. No one can fully appreciate the condition in which we are left, except those who are acquainted with our circumstances. Some of my predecessors know what an effort and struggle it was to build and furnish that church. I think the pews were placed in it only about one year ago. Our estimated loss above insurance is $2,000. But, notwithstanding our heavy loss, we will rebuild at an early day. We are financially weak; but not in despair. We are cast down; but not destroyed. On account of the close proximity of our church lot to the business portion of town, the trustees have been authorized to sell the property and purchase a lot in a more retired neighborhood. If any of your many mercantile friends would like to invest in real estate in Wesson, send them up, and I think we can accommodate them to two or three as desirable business lots as there are in this town.

It gives me pleasure to state that, if we are houseless, we are not friendless. Our Baptist brethren, through their pastor, Rev. R. H. Purser, very promptly and cheerfully tendered us the use of their church two Sabbaths in each month, and also every Wednesday night for prayer meeting. The Presbyterians also offered the use of their church. So you see there is brotherly love among us up here. "O! how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." We are moving right along without any intermission in any of our services. We hope to occupy our own church and parsonage in a short time.

Mrs. Chrisman's High School for Girls closes next Monday night with a musical concert by the pupils. Medals will also be awarded for deportment, penmanship and music. The examinations during the past week reflected credit alike on pupil and instructor, and showed thoroughness, progress and application. Mrs. Chrisman is a teacher of rare ability, with an experience that reaches over several years. She is assisted by her accomplished daughter, Miss Clara.

The examinations covered that course of study embraced between the spelling book and astronomy. As we listened to these different examinations, and noted the discipline and systematic training of the scholars, we thought this school richly deserves the patronage of all parents who wish to have their daughters thoroughly prepared for Whitworth College.

Yours fraternally,
JUNE 27, 1885. B. F. JONES.

From Arcadia, La.

There is very much at Minden to encourage the zealous pastor, Rev. James J. Billingsley. We were glad to find among the young particularly, but by no means confined to them, a deep, religious seriousness. Bro. Billingsley's searching sermons and faithful pastoral labors are being felt and surely there shall be much fruit unto God before the Conference year closes. There were large congregations at each service on Saturday, at eleven A. M., as well as at the night services. There is evidently an awakening among the people, and last night, under the warm exhortation of the pastor, very many mourners presented themselves for prayers. We can not doubt that our God will work mightily by his spirit in Minden and on every circuit of our district where the pastor will submit to be a man of one work and will do that one work.

The annual exercises of the Minden Female College began with the sermon in Concert Hall yesterday at eleven o'clock. The guest of the president, Col. George D. Alexander, were happy to learn that the session now closing has been in every way a most prosperous one. Assisted by Prof. George O. Thatcher and other able teachers. Our Bro. Alexander presides over an institution of learning in which not only the good citizens of Minden, but of all North Louisiana, may take a just pride. The lady-like appearance and exemplary carriage of the pupils of Minden College were noticeable and pleasing and the institution has an enviable reputation for carefulness of training, and thoroughness of instruction. We wish all success to the Minden Female College and its affable and scholarly president.

Rev. J. L. Futrell, writing from Minter City, thus cordially endorses a recent work by Rev. R. Abbey. We have already noticed the pamphlet and reproduced several criticisms of Northern papers:

I have just read "Peter; not an Apostle, but a Chatter," by Rev. R. Abbey, D. D., from Southern Methodist Publishing House. Price, 25 cents. I am not given to writing book notices, so you need not look for one in this. But I wish to bespeak a large reading for this work. It is largely a review of a work of 600 pages, by Dr. Wakely, of New York, 1858, in which the strange fact is revealed the old John St. Church was a slave holder for a number of years, and the revelation is not from hearsay, but from a journal strictly kept by the church for nearly forty years, which book was strangely missing from 1799 till about 1858. Every item from the beginning of that church in 1760 till 1790, was rigidly kept. Now, why the concealment of this record, and why the strange "out of print" of so valuable a work as Dr. Wakely's? But, reader, get this pamphlet.

"Behold, bless ye the Lord."—Psalm cxxxv.
Father, when resting under the shade
Which the shadow of thy wings hath made,
Away from the glare and out of the dross,
By faith beholding the beautiful Cross
Leaning down from the lowering sky,
Reared from the valleys where the shadows lie,
Shedding an effulgent, hallowed glow
Over the "crystal sea" below,
Whose shining waters sweep the strand
Near where the "Rock of Ages" stand,
When the thought came to a purer sphere,
And the heart in meekness drawing near—
Near to the living fount of Grace;
Nearer, still nearer, seeking thy face;
When the soul flushed in silent prayer,
And the spirit drank from the fountain there,
Low at the foot of the Cross, O Lord,
We bow and adore thee, O our God!
Holy Spirit, bless us!

Preachers versus Whisky.

MR. EDITOR: Prof. J. M. Cherry, of Collierville, Tenn., writing in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, of Sam Jones on the whisky question, quotes him as saying that "the liquor traffic in the church" is "the chief of the evils which has been cursing and corrupting Nashville for many years." The day he (Mr. Cherry) left Nashville the day following the above utterance—Dr. McFerrin was appointed by Sam Jones to preach for him, concerning which the writer says: "To-day will be the most eventful in the life of Dr. McFerrin and in the history of Nashville."

My parting request to the preachers and laymen of Nashville was to urge Dr. McFerrin to endorse Sam Jones fully and especially on the liquor traffic by church members. If he does, whisky must go. If he fails, I tremble for the result. (It takes mine.)

Now, Mr. Editor, this last sentence went through me like a two-edged sword, because it expresses a doubt as to the attitude which a Methodist minister would take with reference to one of the features of a great evil. It was equivalent to saying: "We know what he ought to say and do in the matter; but as to whether he has the courage of his convictions or not, and will act accordingly, we are not sure." This to me is simply a fearful thought, and especially so as it is related to the whisky traffic in the church. And as Dr. McFerrin stands prominent in the Church, South, especially as one of its defenders and a stickler for its old ways and primitive simplicity, it ought to make the balance of us, one and all, get down on our knees in the presence of the Most High and go over our present attitude and past conduct in reference to this curse of curses—the liquor traffic in the church.

That the ministry has great power and influence in the matter of controlling and suppressing the liquor traffic, both in and out of the church, is a fact which no one can possibly doubt. This Mr. Cherry fully recognized when he said that if Dr. McFerrin did his duty in the matter at Nashville, "whisky must go." As a matter of history, we know that it was the power of the Northern pulpits, as much or more than anything else, which aroused the people of that section against the practice of slavery and precipitated the war of the rebellion upon our land in 1861. If the pulpits there had ignored or been silent on the question of slavery, the uprising which took place would have been indefinitely postponed. But they pursued a different policy. They preached in public both from pulpits and rostrum, and worked in private against the traffic, and thus became potent factors in waking up the nation on the subject and polling an immense Abolition vote at the ballot-box. So much was this the case that the church was accused of being transformed into a club-house and the preachers into politicians. In that great moral reform the power of the pulpit was fully recognized and duly appreciated. Shall it be so in that which is now beginning to move and agitate this great nation of ours?

I fully believe that if the pulpit, far and near, shall wake up as one man and throw all their influence on the anti-whisky side and in favor of prohibition, preaching, lecturing, talking and praying for the liquor traffic to go down, and, as a last and final resort, casting it and the liquor men together out of the churches under their charge if they prove incorrigible to milder means—if they do this without fear and partiality, acting in the fear of God in the matter, it will not be long till the whole land is waked up on the subject, and a mighty and ominous pounding heard on the door of the White House, in Washington, calling for national reform in the matter. The people will have become awakened and educated on the subject, and will cry out with such indignation and determination against the traffic as to make even the politicians hear-aye, and heed too. All the people need to-day in order to produce a concert of action against the liquor business is to have the facts in the case burnt into them by men fully awake to these facts. When this is done they will act; not before. But who will do this if the ministry fails to take hold of the matter? Certainly not the politicians of the existing parties. If we will do our whole duty in the matter, "whisky must go." If we fail, "I tremble for the result."

But, first of all, before we can even put on an air of sincerity in this matter we must tackle this traffic where we have both a legal and an ecclesiastical right to do so. If we find it in the charges over which we are pastors, there must we begin our work. We must grapple with it in the pews before we touch it elsewhere. In fact, we can not consistently say aught against the whisky devil at any time or in any place—not even so much as to lift up a finger against it—as long as we refuse to enter a war of extermination on it in our charges. We must clean the house of God of distilleries, bar rooms and liquor men of every size and description, or proceed to do so, before we have a right to speak or to be heard even on the subject. If it be said that we will raise mud by so doing, we must reply with Sam Jones that it is our mud that we are raising. If we lay to our hands and begin to stir the mud, we are responsible only for the stirring; not for the mud. And if the pool needs stirring, it is our duty to stir. It matters not how much mud appears. God Almighty wants the fountain clear and pure, and certainly would he rid it of mud—especially black mud. Nor have we any right to halt one moment in the matter. No consideration should make us falter for one instant. It makes no difference how respectable or rich the pew is before the pulpit, if it is allied to the liquor traffic in any way, or is performed with the breath of a liquor man occupying it, our duty is plain. We can not dodge it. We deserve not the name of ambassadors of Christ and ministers of the New Testament if we do.

If the evil-doer after having been labored with and urged to quit his drinking or selling intoxicating liquors refuses to do so, the knife must be used and the vine pruned of the offending member. This is our plain duty, and no social influence or standing of any man can be taken into consideration for a moment. The church can afford to lose members and money and so can her preachers, her official agents; but neither can afford to keep whisky in the pews because of either men or money. Hence that whole affair in our churches in Nashville is a burning shame and a most disgraceful thing to Methodism. With "Rusticus," in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, I can truly say: "I feel heartily ashamed of it. With the chapter in the Discipline expressly against the sale of intoxicants, and the general rule forbidding the use of them as a beverage, how is it that in Nashville, the home of one of our Bishops and the very center of all our general interest, this thing is tolerated? If this is to go out to the world as an example of Southern Methodism, then I think the best thing the Southern Church can do is to sell out and begin afresh. I do not believe in practicing a farce on the world in this way. Men engaged in the liquor business have no more right in the church than they have in heaven. Those who allow such things are to be held responsible, and ought to be held up to the gaze of the world. The church ought to spew out those abominable rum sellers." These are strong words, but true; and I believe the large majority of Methodist preachers can adopt the sentiment expressed by them without modification. Let us henceforth stick to that little book, the Discipline, and to that book of books, the Bible, and we shall have no further cause of blushing about our attitude towards the liquor traffic in the church, for it will not be there.

JAS. J. BILLINGSLEY.

Immigration.

MR. EDITOR: To an observer it looks as though the idea prevailed that a continued and increased inflow of immigration from any and all sources—no matter where or of what type, so it comes (particularly in this sentiment prevalent in the South), would be a panacea for all commercial, financial and agricultural lack of full and complete success. "The more hands, the lighter the work." The more the country is supplied with labor, the faster it will develop. Perhaps so! I do not deny it, but often think that this incessant craving for immigration is not altogether based on patriotic motives or a desire to ameliorate man's condition, politically, religiously, financially or for the honor of God, although it is sometimes said—"Open the door (John Chinamen, perhaps, excepted); let them come in. It is better than all your vaunted missionary efforts; it is bringing the heathen to the gospel!"—but that it proceeds from personal, selfish considerations—especially since the abolition of slavery in the South. More laborers to cultivate my broad acres or more operatives to work my capable-of-extension factory or workshops. I once heard a gentleman of Tangipahoa parish say: "We do not need immigration. Our land will be wanted by our children and their descendants." And I have about come to the conclusion that he was wiser than we who "would all the world embrace," provided they would work in our fields, shops and factories. The idea that some will start on their own account we sanction because we can not help it, but prefer brewers of wood.

Let us look at some facts. The population of the United States is said to be fifty-five millions. Its area, including Alaska, is stated to be about 3,604,000 square miles, giving a population of nearly fifteen and a quarter souls to each square mile. Excluding the cities having more than 25,000 inhabitants, in the entire nation would give an average of about eleven to the square mile. These two averages are made without estimating the territory covered by river and mortar, swamp, sea marsh, river, lake, sterile mountain, desert or frozen region. If this part of the area was taken out of the count, it would increase the average. Say that our average is sixteen to the square mile, or forty acres round to every man, woman and child. Now, how many decades will pass ere the natural increase will fill every corner without any immigration? How many decades before the territory can not feed its population?

Another view more important than the too rapidly filling up of our country is, Are we the same people we were fifty years ago? Whence come strikes and discontent? Where does communism come from? A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. Is not everything religious and moral strongly diluted and weakened by the continued influx of foreign thought and manners often antagonistic to our very best institutions? Who rules this country—the city throngs or its rural denizens? Where do most of the immigrants locate—in town or country? Is it the native or the foreign born in a majority of cases who build up and maintain the vice-breeding dens of the country? Who the active opponents of Sunday laws and prohibition? We have enough such of our own. Where do they get their backing and the votes they control to defeat everything tending to morality—from the dregs or cream of other nations?

Immigration may be to some extent necessary. But what sort? Promiscuously gathered by State or immigration society agents, or should it be selected? Should the Protestants of this country still allow it to be given into the hands of the papacy? Our native Catholics do not desire it. I know a man, sixty-five years of age, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who has been here since eighteen years of age. Suppose he could be sent as an agent to solicit immigration, to whom would he naturally apply? Why, to Methodists. So would a Baptist apply, or an Episcopalian to those of the same creed and practice. I think, sir, if immigration is necessary, the churches should privately attend to this thing, so as to help morality and, religiously, to prevent the continued deterioration of our country.

Sir, I do not preach or intend to intimate any opposition to foreigners coming here. Let them come if they will help us develop the moral and spiritual as well as the material interests of the country. I am foreign born, and I think I see the necessity of having the honor of God and the interests of humanity a little mixed with our motives in our invitations to immigrants. If we still deem them necessary to us, my own opinion is that we are more necessary to the virtuous circle of the virtuous and the virtuous of the virtuous to our soil is mutually injurious, and to civilization a crime.

Port Gibson Female College.

MR. EDITOR: As one of the Visiting Committee to Port Gibson Female College, I desire through your columns to make some report of the recent closing exercises of that institution.

Rev. T. S. West, of Woodville, preached the commencement sermon on June 4. This I did not hear; but it was commended as being an earnest and excellent gospel sermon; running clear of what many attempt on such occasions—philosophic and scientific disquisitions. What is needed at such times is a presentation of the great truths of religion as the light and hope of the young hearts that are addressed. Of this latter character was Dr. West's sermon on "Christ, the Desire of All Nations."

All the exercises of the two following days and nights evinced careful culture and diligent training. The attendance of people both from far and near was much larger than usual, and everybody was highly gratified.

There were three graduates—Miss Marie Newell, of Louisiana, and Misses Ada and Lucy Key, of Fayette, Miss.—the last of whom read the valedictory. The essays of these young ladies were each marked by strong and elevated thought, expressed in the purest English, while the rendering of them was in a style exceeding good; so that it was a real pleasure to listen to them. The college has reason to be proud of these accomplished graduates.

President Bradford, himself an excellent educator, has associated with him superior teachers. This I do not say, repeating it from others, or as the result of recent impressions; but some of them I have known for a period, giving me an opportunity to judge concerning them. This report would not be a just one were I to fail to say that Miss Austen in the Literary Department, Miss Christian in the art, and Miss Duck in the music have been much of the success of the past session. Success is the test of merit according to the judgment of the public, and, estimated in this way, Port Gibson Female College is worthy of all honor, for it is a miracle of success.

The school is fortunate in its location—in the midst of a community long known for its culture and refinement. A pleasant peccatore of four years in Port Gibson made me acquainted with its people, and I know them to be unsurpassed in all the elements of real worth. The place is healthy too—a fact which no one would ever doubt after seeing the fine-looking girls under President Bradford's care. In the college physical and mental training are cared for, and religious culture is neglected. Our resident pastor, Rev. D. P. Bradford, is earnest also in looking after the spiritual interests of the pupils. During the past session many of the young ladies were converted and united with the church.

Hitherto the boarding department has been full, so that no more could be received; but by the beginning of the next session other rooms will be fitted up, and all who come will be accommodated. I hope they will not be slow in applying.

The outlook for the college is highly encouraging, it being now accessible from all quarters, situated on a great trunk line, the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railroad.

President Bradford is doing a noble work, in which the church and the whole country should rejoice.

Retrospective.

TWENTY-FIRST PAPER.

"Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost."

MR. EDITOR: Since the writer commenced his retrospective papers, incidents which were not mentioned will now be gathered up before taking leave of the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. J. I. E. Byrd, well known as one of the veteran preachers of the Mississippi Conference as a truly consecrated man and of good preaching ability, was one of the early transfers from the South Carolina Conference. He was well acquainted with the talented Georgia preacher and educator, Rev. Hope Hull, favorably known in Methodist history. Mr. Byrd said that some of our timid young preachers were very much embarrassed in preaching in presence of Mr. Hull, notwithstanding he would give them encouragement and make allowance for their inexperience.

Mr. Byrd mentioned the name of one young man who was appointed to the circuit embracing the society near the distinguished preacher. To encourage the young man he was early in attendance with his family at his first appointment. The young man positively declined to preach and insisted that Mr. Hull should occupy the pulpit. No persuasive argument could induce the circuit rider to fill his appointment. Preach before Mr. Hull he would not. At his next appointment he and his family came rather late, hoping the young man would have commenced services. No sooner had he closed the introductory prayer than he motioned to Mr. Hull to come to the pulpit, when he again declined to preach. "My brother," said Mr. Hull, "you must preach; our people expect it, and it will not do for you to disappoint them, you have been sent to be our preacher and pastor." Preach, he would not; rather then displease without a discourse Mr. Hull gave them another sermon. At the third appointment Mr. Hull essayed to outgeneral the young man. At the usual hour his family entered the church, while he, unobserved, seated himself outside in rear of the pulpit. The timid preacher, thinking that he would not favor (?) him with a hearing, took his text and was getting on very well with his subject, but eying the door, as though he feared he might enter in the midst of his discourse, as he turned his watchful eye caught a glimpse of Mr. Hull through a crack of the logs, and with fearful surprise started back, breaking the thread of discourse, crying out, "There he is now." Right there he reached the finish.

The Conference Brotherhood.

I see an article in the Advocate, of June 4, by Bro. Weems, in reference to the Mississippi Conference Brotherhood, in which he makes some important suggestions, and I hope he will continue to ventilate the matter until he gets the preachers and people interested in the same. In connection with Bro. Weems' proposition, that the amount he made to reach at least one thousand dollars, and the constitution so amended as to pay the amount to a preacher when he is called upon to superannuate, so that he may be able to provide for his family while he is alive, one advantage in this is that many old worn-out preachers would be willing to take that relation at a time they ought to take it, and not hold on to the active life while they are virtually superannuated because they can not see how to live if they give up the pastorate in their condition. There are likely many preachers in that condition right now. I know one, that is, any way. Of course there is no danger of any preacher taking that relation for the sake of the money he might get if he wanted to do so, because the Conference could not grant him that relation until the committee report him a fit subject for that relation and will likely cause the Conference to look more closely into that matter than it has done in the past. Now I propose how the amount of one thousand dollars can be raised. There is over one hundred pastoral charges in our Conference. Now let each preacher secure at least one honorary member from his charge by next Conference. I think that could be done. It may be true that there are many circuits that would agree to pay the five dollars upon the death of each preacher, but the whole circuit would obligate to pay it. I am on a circuit now I do not believe one person could be found to do it, but I have one church out of seven that has about seventy or eighty members. The most of them in good condition. Fifty of them paying ten cents each would pay the five dollars, and I have no doubt but they will do so, and it may be much more than that, they shall have the chance any way. I might get other churches to do the same; so I propose we try it any way and risk it. And now I want to hear from Bro. Weems and Bro. L. W. Cooper as they appear to take a lively interest in this most benevolent object, and yet they are among our younger preachers who bid fair to live a long time. As such, I respect them the more, as it is a labor of love with them.

From the Work.

MR. EDITOR: I have been waiting until I could give a favorable report before I wrote up our circuit. I am proud to say that I am able, with perfect truthfulness, to give a report of that kind at this time. At our first Quarterly Conference our presiding elder appointed Rev. George Anders, local preacher, assistant preacher on the circuit; this left me with four appointments and gave him four. Under our joint efforts the work has been gradually going up until now we are on the "high places" at some points. We have good attendance at our regular appointments; have two regular prayer meetings, three Sunday-schools in successful operation, with a good prospect of two more prayer meetings and one more Sunday-school.

At Gloster City (do not forget to call us Gloster City) we have a good prospect of moving our church from Sharon to Gloster; the contractor is now at work taking down the building preparatory to moving it over to the city. We have two hundred and fifty dollars subscribed to meet the expense of moving and rebuilding the church. The railroad gave us a title to their interest in a lot on the highest point of ground in the city. Bro. John Cassel gave a title to his interest in the lot and gave us fifty dollars more to help move the church. If you want to see a live place, come up to Gloster City.

Prohibition is gaining ground not only on the circuit, but throughout the country. Even the politicians are beginning to "follow the scent" of public opinion. I think we have reason to hope that Amite county will be represented in the next Legislature by a staunch friend and advocate of prohibition. The crops in this section are looking well, the oat crop is nearly all housed, and we have had an excellent harvest, there has been more oats planted and gathered in Amite this year than ever before in her history. It makes all nature rejoice to have a good oat crop; men, horses, cattle and even the pigs and chickens have a more satisfied, well-fed appearance than usual. I commend the oat crop to every lover of fat stock.

Liberty has been made to rejoice over the outlook for a shoe factory to be established there this month; a branch house to one now in successful operation in New Orleans. With a cross railroad from the Illinois Central to Gloster City on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad through Liberty, our town would recover its former place in the business of the country.

We have had two very hard years on this circuit, and we labor under great disadvantages at present; but I hope and pray the Lord will grant us for this year a bountiful crop and a revival of all the interests of the church.

H. BRADFORD.

PICKENS, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We are entering upon the third week of a most remarkable revival at Pickens, Miss. I have never seen any community so powerfully moved. So far as I can ascertain there have been nearly thirty conversions; with twenty-five accessions to our church. Sister Parrott, of McCool, Bro. Lewis, of Lexington, and Singleton, of Canton, have greatly endeared themselves to us by all their valuable labors in the meeting. Our dear old Bro. Wado, who is a host himself, is now quite sick, but greatly rejoiced that the revival he has so long prayed for has come at last. Yours truly,

T. CAMERON.

Sam Jones' Prophecy.

Sam Jones was a five-year-old lad, too young and too small for even the primary class, when the principal of the school at Oak Hovewry, Ala., received him into his own room among the big boys, and taught him his A, B, C's at his leisure.

Sam early showed a fondness for declamation, and was appointed a speaker for commencement, and repeated a parody on the well known

You'll scarce expect one of my age

To speak in public on the stage.

When Sam was called he was wrapped in sweet sleep, lying on a bench at the rear of the stage, regardless of the time and the occasion. The teacher, rubbing his face with a wet handkerchief, lifted him to the table on the stage, when Sam, wide awake and not in the least abashed, spoke his piece to the great delight and amusement of the audience. The closing lines were:

In coming years and thunder tones

The world shall hear of Sammy Jones.

Thirty years after this event this same teacher, now of Atlanta, wrote a postal to Sam, quoting these lines, and adding, "If you are my Sam, come to see me."

Sam went at once, saying, as he walked in with extended hand, "Howdy? I am your Sam."—Nashville Advocate.

The Soldier's Widow.

BY REV. E. A. RAND.

Old Simon Brinkerhoff laughed, but a good, round, resonant laugh, such as might well come from a stout stout as Simon's. He had good reason to laugh, just to see his newly polished shoes and his newly arranged rows of bottles, and to think how he would eclipse "Mr. Stinson" in the apothecary over the way, even as the sun overpowers a candle at noon. "People did not say 'mister' to him, but it was 'Dr. Brinkerhoff.' A very popular apothecary he was, for he knew enough about the human body, or thought he did, to prescribe for it as well as sell it to." "What did you say was the matter with your child, madame?" he would ask some dainty woman, howling as courteously as to the queen. "Ahem, just so, just so, I see exactly what the trouble is. I will give it a little—ahem—something."

"Thank you, doctor," was the answer you not only had your medicine for your money, but a doctor's bill thrown in, all settled? Very popular was "Dr. Brinkerhoff."

In another apartment the "doctor" had an agency for collins. A very nice arrangement. If in one store customers could not find the medicine that would heal, in another they could find the paratus needed for those whom medicines could not possible reach.

True it was that the Stinson party said the drugs you found in one room would bring you to the collins you found in another, but that was bilious slander.

Simon now gave his shelves, his collins, his counters, another look of satisfaction. Suddenly a cloud swept over his face.

"That right hand window," he said, "is a little bare, a very little."

There was not a large stock in this window, as he could have put a small collin in it and thus have advertised his agency for such desirable ware while tilling up an empty niche. This he knew would never do. The Stinson party would be circulating more energetically their old slander about drugs and collins.

"Take one end you will fill the other," Stinson senior said, there were two of those contemptible individuals on the opposite side of the street.

Simon did not have any more time for reflection. A young woman sorrowfully draped in black approached the store.

"A widow!" thought Simon, "the soldier's widow, Mrs. Wilson, I think. Poor thing! I pity her."

Yes, she deserved pity, this Mrs. Kate Wilson. Her husband had been a soldier. One day in the spring she gave him to his country in the midst of a waving of banners, a gleaming of a regalia of military dress, the hundred of voices. Oh, from that altar of sacrifice, she walked away in all the pride of a queen, little realizing what she had done. One day for all that had gone into that mocking cloud of glory. She took back her mutilated body, a face scarred and all but dead, hands that stirred not, while lips that spoke not. She took back her return the great, crushing sorrow of sorrow, and besides the satisfaction of having made an offering for her country—knew this was all. Only this she said:

"What next?" she said, bewildered and stretching out helpless hands for guidance, up toward God, out toward man.

"Come home," wrote father and mother. "Plenty of room and a big door of welcome into it, dear Kate. Come home. Enough there now. And has gone since her husband's death, and two forlorn widows won't do. No, I must stay and fight it out." She was facing the black inevitable. She was accepting her cross. "It is best to do something," she said, "than to sit on one's hands and let the world go by."

"What next?" she said, bewildered and stretching out helpless hands for guidance, up toward God, out toward man.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D.D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. T. A. S. ADAMS. REV. J. T. SAWYER.
REV. W. L. O. HENRICOTT.

THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1885.

Much valuable "copy" is crowded out of this issue. Next week we will publish communications from President Hoss, Dr. Ahrens, Dr. Adams, Miss Annie Linfield, and others.

There is only one licensed saloon in the bounds of the Corinto district, North Mississippi Conference, and all Israel has risen up against that. Never has that great State felt so profoundly the spirit of reform.

We bespeak the active co-operation of the devout women of Methodism in circulating our ADVOCATE. If each sister will induce one friend to subscribe, our mail books will be materially enlarged and the influence of this journal greatly increased. We want to visit every Methodist home in our patronizing territory.

Six of the ten presiding elders of the South Carolina Conference were present at the Wofford College commencement. There is significance in that item of news. When so many of the leading men of a Conference manifest such interest in, and fostering care of a church institution, its prosperity is assured. Our brethren of the multi-try ought to attend college commencements. They enlarge their conceptions of church obligation to the cause of education, stimulate thought on new lines, and bring them into more immediate sympathy with young life.

The Exposition managers are pushing forward their plans for reopening with commendable zeal. About $270,000 have already been subscribed, and the canvassers are still actively at work. We wish the enterprise all possible success. If wisely conducted, it may perpetuate the good results of the Exposition last winter. The Board of Directors have shown fine judgment in electing to its presidency Mr. S. B. McConico. He was a college classmate of this editor, has been a business man of marked success, and is altogether worthy of this honor. If under any management success can be attained, his executive hand will achieve it. We advertise the Board of Directors now, however, that the people of the States will not tolerate the Sabbath desecration of last winter. It was a poor investment for the old management, as the attendance on Sunday did not meet the expenses of the day. If repeated by the new Board, it will be even less remunerative. If the gates are to be opened on the Sabbath, the entire influence of this journal will be wielded against the enterprise. We will leave no stone unturned to withdraw from it the Christian sentiment of the country.

In a thoughtful and suggestive letter to Zion's Herald, Rev. Dr. Abel Stevens discusses the threatened casus belli between England and Russia, and pronounces an eloquent eulogy upon the Christian statesmanship of Mr. Gladstone. The course of Russia in the matter, he says, was heedless, reckless and presumptuous—a policy "usual to semi-barbarous peoples." On the other hand, England was forbearing, though conscious of her superior strength. Though she has an immense population, Russia is financially bankrupt, while England's credit is unequalled in the family of nations. Dr. Stevens gives some facts as to Russian finances that will doubtless interest our readers:

"Money is the sinews of war. The phrase has passed into a proverb. Now, of all the great nations of the old world, Russia is the least prepared, financially, for a great war. Her credit is notoriously low. Practically, she is bankrupt. She has carefully withheld any official statement of her debt since 1880. At that date it amounted to $3,240,590,500. And the financial world well knows that there has been no reduction of it since that time. With an avowed silver basis for her currency, she has forced on her people a paper circulation of more than one billion and fifty millions of dollars, with a shrinkage of thirty-five per cent. on the par value. The amount of this depreciated currency remains undiminished. The value of her best gold coin is intrinsically about four dollars; but its value, in her paper money, is at present nearly $5.50. She interdicts the quotation of foreign funds at the St. Petersburg Exchange, because they would disparage her own.

The Vocation of Methodism.

"The Vocation of the Wesleyan Methodist Church" is the title of an able and elaborate article in the Methodist Times, of London, by Rev. Joseph Agar Beet. Mr. Beet is one of the finest scholars among English Wesleyans, and the author of commentaries which have already become standards of interpretation. In the suggestive discussion referred to he says:

"The strength of the Methodist revival was the gospel preached by the Wesleys, as by Luther before them: the proclamation of present conscious forgiveness of sins obtained by faith in the promise of Christ, resting not (as some object) on mere emotion, but on his sure word, and accompanied by the life-giving presence of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of all believers, witnessing that they are children of God and working in them a new life of constant victory over all sin. Of this gospel, and its power to save, the Methodist Churches throughout the world are a visible embodiment. Of it, most of the peculiarities of their polity are a natural outflow. And to proclaim it, with the intelligence and confidence of men who have examined its foundations and have felt its power, is the chief vocation to-day of the Wesleyan Church."

The rapid spread of the revival under the Wesleys, Whitefield and their coadjutors was due, as Mr. Beet observes, to the fact that they insisted upon a "present conscious forgiveness of sins obtained by faith in the promise of Christ." The pulpits of that day, both in England and America, preached a religion of form and service, without an experience of grace and peace. Mr. Whitefield said on his first visit to America that "the preachers talked of an unknown and unfelt Christ," and that the reason why the churches were so dead was because they had dead men to preach to them. When the Wesleys and their coadjutors began preaching the blessed doctrine of the witness of the Spirit—a present and immediate attestation to the soul of pardon and salvation—it was denounced by unconverted clergy as a heresy, but was hailed by the masses as a new revelation. It was light out of great darkness—an evangel of hope to a people long used to the dull, weary platitudes of a comfortless, purposeless pulpit. Religion was no longer a dreary drudge, but a joyful experience—a vital and vitalizing power in the soul. It quickened every noble impulse, ennobled every sentiment, beautified every relation, transformed the Christ of history into a conscious presence and experience and converted the heaven of vague desire and dogma into a blessed reality. No wonder it awoke a slumbering nation and shook the foundations of a Christless church. Such a message at such a time was like the alarm-peal of a fire bell at midnight in a sleeping city. Conscious of their unsaved condition and infinite peril, having been fed on ministrations that neither aroused fear nor satisfied hope, they at once turned to those that preached the comforts and joys of a present salvation.

And that characteristic of Methodist preaching has been the glory of its history. God has made us a great people because we have been a witnessing people. Our itinerants, from Wesley to the present day, have preached doctrines attested by their own experiences. Not always have they spoken in the terminology of the schools or with the precision of dialecticians, but out of full hearts and by the constraint of Christ's love. There has been a religion of knowledge. Each could say, "I know whom I have believed." They declared the truth with an absolute confidence of tone and manner that eliminated the faintest suggestion of possible doubt or contingency. And their very positiveness of speech was a chief factor in their marvelous success. Nothing so readily disarms criticism and compels candid investigation as the expression of entire and unalterable confidence in the truth and virtue of our teachings. And so the preaching of the early Methodists was the positive declaration of a blessed fact and not the skillful, subtle proving of something from a working hypothesis. The voice of the pulpit and the pew was expressed in the thrilling lines of Charles Wesley:

"What we have felt and seen
With confidence we tell,
And publish to the sons of men
The signs infallible."

And such is the vocation of Methodism to-day—the proclamation of present conscious forgiveness of sins. What has been the characteristic feature of our success must be our future vocation. With enlarged educational facilities for our people and the broadest culture in the pulpit, there must be no forsaking of this salient doctrine. So long as we preach a present salvation, and emphasize as of prime importance its clear experience, the power of Methodism will never wane. But if we wink at spiritual ignorance, become ambitious for numbers, make free use of the drag-net and discard the winnowing-fan, weakness and retrogression will mark these latter days. It is well to master the philosophy of the Christian religion, but better to enjoy its experience. We are in danger of feeding our congregations upon the dry husks of labored arguments to prove the truth of God's revelations when, in fact, they only need the word of exhortation. Methodism's method is chiefly hortatory. A conscious salvation expresses itself in appeal and warning rather than in cold argumentation. The preacher who declares the gospel is most successful in winning souls. If true to our vocation, the second century of Methodism will be more glorious in spiritual blessing and power than the first.

Our Alma Mater.

The editor spent most of last week at Oxford, attending the commencement exercises at the University of Mississippi and the sessions of the Board of Trustees. Each year the town seems to improve, and the university campus more beautiful. The lately buildings are arranged in the form of an octagon, leaving an ample space within generously shaded by magnificent forest trees and covered with luxuriant lawn grass. The large dormitories have been greatly improved in appearance and comfort by the erection of spacious, three-story verandas. We rejoice that the accommodations are better than in our student days. But how vividly the scenes of other years pass in review! Those warm, noble young friends, how handsome their faces appear, and gentle the friendly tones of their voices! How we walked and talked together of plans and ambitions for the future! Alas! many of them sleep beneath the sod, and all have had experiences that were not in their youthful fancies. We are led by ways we know not, and life's currents flow in channels unseen to the prophetic eye of youth. We are reminded of Bishop Keener's epigrammatic saying that "every man has his apocalyptic period." With most of us it comes with the extravagant ambitions of youth.

The commencement sermon, on Sunday, was preached by Rev. Dr. Darby, of Evansville, Ind. We failed to hear it; but it was everywhere commended as an earnest, practical presentation of the pure gospel. He is a minister in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and ranks among the foremost of her younger generation. On Monday the sophomores declaimed. That is always an exciting day, and never fails to attract a fine audience. The declamations were excellent and the flowers were profuse. Right generously do the ladies encourage the young gentlemen with their beautiful floral offerings. At night the senior debate took place and society degrees were conferred. There was a vigorous discussion of the question as to the necessity of property and educational qualifications in exercising the right of the elective franchise.

Tuesday is always set apart for the junior orations, and is generally considered the least interesting day of commencement week. This year the addresses were happily delivered and enthusiastically applauded. Two or three had conspicuous merit. In the evening the Alumni Association held its anniversary, the chief feature of which was an able oration from Mr. W. R. Harper, of Jackson, on "Sumptuary Laws." While some of his positions were not altogether acceptable to ardent prohibitionists, it was in the main a masterly argument in defense of their cause. The right, propriety and feasibility of such statutes were established beyond the suggestion of a doubt. Mr. C. H. Alexander, of Starkville, was elected the orator for next year, and Miss Sallie Vick Hill, of Macon, the essayist.

On Wednesday the annual oration before the literary societies was delivered by Hon. C. E. Hooker, of Jackson, Miss. Col. Hooker is known as the "silver-tongued orator of Mississippi," and in grace of diction and faultless declamation he well deserves the distinction. His address was carefully prepared, but lost much of its charm to the audience by being closely read from manuscript. A man who has the graces of oratory should always declaim and never read. At the conclusion of his address the medals were presented to the successful sophomore prize declaimers by this editor. In the evening Chancellor Stewart and his wife held their annual reception at the chapel. The campus was illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and the whole scene had the appearance of fairy land.

Thursday was commencement day, and it will always be historic in the annals of the university. On that day she conferred her first degree upon a young woman. The valedictorian of the large class was Miss Sallie Vick Hill, of Macon, Miss.—a position she had won by superior merit. Her essay on "Woman's Place in Civilization" excelled any similar production we ever heard on that rostrum. In strength of argument, facility of illustration, richness of thought and vigor of expression it was worthy of any mind, however masculine. She completed the entire university course and distanced all of her competitors for the highest honor. The young gentleman accepted defeat gracefully, and one of the speakers paid the valedictorian a chivalrous compliment. There were two other young ladies in the class who acquitted themselves with distinction. It is the judgment of all, faculty, trustees, visitors and friends that co-education at the university has been a success. After the conferring of degrees by the chancellor, including the honorary degree of LL.D. upon Hon. William F. Melien, of New Orleans, the exercises closed, and with them a very prosperous term. Not a single case of discipline had occurred during the year, and the moral tone of the university was never better. The Board of Trustees will meet on the first Wednesday of September, in Jackson, to elect a professor of chemistry—a chair made vacant by the resignation of Prof. R. W. Jones, LL.D.

Comity of Missions.

There is a tacit agreement among the great missionary Boards that denominational rivalry in the foreign fields will be avoided as much as possible. Much waste has been occasioned and loss sustained by a violation of this spirit. Evangelical denominations that teach the same essential doctrines of salvation, in the presence of a heathen world, should so deploy their forces as to reach as speedily as possible the greatest number of benighted souls. So when one society has entered a certain field, a different one is selected by another Board. Of course in great cities, when centers of operations are to be established, this can not be observed. But the spirit that prompts such a course is Christ-like, and the purpose to conserve it worthy of all commendation. So vast is the field of heathendom, and so urgent the demand upon the general church, that all possible waste of effort should be prayerfully avoided. There is room, and to spare, for each great Christian denomination for years to come. And, with our most liberal contributions of men and money, many places will yet sit in darkness.

For this reason we have condemned proselytizing in foreign fields. If there is any virtue in the Christian comity that unites denominations in distributing the Bible, in resisting encroachments upon the sanctity of the Sabbath and in selecting different fields for missionary endeavor, we must deplore any practice that will divide and disturb a mission congregation. Certain facts published in this and other Advocates from Mexico are a sad commentary upon the spirit that prompts some men to become missionaries. And that they should be encouraged in it by the home church is the crown and consummation of ecclesiastical bigotry. Referring to a case reported from Arabkir, the Watchman, of Boston, a staunch Baptist paper, condemns the conduct of their missionaries, pronounces it "a reproach upon the Christian name," and then asks, "Is this a mission worthy of the great Baptist denomination?"

We are quite sure that a true, intelligent missionary liberality can not be developed in any church by reporting proselytizing achievements. Indeed, it is never very safe to boast over proselytes. Most generally something other than theological convictions prompts a change of church relations—among preachers especially. And to parade the housing of a few disaffected persons from another mission is rather perilous. Such facts have the enchantment that distance ever lends. Those heroic labors at Saltillo were heralded as the most wonderful ever known in any mission field; but the true history reveals only an exaggerated account of a little successful proselytizing from a Presbyterian congregation.

At a recent meeting of the Baptist Publication Society, at Saratoga, a brother enlisted the congregation by telling of a "providential conjunction"—the simultaneous conversion of a Congregationalist Church of seven hundred members in Armenia and of its Congregationalist pastor, who was at the time in this country, to Baptist views—each being ignorant of the change which was taking place in the other, and each afflicted, in spite of the new-found light, by the reflection that the change must sever the enduring relation of pastor and people. The incident was thrilling, and the audience was no little enthused when someone proposed to raise there and then the money to send "the Baptist pastor back to his Baptist Church in Armenia." But, alas! for the cold, white light of truth. How it scatters airy dreams and exposes pleasant delusions! The church of seven hundred members at Arabkir it transpires numbers only ninety, and only some of these are disquieted by proselyters from Erzroom "distributing Baptist tracts and preaching immersing. That is their way of converting the heathen—marauding the flocks of other laborious, godly men.

As to the pastor who was simultaneously converted we will let the Watchman speak:

Since the meeting at Saratoga we have learned some facts which have a little dampened the enthusiasm and a little stimulated the misgivings which, even then, were rather quieting. We have learned, for instance, that this man introduced to the Saratoga audience has been for some years the pastor of a church in Arabkir, a considerable city in eastern Turkey, consisting of ninety members; that he left them between five and six years ago to raise money for repairing or enlarging their chapel; that he has ever since been wandering in Egypt, England and America, ostensibly seeking to raise the sum of $500 for this purpose; that he has applied to Congregationalists to little purpose, though with such persistence that Dr. Hayden, the district secretary of the American Board in New York, urged the Prudential Committee in Boston to give him the money and send him home; that he applied to the Presbyterians, intimating that he was more Presbyterian than Congregationalist in his traditional views and personal sympathies; that he has disregarded the advice of the Board to return to his church, though the advice was reinforced by the assurance that when his people had done their part in raising the money needed, the balance would be supplied according to the rule of the Board in such cases, and, finally, that when the appeal was made to him as a Baptist, he had not been baptized and was not a member of any Baptist Church. We desire to exercise all charity; but if it should seem to anyone who learns the circumstances that this brother, with the shrewdness which characterizes his race, has been careful to reserve the freedom and mastery of his ecclesiastical relations till he has secured his object, it would not be easy to repel the imputation.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

A visit to Grenada Collegiate Institute during the examinations and commencement exercises convinced me of several things:

1. The property we have at Grenada is far more valuable than I supposed it to be. The building is of brick, large, substantial, commodious and well adapted to the purposes for which it was erected. The grounds are ample and beautiful. The whole devoted in fee simple to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

2. Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., President, and his accomplished assistants are doing a great work, and they are doing it thoroughly. They do not cram their pupils, but they draw them out and teach them to think for themselves. All the teachers are religious, and they seem to be concerned for the spiritual welfare of the pupils as well as for their intellectual culture. The character of the teachers is more important than the curriculum of the school. Some people do not know this, but it is true. The religious influences at Grenada Collegiate Institute are of the best kind.

3. The boarding department is well kept and the table well supplied with the best the market affords. There is plenty of room for one hundred boarders without crowding any one of them.

4. Parents and guardians in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference can not do any better by their children and wards than to send them to this institution. It is near home, in our own State and under the control of the North Mississippi Conference. Distance often lends enchantment to schools, as well as to views, while there is a world of solid worth close to home, at our very doors. In the matter and manner of teaching I have yet to see better work than I saw at Grenada.

5. The preachers and laymen of the North Mississippi Conference, particularly on the west side of the State, ought to rally to the support of the Grenada Collegiate Institute, both by their prayers and their patronage. If this were done this institution would soon be the pride and glory of our Conference and people, and it would be a great power for good in our bounds.

6. Too many preachers and too many laymen overestimate the amount of money made by teaching. Bro. Newell is receiving less money for his work at Grenada than he would get in any one of forty or fifty pastoral charges in our bounds. He was appointed to this work by the Bishops just as other preachers are sent to pastoral charges. He sticks to his work because it is the post of duty assigned him by the authorities of the church. This is not a private enterprise for the accommodation of a certain man. It is a part of the work of the church. Nor is it a convenient pocket in which to lodge an inefficient man, for the President was one of our most efficient pastors, as he is now one of our most successful teachers.

7. Our schools and our teachers do not have the place in the sympathies and prayers of our people that they ought to have. Too many people underestimate the character and importance of the work they are doing. The influence of a school and of Christian teachers is one of the silent forces working in many places for the elevation and salvation of the people. The results of honest work for God in the school room are not apparent to human eyes as the results of some other kinds of work, but they are none the less visible to God, who sees the end from the beginning; and he will reward the faithful teacher for the far-reaching influences of his faithful toil. Honest teaching yields the sweetest fruits for many years and through many generations.

8. Bro. Newell realizes the need of Divine help and guidance in the school room and hoarding department as much as he did in the pulpit and pastorate. He teaches for Christ, and teaching is part and parcel of our commission.

9. Teaching is hard work, requiring hard study, great patience, consummate skill and tact, and is lacking in the stimulus and excitement of pulpit and pastoral work.

10. As long as I live I intend to give every Christian teacher the right hand of fellowship and bid him God-speed as a fellow laborer in the great vineyard of our Lord.

11. In the Conferences of which I may be a member, I will not allow if I can prevent it, any teacher to be snubbed or overlooked who comes to represent the interest he has been called to serve.

VERONA, MISS., June 22, 1885.

After the Revival.

If Methodism had all the converts it made, its numerical strength would be double what it is. If Methodism made an intelligent, earnest work out of half it does hold, it would speedily bring the world to Christ. As a revival church, we lead all the rest. But after the revival comes the work of assimilating, training and utilizing the new converts. Here is a task that will tax the skill and energy of the wisest. The day begins when the revival ends. It starts a dance, opens a saloon, organizes a club and puts in motion the whole machinery of temptation. The church must bestir itself to protect the weak, to confirm the unstable and lead all into a higher life.

The "Oxford League" will prove a very useful help to this important work. It is simple, cheap and practical. It puts the young Methodist on a course of reading that will inform his mind, fortify his convictions, quicken his zeal and make an intelligent worker in the church of God. What a wonderful blessing we have! There is an inspiration in its records of lofty, daring, heroic suffering. But very hard is the thrilling accounts of the danger and triumph. Give the "League" a trial. Write to the undersigned at Memphis, Tenn., for circulars, constitution, etc., and tug how to start the work. I have no interest whatever in it except that I believe the church needs it and every pastor will find it a great help to his people.

The Interior, our sprightly cotemporary of Chicago, has a word to say in favor of applause in religious assemblies and for old-fashioned Methodist shouting. We have been sympathized with the idea that Methodism is synonymous with shout; but if persons are so disposed we have no objection. The Interior says:

"Let us read the news from Palestine on the subject of applause in religious assemblies. A king has been crowned there amid the solemn ceremonies—prayers and praise and psalms—and they clap their hands, and said, (God save the king!)" And when the ark of covenant of the Lord came into camp all Israel shouted with a shout until the earth rang again, a solemn covenant with God was made in the days of Azaiah, son of Obed. And they swore to the Lord with a loud voice and with shouting and with trumpets and with cornets, for all Israel related the oath. The foundations of a new temple of the Lord was laid. And they sang together by chorus, praising and giving thanks unto the Lord, because he is good, for his mercy endureth forever, and all the people shouted with a great shout when they praised the Lord."

seems to have been a division, by mutual consent, of the joyful things of that grand old church of David and Isiah and Elijah between the Methodists and the Presbyterians. The Methodists take the shouting for their share, and the Presbyterians fall heir to the clapping of hands. Applause has been unsuppressible in our assemblies ever since the reunion, and will be to all coming time—because our people love the dear old ways which have come down through the long ages, in the sauntering of the Lord.

Parker Memorial Church.

Thankful and encouraged with responses from the brethren, we urge all to send in their assistance as soon as possible, for we wish to move right ahead to the completion of this worthy enterprise.

McTyeire Institute.

Rev. George H. Martin and myself, being appointed by the Bishop, at the last session of the Memphis Conference, the Visiting Committee of McTyeire Institute, put in an appearance in due time for the commencement exercises of the institution. The commencement sermon had been delivered the day before by the Rev. R. M. Standifer, of the North Mississippi Conference. We enjoyed the examinations for two or three days, and exercises of speaking and reading at night. On Wednesday night, June 3, the literary address was delivered by the Rev. Julian C. Brown, of the White River Conference. Bros. Standifer, Brown, Goodloe (one of the principals) and myself were together at the Vanderbilt. So we "boys" had a good time together again.

Doctor, this is a good school, well managed by two energetic, growing young men—men of work, because of their Christian principles, as well as thorough preparation for this special work. Messrs. Goodloe and Williams are succeeding in establishing a youth's training-school. They claim no more for it, and I am glad to say it is all of that. We need more and better training-schools and fewer and better colleges.

To one seeking a training-school I advise—investigation of the advantages offered at McKenzie, Tenn.

Sermons and Sayings by Rev. Samuel P. Jones.

As book agent I have made a contract with the Rev. Samuel P. Jones for the publication in book form of his sermons and sayings. The sermons will be mainly those delivered during the progress of the late meeting in the gospel tent at Nashville. Reports of these sermons have gone out through the public press which are imperfect and incomplete, and do not fairly represent the discourses as delivered. Mr. Jones has carefully revised the sermons to be published in this volume. They have been copyrighted, and constitute the only authentic sermons offered to the public by this distinguished evangelist. The volume is now passing through the press, and will be ready for distribution at an early day, and will contain a handsome steel engraving of the evangelist.

Newspapers friendly to Mr. Jones and his work will confer a favor by publishing this notice and calling public attention to it.

Nashville, Tenn., June 20, 1885.

Vicksburg District Conference.

Will all the pastors of the district please ascertain immediately which members expect to attend. Then, brethren, will you as quickly drop a postal to Judge J. Millsaps, of Lee (postoffice), Miss., chairman of our Reception Committee, giving him the names of all who intend to be with us. This will greatly facilitate arrangements.

Cane Ridge, the seat of the Conference, is very near to Hayes' Station, on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad, at which point we hope to meet all delegates coming by rail either Wednesday, five o'clock P. M., or Thursday, eleven o'clock A. M. As it is a "country" church, the people have more room in their hearts and homes than they have means of transporting delegates to and fro. Therefore, we invite country brethren who live in striking distance not to be afraid to bring their own horses if convenient. We will try to secure reduced rates on the railroads for return trip. Let all delegates who can come.

Cordially,
J. P. DRAKE.

Emory and Henry College has conferred the degree of A. M., in course, on Rev. Thos. B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference.

—Dr. A. M. Shipp, late professor in Vanderbilt University, has removed to Cheraw, S. C.

—The State Prohibition Convention, of Mississippi, met in the city of Jackson yesterday. An account of its proceedings will be given in our next issue.

—Dr. Jas. H. Carlisle canceled some of his summer engagements for lectures and addresses on account of physical prostration, but is now much improved.

—The State Agricultural College at Corvallis, Oregon, has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. T. B. White, recently returned to the Columbia Conference.

—Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty, the gift of France to the United States, arrived in New York on the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill. A suggestive and beautiful coincidence.

—The Mohammedans have ninety-nine names for God, but among them all they have not "Our Father." That endearing title, with all its blessed significance, belongs only to Christianity.

—Mission work in Madagascar is enjoying uninterrupted prosperity. There are 1,200 churches and 71,555 communicants. The native churches have given $1,000,000 in ten years for the spread of the gospel.

—A notice from Rev. James A. Godfrey, on the eighth page, will be of interest to the preachers in the Meridian district. We are glad to learn that Bro. Godfrey is improving and hopes to re-enter the field very soon.

—On the twelfth ultimo, the one hundred and sixteenth Conference of the Methodist Church in Ireland assembled in the city of Cork. Rev. Frederic Greaves, D. D., president of the Wesleyan Conference in England, presided.

—The graduating class at Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga., numbered forty-four, the largest ever sent out from that excellent institution. Dr. Hopkins preached the sermon and Rev. J. W. Lee delivered the annual address.

—Dr. A. A. Lipscomb, the venerable Methodist educator and literate, heartily endorses Dr. Haygood's views on the subject of a shorter collegiate year. He favors an eight months' term and the making of Saturday a regular schedule day for study and recitation.

—We regret to hear that the residence of Bro. Robert Babbington, at Franklin, La., was destroyed by fire last week. It was a total loss without a dollar's insurance. Bro. Babbington is one of the Advocate's most valued friends. We extend our sincerest sympathies.

—The Rev. E. E. Jenkins, Ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, and at present one of the Missionary Secretaries of his church, passed through Chicago last week on his return from an official visit to the missions of Ceylon, India and China. He is one of the truly great men of English Methodism.

—The Grenada papers give a full account of the commencement exercises of the Grenada Collegiate Institute. The sermon by Rev. R. G. Porter is spoken of in terms of high praise, and the annual address by Rev. W. B. Murrah must have been a superb effort. We are glad to hear that the institution is prospering and that President Newell is hopeful for the future.

—The San Marcos Sunday-school Assembly and Summer Institute will open on the eleventh of August and continue twenty days. It is located at San Marcos, Tex., at an altitude of 1000 feet above the Gulf of Mexico and overlooking San Marcos Lake, river and town. We are indebted to Rev. H. M. DuBois, of Houston, for an invitation to attend, to whom letters for information should be addressed.

—Randolph-Macon College commencement is fully reported in several of our exchanges. The past has been a successful term in all respects. The financial exhibit was an improvement on previous years, showing a small surplus to aid in extinguishing a floating debt. The available endowment is about $50,000, and efforts will be made to increase it to $100,000. We are glad to see a good report from that ancient and honored seat of Methodist learning.

—On Monday evening, of last week, the Chinese Mission School, of this city, gave a reception to Rev. A. N. Wycoff, the former pastor of Canal Street Presbyterian Church, who is now visiting amongst us. There was a handsome collation and a pleasant evening spent in conversation, music and short addresses. Dr. Palmer spoke in a happy way to the pupils, and the Chinese all voted that Mr. Wycoff should not leave New Orleans. This is a good work, and those engaged therein deserve all praise.

—The "Oxford League" idea is in full force at Felicity Street Church, this city. Rev. S. Halsey Werlein, pastor. Every Monday evening the lecture-room of that church is crowded with young people and their friends, for literary and religious exercises. There is a programme of music, recitations, essays and a debate, and each occasion overflows with good cheer. We approve most heartily the enterprise of Bro. Werlein as a practical and commendatory expression of the Oxford League movement.

—Rev. Sam Jones and Rev. J. A. Bowen passed through the city on Tuesday returning from the revival meeting at Waco. There were hundreds of conversions and probably 300 will be added to the several churches. The constant strain of the past year has somewhat prostrated Bro. Jones. He was sick much of the time while in Waco, and will be compelled to cancel some of his summer engagements. It would be wise to give that laborious man a rest during the heated term. Unless his husband's strength more, his career of usefulness will be too short. Bro. Bowen has his hands full in Mississippi—is indeed unable to meet the demands upon his time.

—The Seashore Camp Meeting will begin next Wednesday afternoon, the eighth instant. Many families have already occupied their cottages and others are moving in. The trustees are providing for a large attendance and a grand meeting. The presiding elders of the New Orleans, Mobile and Seashore districts will have charge of the public worship, and a number of ministers will be present. All preachers are cordially invited and will be well entertained. A week by the seaside will be refreshing to overworked brains and overtaxed nerves, while at the same time the best spiritual associations may be enjoyed. We unite with our brethren in praying the Master's blessings upon this feast of tabernacles. As in other years we shall look for many conversions and liberal ingatherings.

—The collapse of Mormonism seems to be imminent. She can not much longer resist an indignant national sentiment. The late decision of the United States Supreme Court, affirming the constitutionality of the so-called "Edmunds bill," has struck terror into their ranks. Polygamy can not long escape its provisions. It was framed to pursue and convict polygamists and will succeed. It is now reported, by way of New York, that the leaders have made a definite proposition to several large capitalists in the East to dispose of the property of the church, preparatory to moving into Mexico. The agent in the negotiation is John W. Young, a son of Brigham Young by his first wife, one of the contractors for building the Union Pacific road, and a sharp business man.

Sam Jones.

"Sermons and Sayings of Sam Jones." The volume is made from shorthand reports of the unique and powerful discourses of the famous Evangelist. Price, fifty cents by mail. Stamps, of two-cent kind, taken. Discount to the trade or persons taking a dozen copies. Address, John J. Laferty, Publisher Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va.

To OUR AGENTS.—On the first day of July, bills will be sent to our agents for all orders received up to that date. Please remit promptly where accounts are found correct, and in cases of error please return bills for correction.

CARVER & JAMIESON.

Address all mail matter to New Orleans Christian Advocate, New Orleans.

Books and Periodicals.

—We have received No. 133 of the Standard Library, published by Funk & Wagnalls, of New York. The title of the book is "Prayer and Its Remarkable Answers," by Wm. W. Patton, D. D., President of Howard University, Washington City. It is the twelfth edition, revised and enlarged by two supplementary chapters on "The Credibility of Skepticism," and "The Relations of Science to Revealed Religion." This is an interesting book on a subject which at the present occupies a large share of the thought of the time. We commend it to our readers. The price is remarkably low, as are all the publications of this company. Price, fifty cents.

—The Pulpit Treasury, for July, has a good table of contents. The variety offered to pastors, Christian workers and families in this monthly, gives it an excellent place and the flavor is exceedingly enjoyable. Published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York.

—The Woman's Magazine, for June, is full of interesting articles on topics connected with woman's work in industries, missions, charities and reforms. The reading women will find this magazine attractive and beneficial in many ways. Its cheapness puts it in reach of all. Price, $1.00. Published by Frank E. Housh, Bradoboro, Va.

Publisher's Department.

No fraudulent advertisements will knowingly be allowed in the ADVOCATE. If one ever appears it will be by accident.

In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

CARVER & JAMIESON, Publishers.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—To order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Allen & Co., Fifth & Vine Sts., Cincinnati, O., and 140 Nassau St., New York, making them our Special Publishers' Agents, and giving them the entire charge of the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

SEASHORE COTTAGE FOR RENT.—We call attention to the advertisement of Rev. H. J. Harp in this issue, of a desirable cottage on the Seashore Camp Ground for rent, for the season. The cottage is within easy reach of tabernacle, beach, and bath house.

A bright story in grammar is told of a little school girl. "Quarrel," she asked, "is plural." "Why?" because it takes two to make one.

Their works prove their merits; as for instance, after a quarter of a century of established success, the Esterbrook's Steel Pens, sold everywhere.

"Yes," said Jones, "when my wife gets mad she reminds me of a vessel under way." "How so?" inquired Smith. "Because she's got her rancor up."

If there is life left in the birds, Parker's Hair Balm will promote a new growth of hair. It costs but little to try it. See.

We have known some occasions when it did not pay to be parliamentary; as, for instance, when a Fairhaven, Mass., fire engine company stopped in the street to elect a member from the front putting a stream on a burning building.

Rev. A. C. Crain, 222 St. Joseph St., New Orleans, the well-known agent of the Am. Day Pub. Society, in a statement dated June 16, '85, says: "I have used the New La. Remedy in my family for chronic catarrh and fever. Both were cured. The best constitutional remedy I have seen. It is a better anti-periodic than quinine."

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—Willie Whiting, our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone P. O., Pickens county, Ala., having often read in the Advocate of the great bargains in pianos offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was most delighted after having closed the sale for one of those lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $30 to $40, and also be convinced that wherever pianos are required or taken in exchange for new ones, Good second-hand pianos as low as $25.

W. C. Shepard sells dinner and tea sets, refrigerators, bath tubs, ice boxes and cream freezers.

For all points in Texas and California take the Southern Pacific and Star and Crescent via Houston.

THE GREAT JACKSON ROUTE.—Is the favorite to all summer resorts. It has been rebuilt with steel rails; has adopted the standard gauge with a well ballasted track, and increased speed. They offer the advantages of fast time, through cars, sure connection, and accommodating officers.

Notice to subscribers who order their address changed. Please give full address of last Postoffice, otherwise change cannot be made.

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend for the next year and you will not regret it.

Send fifteen cents to stamps for a copy of Kendall's Treatise on the Horse.

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE please keep this in remembrance.

Obituaries.

JACKSON—As the gloomy winter merged into glowing summer, the messenger of death, coming for our dear, sweet friend, and sister in Christ, Mrs. M. A. Jackson, occurred April 21, at her home in Mandeville, where she was raised and educated. She was thirty-seven years old. Nor was there any unexpected. Oh! no! for she had told long before that she was patiently awaiting it.

Four years ago, death deprived her of her husband—the broad breast and strong arm upon which she had leaned for comfort and support. And in her young widowhood came the great grief of giving up her only boy, to whom she had learned to look for help and support.

She could all her trials, she was characterized by that meek submission which comes of an abiding trust in our heavenly Father. Oh! how my heart swelled with admiration for her noble spirit, by her dying hope, bidding him to "trust in Jesus."

And that Jesus who sustained her in all her trials, forsook her not in death, for her last words, when asked by her sister if she could sleep, were: "Yes, sleep in Jesus."

This passed away one of the loveliest Christian characters of which the church at Mandeville could boast of—one who never failed to reach forth her hand to the poor, and to throw over the weakness and shortcomings of her fellow-being, the mantle of Christian charity. One who never failed, when asked to attend the house of God, the prayer-meeting and the missionary society, to feel that we have one more life in heaven—one more ensoul to be faithful; and oh! that her children may make a life-long effort to pass through the everlasting gate of the New Jerusalem, and with the redeemed millions take their station where the orphans will be heard no more.

FURNISS—Mrs. CAROLINE A. FURNISS (nee Hargis) was born June 11, 1848, was married to Samuel M. Furniss, May 14, 1850, and departed this life May 11, 1885.

Sister Furniss was a very devout member of the Missionary Baptist Church. She was truly a Christian, and I think one of the most beautiful characters in all her Christian graves I ever knew. She seemed to do everything from a sense of Christian duty.

The Bible was to her a very precious book, and she was a faithful attendant upon the preaching of the word of God. She was over a friend to her pastor, and was his ever ready servant. For many years before her death, she was cut off from the associations of her own church and pastor, but made herself pleasant and agreeable to the Methodist church, and proved to be as worthy and zealous in the work of the same, as though it were her own church. Her husband was ever a cordial home for the Methodist pastor. The family prayer, morning and night, was ever a love feast in her home when the preacher was around. I often recall with fond memories, the many pleasant calls to her precious Christian mother during her stay on the Red River. Her home was no more a home for the Methodist on the banks of the Red River, but a dreary, though bright with a pleasant father and a noble daughter and sons, yet dreary because the mother was gone.

Sister Furniss was the mother of eight children, three of whom went on where to wait her coming.

May God bless her heart-stricken family and save them.

HUTHANCE—Sister ELIZABETH HUTHANCE was born in Pensacola, Florida, April 13, 1813, joined the Wesleyan Methodist in 1825, and died in Natchitoches, La., June 1, 1885.

She was a very quiet, though devout Christian woman, always ready in an unobtrusive manner to do what she could for the cause of her Master. Though old and feeble, she attended the public worship of God whenever her health would permit.

She died very suddenly of aneurism of the heart, and consequently her funeral testimony was short, though expressive of a strong Christian faith. A little before her death she called one of her grandsons, and said: "Willie, I am going to heaven." She then said to her children, "Pray for me."

And without a struggle went to join those who had gone before. Sister Huthance leaves two children and fifteen grandchildren who mourn, but without hope. They expect to meet her again. The writer had been acquainted with her but a little more than four months; but in that short time she was so friendly and so interesting, and so full of life, that her death was a great loss to the church and to the community. Earth is poorer, but heaven has doubtless had another accession to its ranks.

THOS. J. UPTON.

ROUND—Mrs. ELA E. ROUND, wife of Mr. Henry Round, and daughter of F. and L. A. Ferguson, was born in the county, Miss., on December 12, 1847, and departed this life on March 11, 1885, aged twenty-seven years and three months. She professed faith in Christ February, 1875, and was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by the writer, who was in charge of the Paulding circuit at that time. Her father died when she was a child, and she was raised by her mother, who trained her up in the fear of the Lord. She was a very good mother, and a good mother to her children. May God bless and take care of the little children.

The writer was well acquainted with Mrs. Round for twelve years, and from her she professed religion, and from her death, she was faithful and true to her profession. Having set her face in order, all was well; and when the messenger of death announced her death, she met it with a smile and a meekly followed. Her death was short and quiet, and yet was ever part from them who are called from earth to heaven. They are called from earth to heaven, and yet are called from earth to heaven. They are called from earth to heaven, and yet are called from earth to heaven.

nal rest that our Father has for his saints.

Yes, there on the farther shore of the bright beyond, she awaits the coming of her loved ones, to guide and direct them to the realm above. There are gains for all losses. Though the silent tear drops fall, we mingle ours with our prayers for the bereaved ones, who hold in compliance with an supreme will, for the doth all things well.

Bereaved mother, husband and little children, look up and move forward, for your departed one is not dead, but sleepeth.

PARTIN—MARISSA ANNETTE, daughter of Dr. C. P. Partin, was born in Lauderdale county, Miss., August 13, 1850, and died at the residence of her father in Decatur, Miss., April 7, 1885, aged thirty-four years, seven months and twenty-four days. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Chunkey Station, Miss., in the summer of 1873. She was a member of the Decatur Methodist Church at the time of her death. During the last three years of her life, she suffered very much from chronic catarrh; especially the last year was her sufferings great indeed. Sister is gone from us, whom she loved to the end, calling us all to her to kiss each one good-bye; but she is freed from pain and sorrow, and has joined that blessed mother who preceded her nearly forty years, to dwell in the beautiful mansions above. And the Lord in his infinite mercy grant that we, as father, brothers and sisters, may be enabled to do his commandments so that we "may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city," and there reunited, form an unbroken family to live forevermore.

ROBERTS—"Why weep for the young and lovely, who die in the morning of life," especially when they "die the death of the righteous," as did our dear SISTER JENNIE ROBERTS, at her home near Zeiglerville, Yazoo county, Miss., May 13, 1885. Miss Jennie Roberts was born in 1861, was married to Mr. Frank D. Roberts, May 13, 1878, whom, with three little girls, she leaves to weep a wife and mother gone. Sister Roberts joined the Methodist Church at Lodi, Yazoo county, in 1880, and until death was worthy of her profession. In the hour of death she expressed her willingness to go, and shouted God's praises. She continued to urge those around her to join her in glory, and thus rejoicing through faith, over the agony attendant upon death from pneumonia, she trustingly "fell on sleep." If the welcome smile, the kindly hand and generous heart merits anything of sweet remembrance, surely the name of fair Jennie Roberts will long remain fragrant with those who knew her. To the bereaved we offer our earnest sympathy, but, "O God alone, who can comfort and give that peace, the principle of which is trust."

M. A. BELL.

WEATHERSBY—Dr. WILLIAM WEATHERSBY was born in Lawrence county, Miss., January 3, 1829, and died in Rankin county, Miss., April 6, 1885.

He was converted twenty-eight years ago, and lived a consistent Christian. He was a kind and affectionate father and husband. His friendship was real and constant. As a physician he was tender, and always ready to visit the poor. He was kind to the widows and orphans, and many in that great day will call him blessed. Bro. Weathersby was catholic in his opinions and all who possessed the name of Christ he loved. His three wives (the last is still living) were all Methodists, and he was kind to them in encouraging them in their church relations.

His church and community will miss him. His influence is felt for good. His death was peaceful. His faith was strong in the atoning merits of Christ. May our heavenly Father protect his two children and widow, and may they emulate his virtues.

A WONDERFUL and SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists, who claim that the MEDICAL GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours use.

2. The chemicals anneal the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cool, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.

4. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, with no distracting or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

NOW, NOW, NOW IS THE TIME! SPRING TIME! PURIFY YOUR BLOOD.

DR. J. H. McLEAN'S Strengthening Cordial AND BLOOD PURIFIER

Is the greatest Blood Purifier in the world. TRY IT, AND YOU WILL USE IT EVERY SEASON.

It acts as delightfully on the tender babe, the most delicate Lady and infirm old age, as on the strong man, in imparting health and vigor to Nerves and Brain, Blood Vessels, Heart and Liver. When taken, you can feel its life-giving power, your course through every artery, destroying all diseases of the blood, and giving Health, Vital Power and Strength in every part of the system. Who will suffer from Liver Complaint or Diseases of the Stomach, Kidneys, Bowels, or Bladder, when such a great Remedy is within their reach?

IT WILL CURE: Sleeplessness, Night Sweats, Sallow Complexion, Hot Flashes, Fainting Spells, Nervousness, Falling Sights caused by Weakness, Dyspepsia, Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Obstructed Constipation, Heart Troubles, Headache, Diarrhea or Bloody Flux, Lung and Liver Diseases, Kidney Troubles, Weak Back, Neuritis, Pains in Bones, Sick Stomach, Depression, Blues, Dyspepsia, Female Weakness, Pimples, Sores and Blisters on the Face and Skin, Cuts, Bruises, etc.

Dr. J. H. McLEAN, St. Louis, Mo. Dear Sir:—Having been troubled with Female Complaint for some time, by the advice of a St. Louis lady, I tried Dr. J. H. McLEAN'S Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, and am happy to say that it has cured me completely, and I am as well now as ever. I consider it unequalled, being rapid and certain in its action.

From Mrs. R. W. Mackie & Son, Vicksburg, N. Carolina:—Your Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier is in great demand. It gives universal satisfaction and is almost as staple as sugar and coffee in this vicinity. Very truly, Mrs. R. W. Mackie & Son, Vicksburg, N. Carolina, March 5th, 1885.

Dear Sir:—Owing to the intense heat last summer in the harvest field, many in this neighborhood were prostrated at work, and many of them are afflicted with chronic diarrhoea and kindred diseases. But by the advice of a friend I used your Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, and have been as well as ever, although I was more exposed than the majority of those who have been more or less sick over the summer. Yours truly, HAST. MERRILL.

A MYSTERY.

BY GRACE DENNIS LITCHFIELD.

Life held in her hands a measure,
And swung it, lightly and low;
And she said: I will see if my pleasures
Do not outweigh my woe.
And she gathered all stinging laughter,
All loves that were lasting and sure,
All joys that left memories after,
All wealth that was wingless and pure;
She gathered all sunlight and starlight,
All thornless and fadeless flowers;
She gathered the faint light and far light
Of pangs and perfect hours;
She gathered all glimpses of heaven,
That never had blessed the soul,
All hopes that had held to fruition,
All talents that won to the goal,
All wisdom that never had ended,
All truths that never had fled,
All ambitions that never had waned,
All beauty that satisfied.
And she hung them all, all in her measure,
But nothing outweighed the pain;
And she said: I must add a treasure,
The sweetest and best in my train.
And she reached out and took death, and laid it,
All sweet and calm on the scales;
As pale as before, still outweighed it;
And she sighed as she said: "Could this fall?
Two she reached up to merciful heaven,
Took down, and hung over earth's strife,
A little pale hope, all unproven—
The hope of a measureless life:
For it does with a doubting and wonder,
With question and touch of disbelief,
When it is with the light scale went under;
Life's woe was outweighed by life's gain!
Oh, strange! Oh, most strange! If the measure
Of all mortal days be but woe,
Compared with their scene of pleasure,
(Life measured as the hung the scale low.)
Why, then, should it lessen earth's sorrow,
Why magnify death's consequence,
To believe in a timeless to-morrow?
And life held the scale in suspense.
—Independent.

Two Weeks.

June 6 I left home on a tour the main object of which was to drum for Centenary College. Let me say that I do not like the drumming business either as a business or a recreation. In a business light I regard it as an enormous tax upon the productive industries of the country and consequently one of the causes of hard times. But the people will have it so. There is no good reason why our people should not patronize their own institutions without being personally and directly solicited. As for the amusement in drumming I will let any well-disposed man, against whom I owe a grudge, have it for nothing—my good will thrown in.

At Baton Rouge I spent Sunday, the seventh. Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy is an energetic pastor. He suggested to me what I had tried to write of several times but failed, viz.: railroad employee and their religious needs. Railroad companies employ lawyers by the dozen at enormous rates. They employ many other agents whose ways are dark but potent with courts and legislatures. The preacher, however, and his mission to the thousands of railroad people are ignored. The question is, can not railroad chaplains serve better as such than in the present way, and would it not be well for the Methodist Church to organize so as to meet the wants of this strong and growing element in the country? Bro. Faunt LeRoy thinks he could enter this field with confidence of ultimate success.

Manfield is the seat of the Female College over which the Conference wing hovers like the State pelican on the flag. The pelican looks as if she might swallow the young once, neat and all, but she does not. She is not a cannibal pelican. Dr. Grace presides at Manfield. Prof. Grace also is there, and as master of ceremonies at the commencement showed that he understood his business. The college building is a substantial brick building, three stories high. The chapel and stewards' halls are of wood. The grounds are ample and beautiful. In one corner is a beautiful monument to Dr. Thweatt, the founder of the institution. His memory lingers with a people whose tones are subdued as they speak of his zeal and simple beauty of character.

I must not fail to say that the young ladies of the college impress me by their modesty and dignity of demeanor. Yet they were not prudish. They know how to develop girls into young ladies at Manfield. I hear neither slang nor hislatin in conversation, and saw neither forwardness nor stiffness in conduct.

The Alumni Association was well represented by Misses Field and Puckett. The former read an essay at once lofty, profound, caustic and suave. She was often interrupted by cheers. The latter read a poem of perfect rhythm and of fine sentiment. I mention rhythm because so many think there is more genius in a three-legged Pegasus than in any other. I no more believe that the muses inspire a poet purposely to murder rhythm than that the Lord inspire preachers to murder Cleveland's American.

Three young ladies graduated. One was from Mississippi. She was there for cause. I mention this fact for the reason that I believe too many Mississippians go abroad to school while home schools need their patronage. I may be called to explain why I drum for Centenary in Mississippi. Every intelligent Methodist can answer. If other Methodists insist on being informed, tell them to come to Centenary and they can get the desired information.

Shreveport is the city of North Louisiana. Dr. Evans is there for Methodism and a new church edifice. Happy in the location for one thing at least—it will be a conspicuous object by which strangers can be guided to almost any point in the city. Cost, $30,000. Dr. Evans thinks the time near for a warning of the live at Shreveport. I second. The reason is that now the church does not feel the need of exertion. The preacher is paid, the collections all full, congregations large and orderly, Sunday-school well officered—in fact, things are done and nobody strained—so that in such a drowsy atmosphere everybody is in danger of going to sleep. Let the Bishop send two men to Shreveport next year and then somebody will have to scuffle for a living and that will help wonderfully.

Texas! I bored through the shell of this immense territorial Chelonian to the distance of one hundred and seventy miles. Texas has more poor land in it than Mississippi and Louisiana put together. Then it has more rich land than both. But Texas wealth is in predication more than in reality as compared with the older States. A piece of property in Mississippi worth a thousand dollars varies from two and a half to five thousand in Texas. Some say it is because Texas is two and a half to five times larger. Maybe so. But it is inspiration to get out upon those prairies. Sometimes the thought comes, will not Texas be the final solution of the negro question? But not in this generation, since as yet neither race wants entirely to quit the other. Still things are not all lovely when one has fled the incubus. A vague goneness comes over him. Like the man who had been sick for ten years and awoke well one morning, and had nothing to grunt at, he loungingly looks out for a kinky-headed valet to carry his gripsack and be growled at all for a nickel.

Alexandria is on one side of Red river. Pluville is on the other. Rev. J. M. Beard lives in Alexandria and Presiding Elder Cornell in Pineville. This locates the towns and the preachers and confines the river to the banks. But here also is the terminus of the Morgan railroad to Opelousas leading off from one of the rich districts of the State to another destined in the near future to be richer. Bro. Beard showed me many favors, and I shall not regret the fortune that throws me off for twenty hours again when I have them to spare. Opelousas is upon a plain elevated, perhaps, one hundred feet above the level of the swamps. The country is filling with good citizens from the English-speaking States and the French Catholic natives are growing dissatisfied. Prudence, patience, zeal, devotion are needed and find worthy exemplars in our preachers who are thus laying the foundations for future builders. How disappointing to lay foundations upon which superstructures of far different plan to what we designed are to be reared by other hands! Yet let him who plants the pedestal on which the monument stands only plant it firmly, and no matter who builds or what the monument, posterity will only have the lesson of the latter because of the solidity of the former.

But I am at home. Louisiana makes no bad coffee. Individual mention of first-rate cups of that beverage would be invidious. Qui dubitet licet pro se ipso bibere.

T. A. S. A.

Letter from President Hoss.

MR. EDITOR: This is a good time for writing letters, relatively good. The weather is too warm to allow of any more serious intellectual occupation. A treatise on systematic theology, or on rational psychology, takes on its most forbidding aspect when the thermometer is dancing towards ninety degrees in the shade. Our days for the past week have been really unpleasant, but our nights continue delightful. The most exquisite of purely physical sensations, if it be purely physical, are those which come with a summer night in the mountain state of Virginia. To lie on the fragrant grass, to look up to the quiet stars, to feel the breath of breeze soft as an angel's touch, to forget labor, care, sorrow is one of the most delicious of experiences. If you have never known it, come and see. I should like to have the benefit of your editorial judgment in the matter.

The year through which we are now passing has been one of the hardest ever known in this section. The summer and autumn of 1884 were very dry. Usually we have our best pasturage for cattle in the month of October, and sometimes the fields continue green until the first of December; but this season we have to begin feeding by the last of August. Before the winter was over we were buying baled hay and shelled corn from Kansas and Illinois, a thing unprecedented. Besides, the wheat, of which only a small acreage was sown, was badly frozen out, and will not bring the fourth of a crop. But Providence has its compensations. The cattle that could not be sold last fall are still on hand, and are rapidly fattening on the best grass that we have had for years. An immense crop of corn has been planted, and gives promise of an abundant yield. The stand of oats is exceedingly fine, and the orchards are loaded with fruit. On the whole, we are likely to do as well as usual.

The financial stringency has affected all church enterprises. Our preachers are greatly behind both as regards their salaries and their collections. There may be relief before Conference. Meantime, however, some charges have done nobly. The church at Wytheville has built a capital parsonage, one of the handiest in the connection, and has now under full headway a ten thousand dollar church. I do not know of any place where the conditions of peasant living will be more fully furnished to an itinerant, unless at Abingdon or at Asheville, N. C. If I were in search of a good berth, I should light on one of these. This new church at Chattanooga, costing $37,000, was dedicated one week ago. It makes a new epoch for us in that liveliest of Southern towns. A great many good structures have also been erected in less important centres. One fact about them all is their improved architecture. The day of unsightliness is passed. One of the prettiest and most attractive houses of worship that I have ever seen, I helped to dedicate last winter in Ashe county, N. C. Standing on a high bluff over the rushing waters of the upper New river, surrounded by the native mountain trees, painted white with green blinds, and furnished with a sweet-toned bell, the very sight of it stirred the feelings of worship in me.

The commencements have come and gone. At Sullins College Rev. S. H. Werlein, an Emory and Henry man of the class of 1872, preached the sermon and delivered the address. As I was walking a treadmill of my own at the time, I did not get to hear him, but competent judges speak in the highest terms of both efforts. Bro. Werlein also gave us a short call at Emory. We gave him a glad welcome, and shall hope to see him back at no distant day. Martha Washington brought into use Rev. J. H. Keith and our Prof. T. W. Jordan: the one for a sermon, and the other for a speech. Both did effective work.

Emory and Henry closed on the tenth instant. We have scarcely had a more pleasant commencement in the history of the college. Rev. J. P. Garland, of the class of 1857, preached the baccalaureate sermon; and the brilliant Dr. John J. Laferty, of the Richmond Advocate, who is also an old student, delivered the address. Ten young men graduated. The degree of doctor of divinity was conferred on Rev. Thomas A. S. Adams, now president of Centenary College, of the class of 1860, and on Rev. J. Powell Garland, presiding elder of the Lynchburg district, Virginia Conference, of the class of 1857. The degree of master of arts, in course, was bestowed on Rev. Thomas B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference, Rev. George R. Stuart, of the Holston Conference, and the same degree, honoris causa, on Rev. H. W. Bays, of Knoxville, Tenn. In 1886 we shall celebrate our semi-centennial, and we anticipate a great time. The programme will be elaborate, and the ADVOCATE office is invited to be on hand.

Proselyting in Mexico.

LETTER FROM REV. D. W. CARTER.

MR. EDITOR: You have recently said some timely and proper things in the ADVOCATE in regard to the proselyting spirit of Baptist missionaries in this country. The necessity of saying such things is deeply regretted, but regrets do not remove the necessity of speaking out plainly on this subject. It is a source of surprise and pain that pious and zealous brethren, otherwise unobjectionable, should begin a course of discredit to themselves and so damaging to the general interests of mission work in this country. It would seem that our Baptist brethren regard our work as amounting to little or nothing and needing to be all done over again, because the converts have not been put under the water. From narratives contained in a little paper published in the interest of Baptist missions it would seem that they have made up their minds to an aggressive course against other denominations. It will be a pitiable spectacle if these disturbers shall force us to suspend more important work and enter the lists of controversy in regard to the mode of water baptism. The more to be regretted is this, because it nudges exalts the mere form of administering an ordinance which in itself has no saving virtue. And this very vice of exalting form and ceremony out of all due proportion to their importance has been and is the curse of Mexico, and is one of the things other evangelical denominations are seeking to overthrow.

The course pursued by the Baptist seems utterly inexcusable in any light in which we can view it. This field is so wide, and so many open doors stand before every earnest worker, so many multiplied thousands are utterly destitute of the gospel that there is no excuse for this "ecclesiastical piracy." The paper above referred to, La Luz, says: "In Zacatecas there has been for a number of years a small band of believers who have desired gospel baptism." This reference is to members of the Presbyterian Church in the city of Zacatecas, where, after years of hard work and suffering, the Presbyterians have built up a large and flourishing congregation. How utterly inexcusable and dishonorable under such circumstances is the Baptist intermeddling! The paper further says: "It is a serious question as to whether 'courtesy' should much longer delay the administration of the ordinance," etc. The courtesy of that statement need not be commented upon.

La Luz further states that "Orizaba, too, sends an appeal for the gospel." From that statement one would infer that Orizaba is without any form of evangelical faith. But the truth is, the Methodist Episcopal Church has a congregation and a native preacher there, and we have church property, a congregation, a school, a pastor and a school teacher there, so that Orizaba is not entirely in darkness.

We wonder what the Baptist press, and the conventions that spend so much time discussing missions, have to say of the course these, their missionaries, are disposed to follow in this country.

East Mississippi Female College.

MR. EDITOR: I desire space in your columns to say a few words concerning East Mississippi Female College. The commencement exercises were held June 14-18. The attendance was very large, far exceeding the capacity of the chapel. The exercises were of a very interesting character. The sermon by Dr. Hardie Brown fully sustained his high reputation. The annual address by Rev. Alonzo Monk was abundant in counsels felicitously expressed and gracefully delivered. The baccalaureate was such as was expected by those who know the scholarship and literary abilities of the president. It was a literary gem. The essays and declamations of the pupils in the several departments evinced careful training in composition and elocution. The musical performances were, in the main, highly creditable to the institution, and those on the night of the annual concert were so in the superlative degree.

The Board of Trustees took ample time to acquaint themselves thoroughly with all the affairs of the institution. As to its financial condition, it is in the same category with most of our colleges. It is sadly in need of money to enable it to enlarge its sphere of usefulness and meet the wants of the church. The Board hopes after a time to devise means for augmenting its pecuniary resources. Meantime, if any lover of our Zion is desirous of honoring the Lord with his substance by consecrating it to the cause of Christian education, he can not, in my judgment, do so more remuneratively than by making a donation to this institution. The work of the college during the past session has been such as not only to meet the approval of the Board, but also to elicit their highest commendation. Being a member of the Board of Trustees, I can speak on this point knowingly. The Board congratulate themselves and the patrons of the school upon having been able to retain the entire faculty for another session. As many of your readers may not see the catalogue, I give the names: President, Rev. A. D. McVoy; principal collegiate department, Miss Jennie Moffett; principal academic department, Miss Alice Lusk; principal preparatory department, Miss Zelle McLaurin; musical director, Miss C. H. Southgate. Musical assistant to be elected. Being a patron of the school, and thus having ample facilities for acquiring information on the subject, I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment no school in our church has a better faculty. I desire to call especial attention to the musical department. Of this department no words of commendation at my command are too strong. Parents who wish their daughters taught not only to make a noise on an instrument, but to evoke from it "a concord of sweet sounds" with the most rigid regard for time can not do better than to place them under the care of Miss C. Hunter Southgate.

As a member of the Visiting Committee, appointed by the Annual Conference, as a member of the Board of Trustees, and as a patron of the school, I desire to commend East Mississippi Female College to all who have daughters to educate. Other schools may surpass this in the number of pupils, but they do not surpass it in thoroughness of instruction or in anything that has an educational value. The religious influences affecting the school are good, and its moral tone is high. The patronage was larger than during the previous session; the number of pupils being 136. There were three graduates, viz.: Miss Beulah C. Rencher, Enterprise, Miss; Miss Maggie G. Roberts, Edwards, Miss; Miss Florence R. Jenkins, Meridian, Miss.

An Evil Thing.

Everything good seems to be attended by evil. The devil is a skillful general, and never at rest. Just now he is taking advantage of the wonderful success of Rev. Sam Jones to do the church a vast injury. Personally, the devil gives Bro. Jones a wide berth, and so far has fled from every deld on which they met. But he is flanking him and taking him in the rear and pressing his cause actively at every point. An extract from a letter or two from the preacher will explain my meaning. One brother writes: "Our meeting did not accomplish much; people are waiting for Sam Jones." Another writes: "Bro. So-and-so is waiting for Sam Jones."

"The waiting long is waiting still,
Sam treats no other friend so ill."

I met a brother a few days ago who said his people did not seem to expect or want anything done until Bro. Jones comes.

Now this is deplorable. It is wicked. It is effectually playing into the hands of the devil, and the curse of God will be on that preacher or people who quietly sits down while souls are perishing "waiting for Sam Jones." I rejoice in Bro. Jones' success. I regard him as a remarkable man, raised up of God to save souls and stir the church. He came to Memphis unknown to us. We had never heard of him. So completely ignorant were we of the man that I wrote to Dr. Haygood to learn who he was and whether I could take hold of him. He had no such reputation to back him as he has now. Yet he knows I stood by him, and my church gave him the very best help it could furnish and reaped a large harvest from his labors. I am always glad to hear that he has gone to a place, for I know it means business and will prove a blessing. But he can not be everywhere. What folly to wait for him! Every pastor ought to be his own evangelist. Without aping Sam Jones' quaint individuality emulate his method of fearless preaching against sin. Quit speculation and doctrinal humdrum in the pulpit and preach the gospel. Expect results on the spot. Moral earnestness is certain to make itself felt. Luther prayed three hours a day during the diet of Augsburg, when the destinies of the church hung in the balance; and if your people are in the dreadful state of religious apathy and presumption that can say "wait" on anybody, it is time for you to pray three hours a day. Brethren, think how many souls will perish forever while you are waiting. Do not wait on Rev. Sam Jones or "Rev." anybody else. Have faith in God and go forward.

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

MR. EDITOR: Please say through your good paper to the pastors of the Aberdeen district, North Mississippi Conference, to send the names of all those who expect to attend the Sunday-school Conference and District Conference at Fulton, July 16-19, to N. Casey, Fulton, Miss. Pastor and people are anxious for a full attendance, and for you, Mr. Editor, Tupelo is the nearest railroad town, it being nineteen miles west of Fulton, on the Mobile and Ohio R. R.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, REV. J. T. SAWYER,
REV. W. L. O. HENRICHT.

THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1885.

The "prohibition lunacy" is what a secular paper with saloon sympathies, calls it. And alas! for all such editors the unfortunates are rapidly increasing.

"After the revival" should be a season of pastoral industry, prayer and discretion. It is no less a responsible work to train a convert than to secure one.

The Methodist Episcopal Church baptizes 2000 persons, organizes four Sunday-schools and dedicates five new churches every week. If the other branches of Methodism in the United States, preaching the same doctrine and having substantially the same ecclesiastical polity, be added, the figures will be more than doubled. Surely the Lord is doing great things by means of "the people called Methodists."

The Baptist Gleaner is responsible for the following:

"Just after a very successful meeting which Sam Jones held in Georgia town, it is said that a hard-shell Baptist preacher, coming up to him, engaged him in the following colloquy: 'Bro. Jones, the Methodist and dog-fennel are about to take Georgia. Can you tell us how to get rid of them?' Sam replied: 'I can not tell you how you will be rid of the Methodists; but if you will take all the whiskey in Georgia and pour it on the dog-fennel, the hard-shell Baptists will eat it all up.' Hard on the hard-shells."

The Rev. Dr. C. L. Goodell, a Congregationalist pastor in St. Louis, writes a capital letter to the Advocate, in which he speaks appreciatively of the good religious paper. Every true, observant pastor will echo his utterances. He says:

"A good Christian journal is fifty-two timely pastoral visits in a year, quickening piety. It is a council of churches, pastor and laity, in session every week on important questions and duties. It is a weekly messenger from Conferences, associations, conventions, Sunday-school assemblies and all Christian gatherings, bearing dispatches. It is a constant reminder of duty and privilege, bringing the treasures of a vast spiritual kingdom to your feet every seven days. A living, consecrated Christian newspaper is a runner for the king, and it is always in haste, bearing glad tidings of great joy from one section of his kingdom to another. It is the dove of Noah flying and returning, and bringing to the windows of the ark the sprig of living green from the tree of life that appears above the waters. It is a window open toward Jerusalem, overlooking the ranks and watching over all the movements of the hosts of the Lord in the conflict of ages with unbelief and sin."

So far as we are able to ascertain the mind of the church the name of our branch of Methodism will not be changed. We have no death at any appreciable number of the Annual Conferences will favor the proposition. Unless we are greatly mistaken, a majority are opposed to any change, and many of those who approve of another title will reject the one proposed. If some latitude could have been given—more than one name offered for selection—the result would doubtless be somewhat different. The arguments in favor of a change of name made twenty years ago have quite lost their force—they are practically obsolete. Then, possibly, the measure should have been adopted. But the past two decades of our history—years memorable because of the passions and prejudices succeeding a great Civil War—have been remarkable in spiritual and numerical growth. With all the embarrassments of the offensive suffix, "South," our communicants have rapidly multiplied, and all the interests of the church enjoyed exceptional progress and prosperity. If these years have been crowned with such success, we need not fear for the future. War passions have passed away and ecclesiastical strife no longer disturbs the peace of our common heritage. As far as we are able to understand the question with present lights, no change will be advised. Explanations of a new name would be more annoying than answering objections to the old. And, then, the old has a history honorable and eternal.

Prohibition in Mississippi.

The Prohibition State Convention of Mississippi met in the Hall of Representatives, in Jackson, July 1, at ten A. M. Fifty-three of the seventy-four counties of the State were represented by over three hundred delegates from both races and all professions and callings. The personnel of the convention and its character for intelligence, influence and ability was equal to any body of citizens ever assembled at the State capital. It was, indeed, a grand spectacle to see so many patriotic sons of a great commonwealth drawn together by a single and holy purpose. They were not candidates for official positions—were not seeking the spoils of place and power; but at their own charges, and with no hope of pecuniary reward, they came up from all parts of the State more thoroughly organized for its redemption from the curse of the liquor traffic. However it may be sneered at by the indignant, and feared by the timid politicians, they can but respect the motives and spirit of the movement. Some see in it the delimitation and readjustment of party lines and, therefore, tremble at its progress. Others dread it as an interference with a line of business that may involve the general commerce of the country. But nothing daunted, and with unshaken, unshaded confidence in the righteousness of their cause, the friends of prohibition have developed a sentiment that is already dominant in many sections of the State.

Aacharman of the State Executive Committee, it was made the duty of the editor of this ADVOCATE to call the convention to order, give a brief history of the campaign for the past year and nominate a temporary chairman. The Rev. R. Abbey, of Yazoo City, offered the opening prayer. We recalled the fact, as our venerable friend fervently led the devotions, that, in connection with the late Hon. J. F. C. Claiborne and others, he participated in the first temperance movement ever organized in the State of Mississippi. We wondered what must have been his feelings as the vision of all those intervening years rose up before him. That little company had become a great army—that mere point of light had illumined the entire expanse of the bending heavens. All the others had passed away; but he was preserved to invoke the Divine blessing upon the numerous successors of those pioneer reformers. The Hon. J. B. Chrisman, of Lincoln, presided and conducted the business of the convention with eminent skill and satisfaction. He occupies high judicial position, and is a Christian gentleman of broad charity and well-deserved popularity.

The Committee on Resolutions, after patient deliberation, reported a declaration of principles which, with a few verbal alterations, is identical with that adopted one year ago. It affirms the steady, intelligent growth of prohibition and its grander future, that prohibition does prohibit, declares it to be the duty of all, regardless of race, creed or party, to promote the prosperity of the people, and that the importation, supply and sale of alcoholic beverages sustained by law are promoting causes of intemperance and other resulting evils. It is the purpose of this organization to re-assert the sale of liquor by all possible moral and legal means. An increased temperance sentiment was urged by refusing to sign whiskey petitions, by circulating counter-petitions and giving special attention to the administration of the liquor laws. It declared that the cause of prohibition should not be entangled with party politics; that intemperance should not be countenanced in public officials, and that no drunkard is worthy of support. It further affirmed that it was the policy and duty of prohibitionists to support only those for the Legislature who favor a general local option law, and that the public schools ought not to be made the beneficiaries of the saloons. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was cordially endorsed by a rising vote and their efforts to secure scientific instruction in our common schools on the physiological effects of alcohol. A committee of five distinguished lawyers were appointed, of which the Hon. W. L. Nugent is chairman, to present to the next Legislature the draft of a local option law for its consideration and adoption.

There was some animated discussion; but the temper of the convention was most admirable and the conclusions harmonious and unanimous. There was practical unanimity of sentiment and the heartiest acquiescence in every decision. A handsome offering was made in the afternoon to assist the Executive Committee in prosecuting its work. To this call we reported as a first response a check for fifty dollars from our honored and liberal friend, Bro. Peter James. The outlook for the future is exceedingly cheering. Every delegate to the convention will carry home a renewed purpose to wage more vigorous war against the matchless evil of the age.

A mass meeting was held at night attended by a large and enthusiastic audience. Speeches were delivered by Mr. Dahney Marshall, Dr. Rowan and Mrs. Ervin, of Columbus.

What School?

For weeks past the college commencements have commanded public attention. The young graduate has delivered his last speech, bade farewell to alma mater and gone out into the wide, wide world. With congratulations of admiring friends, the prophecies of professors and the extravagant expectations of parents upon his head, the day of graduation is a supreme period in a young life. All the labors of collegiate years point to that hour, and back to it from all the activities of the future memory will often come and linger with mournful pleasure. The day after graduation brings a new and strange experience. He asks, Why all those years of scholastic drill, pouring over dry text-books? What avail are they to him in life's career? And then for the first time the responsibilities of manhood begin to dawn seriously upon his mind. No longer is he a beneficiary upon the bounty or benevolence of another, but must himself become an independent and integral factor in the world. If the reflections of that day lead to a wise choice of a calling or profession, and the adoption of pure purposes in the struggle for success, the end will already be secured.

But our desire is not to follow the young graduate through his heroic career. We are more concerned for that larger class who are to attend school the next term. Few questions are more difficult to determine and are fraught with more momentous consequences than the schools we patronize. A Christian parent can not afford to entrust his child into the custody of others without much prayer and diligent inquiry. He must know who is to stand in his stead during those formative years as the prophet, priest and king of his son or daughter. If the teacher be unchristian or unworthy, a young life may be poisoned forever—a tender, promising plant warped into an unrighteous and forbidding tree. It is all-important, therefore, that the best possible moral and religious influences should accompany the most expert and careful mental discipline. The moral atmosphere of an institution must first be ascertained, and then the competency of instructors, the fullness of the curriculum and the amplitude of the equipments. Positive religious teaching and influence are of first importance—other things are secondary.

By this test our colleges must stand or fall. It is the only argument in favor of their existence. If we do not provide a more thorough Christian education than other schools, our institutions of learning are a sham and a shame. We appeal to the loyalty and liberality of our people to patronize and endow denominational colleges, because the youth of the church need her constant nurture and culture. But if these institutions give prominence to mental training according to the best methods and the freshest text-books, and neglect the spiritual, they are false to the spirit that gave them birth. We want well-trained scholars, but, at the same time, well-developed Christians. Head and heart culture must go together.

In our advertising columns will be found the names of a number of well-established schools and colleges for the higher education of the sexes. Some of them have a long and honorable history, and from their halls have gone forth the leading men and women of the church. Look over the list, study the advantages of each and make selection. And when your child is placed under the eye of a college president, charge him with the parental and apiritual solicitude that oppresses your own heart. If a true son of the church and worthy of his high position, he will respond to your anxiety and have a vigilant, loving pastor's concern for the care and cure of souls.

Only a few days ago we had a letter from a godly woman in which she said, "I am glad Sister — did not send her children to College." And it is a Methodist institution, but happily not in the South-west. This indicates the thoughtfulness of some parents and should be a lesson to all educators. If a church school once gets a reputation for laxness in religious culture, it will be shunned like a cholera-infected district.

The late Rev. Baxter Clegg, of the Louisiana Conference, was a member of the class of 1835 that graduated from Randolph-Macon College.

The Preacher a Gardener.

BY REV. J. B. A. ABBEY, D. D.

Not that the preacher should understand how to cultivate radishes, turnips and pumpkins; but I shall show that his avocation is similar to that of a gardener. A few years ago I knew a preacher who had been a skillful gardener before he put on the "livery of heaven," who, as a preacher, created sad havoc in the garden of the Lord.

Mourning Mary at one time took the Lord Jesus for a gardener. God, the Father, too, is portrayed to us as a gardener who had built Eden.

Even gardening must be learnt. To ignorant people the ministerial avocation may seem easy, in which even an ignoramus might possibly meet with success; but when its true nature is understood men are constrained to exclaim, Who is sufficient for these things? As a gardener must understand geology and botany, the preacher must be familiar with theology and the wants of our race. If a gardener should only be a good geologist, without the additional knowledge as to what plants will thrive best in the different soil; he might not be successful. Some plants do best in sandy soil, others require clay. Soil is differently rich or meagre, wet or dry, warm or cold; hence the importance of knowing what particular vegetation will thrive best under these different conditions. Rich soil will kill certain plants, while poor soil is poison to others. In short, a good gardener is a horticulturist. He understands the principles involved as well as the application of the same.

Certainly a preacher must be a theologian capable of biblical exegesis and conversant with homiletics. It is a fearful thing to disgust an erudite hearer with our ignorance, or to tantalize the ignorant with our pedantry. I say not that this necessary knowledge shall be acquired at a theological seminary or in the school of the itinerant. No matter where; but it certainly must be acquired. The deep things of God must be known; nor durst we be ignorant as to best methods of applying them for the salvation of men.

A gardener accommodates himself to the four seasons. He knows the proper seed-time. When this comes his soil and seed are in readiness. In the history of every church member the true seed-time will sooner or later come to pass. Severe temptations, tribulations, pain and sorrow overwhelm. This is the seed-time. If now the preacher, like a gardener, with pastoral solicitude manifests true sympathy—drying the tears of the heart-broken, bringing light to those in darkness, including the afflicted to lean on the Good Shepherd's staff, proving himself a cordial friend—the member may be rooted and grounded in his religious experience, confirmed for all time as a Christian. Here the church suffers injury very often. Preachers are devoid of that cordiality and manifest not that devotion to their afflicted members which they expected, and which would have opened their hearts for the reception of religious truth. The dark times pass away, and with them, perhaps, forever the opportunity of effectually influencing those members in matters of religion.

Plants require careful attention. Weeds must be removed. Manure, water and sunshine must be secured. Some plants require to be fastened to poles. Some will perish if not covered during the heat of the day. In the winter shelter is necessary. The preacher must not be less attentive and careful. Bad gardeners who can see his plants suffer and die without quickly employing means for averting destruction and ensuring life and growth. Some gardeners have no love for their plants. They knock and cut them till they pine away and die. Wonder why such men should want to be gardeners!

A good gardener provides for a good fence, high and close. There are pious gardeners who can not sow and raise a crop of their own, and hence supply themselves from a neighbor's garden. A high fence will shut them out. The fence must be close in order that the little porcupines of worldliness can not enter and create damage. Discipline must be observed, though with great wisdom and unsullied love. A good gardener enlarges, if possible, his garden. This is commendable ambition. Soil which can be acquired must be secured, even though it be not very good. We make it good. Some of our best gardens were at one time barren wastes. Work and manure work wonders. Only nice people you want? Publicans and sinners were welcome to the Lord. He invites the halt and the maimed.

A mural tablet of white marble, two feet square, to the memory of Bishop Paine, with suitable inscriptions, has been placed in Vanderbilt Chapel by the two Mississippi Conferences.

From Arcadia, La.

Last Friday night, at the Baptist Church, Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, of Baton Rouge, the corresponding secretary of the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union, addressed the ladies and gentlemen of Arcadia. Good was done, many signers secured and the rapidly growing prohibition sentiment greatly intensified. Saturday she spoke at Mt. Lebanon, and last night at Gibbsland, and from there she goes to Ringgold, Andraw Chapel, Sparta and Liberty Hill. She is rendering very efficient aid in the effort to win Bienville over to temperance. We were delighted with our visit to the growing town of Gibbsland. Accompanied by that thorough educator and solid Methodist, Prof. R. A. Smith, we entered Gibbsland by buggy, and thus saw the place as it is, stretched about extensively—the most of the town not being discoverable from the railroad. We had no idea that there was so much of it. Its stores, mill, furniture factory, excellent school, new church, comfortable residences, beautiful surrounding country and charming landscapes, and those rich iron deposits within easy reach on the land of Rev. W. P. Kimball and others, and from which they say colossal fortunes are to be realized—all these and the thorough healthfulness of the locality combine to make Bro. Hammett, Eubrey, Pratt and others of the enterprising citizens very hopeful of the town's future. The Methodist Church at Mt. Lebanon was taken down and used in the building of the new church in Gibbsland. Our people there will have a substantial and handsome place of worship when it is painted and steepled. Nearly $125 in subscriptions and cash was taken for foreign missions and church extension, which was certainly a very liberal collection. A Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was organized with a large membership and the following able corps of officers: President, Mrs. Nona LeVina; first vice-president, Miss Lela Washburne; second vice-president, Mrs. Maggie Paruell; recording secretary, Miss M. D. Thomason; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Hattie Lawrence; treasurer, Mrs. A. Blalock; solicitor for Woman's Missionary Advocate, Mrs. Mary A. Pratt.

Bro. A. A. Cornett will organize the sisters at Arcadia and Mt. Moriah. The new church at Arcadia will soon be ready for dedication, and the signs all indicate that the pastor and people of the Arcadia circuit will have a prosperous year, financially and spiritually.

JUNE 22, 1885.

Bishop Hargrove has postponed the time of holding the Pacific Conference from Sept. 30 to Oct. 7.

Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews is conducting the temperance department of the Jackson Clarion, with his well-known ability and vigor.

The new Sunday-school song-book of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to be published in August, is called the Epworth Hymnal.

The University of Alabama has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. Henry Urquhart, of the Alabama Conference.

Infant baptism is not declining very fast, as our immersionist friends are fond of imagining. Dr. J. O. Peck, of New Haven, baptized forty-two children in his church on a recent Sabbath.

Blahop Wilson and family have gone to Asheville, N. C., to remain for some time. We hope he will be allowed to preserve his strength for his fall Conferences.

The South-Western Methodist says a majority of the preachers in the St. Louis Conference received less than $1 a day for service last year. And yet we have heard of no threatened strike among the clergy.

A note from Rev. J. M. Johnston, of the Louisiana Conference, concludes as follows: "The Lord is reviving his work this year on the Sparta circuit. Over twenty have been added to the church up to date."

Preachers are pronounced leaders in moral reform as they should be. At the State Prohibition Convention at Jackson, last week, twenty-one members of the Mississippi Conference and fourteen of the North Mississippi, were present.

There are 170 179 members of the Methodist Church in South Carolina, including both white and colored of the different branches. Of this number the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has 52,170 members and 444 local and traveling preachers.

Rev. Robt. W. MacDonnell and bride passed through the city last week en route to Durango, Mexico. We regret not meeting our valiant young missionaries. There is a great work and an inviting field. May the Lord's blessing attend them.

—Dr. Lafferty has retired from the lecture platform for the heated term. In speaking of a late tour he says: "They netted the church something towards five thousand dollars, and the lecturer scant mileage and much perspiration."

—We are pleased to learn from Rev. R. S. Woodward, of Vicksburg, that his church is enjoying marked prosperity. About forty have been added to the membership and the spiritual tone of the congregation is greatly improved.

—Dr. McNally, the veteran editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, is in Colorado preaching among the churches and writing interesting letters to his paper. He is in demand everywhere. Every letter from the brethren to Pueblo says, "Come and bring Dr. McNally with you."

—Dr. H. W. Thomas, of Chicago, the Methodist preacher who was expelled from the Rock River Conference on account of heresy, has published a letter endorsing Henry Ward Beecher's evolution vagaries. All the worse for Thomas. The truth will not suffer whoever may oppose.

—On account of prostrated health and threatened pulmonary disease, Bro. Mingledorf is compelled to leave China and will soon return to the United States. He made a brave effort to remain in the field, but at length had to yield to the inevitable. We regret the necessity of his return, but trust his place will soon be supplied.

—The first colored Bishop in the Episcopal Church was consecrated June 24, in New York. Rev. Samuel D. Ferguson was made "Bishop of Cape Palmas and parts adjacent." He was born in Charleston, S. C., forty-three years ago, but when six years old was taken with his parents to Liberia. He will sail for his diocese in a week or two.

—The Wesleyan University at Middletown, Ct., has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. Robert Newton Young, professor in the Theological Institution at Birmingham, Eng., and Secretary of the Wesleyan Conference. Mr. Young was a fraternal delegate to the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

—A Kentucky Methodist proposes to give $2,000 of the $4,000 necessary to erect a school building for Rev. A. P. Parker at Soochow, China. We hope the other $2,000 will be speedily forthcoming and the needed edifice go up at once. Bro. Parker is doing a great work and is considered an authority as a Chinese scholar. Bro. Royall says "he is the analogue of this mission."

—The class of 1835 celebrated its semi-centennial at the recent commencement of Wesleyan University, as we learn from the New York Christian Advocate. The class originally consisted of 13 persons, and nine of the original thirteen are still alive. Among those living are Bishop Keener, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Prof. Henry B. Lane and Dr. Benjamin F. Teft, of Maine.

—In a letter to Rev. Wm. Holmes, of Kansas City, Mo., Dr. J. B. McFerrin writes at length on the now much discussed question of changing our church name. The Doctor states fully his attitude to the history of the question, the arguments pro and con, and urges acquiescence in the result, whatever it may be, but fails to give his present opinion. We are left in doubt as to whether he favors or opposes a change.

—The acting rector of St. Peter's (Episcopal) Church in Pueblo, Rev. H. W. Scaife, is a member of the Southern Methodist Church. It is really neighborly to go over and preach for the brethren when they are without a shepherd. But what holy hands would be uplifted if the altar place was so desecrated in the latitude! The unordained are accorded scant courtesy in these parts, though their churches are always acceptable for an episcopal visitation.

—Another meeting of the Protestant ministers of the city was held at the Young Men's Christian Association parlors on Monday last to consider the probable coming of Moody. It is possible that the great evangelist will accept the cordial invitation tendered him and spend the month of November in New Orleans. He was urged to come at that time, to secure a commodious hall for the meetings. We expect Sam Jones in January.

—The removal of Gov. Allen's remains to Baton Rouge on the 10th of July and their reinterment at the capital, was attended with a public demonstration that eloquently called the distinguished virtues of the man and the patriotic tendencies with which his memory is cherished in all the annals of Louisiana. His name has a more conspicuous place

Henry W. Allen. He was the "war governor" of Louisiana, and in that responsible, difficult position, rendered his State a service that can never be forgotten. The review of his life and labors at this time, may stimulate young men to loftier ambitions.

The Colorado Methodist thus speaks of our Methodism in the great West. Surely the Lord is favorable to our Zion. If this passion for souls shall continue to characterize the Methodist ministry, the second century of our American history will be more wonderful than the first: "The revival fires blaze over the land. Not only in the last ten years, but in the churches. Notably in our own Methodism the work has been marvelous, the reports reading like the history of early Methodism; thousands of people have been brought into the fold in a few days and a thousand men at a single service spring to their feet in response to the invitation of the gospel. In the day of his power the 'willing' shall see it. Within our own Conference the year has been unusually blessed in the harvest of souls; some places have been happy to count them by scores, and shall not the coming Conference at Trinidad see our Pentecost from which we are to go out and bring in by hundreds."

Brandon District Conference.

The Brandon District Conference convened at Forest, June 25. The presiding elder, Rev. F. M. Williams, presided. He inquired very gently into the condition of each charge, especially as to its spiritual state. He said a great deal upon the subject of our members holding family prayers, not only at night, but also in the morning; reading the Bible daily and taking our religious papers, especially the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. If these are neglected, there is very poor signs of spiritual vitality. He insisted upon the revival of class meetings. Rev. J. M. Veenus, of Enterprise, was with us on Friday and Saturday. On Saturday Dr. H. F. Johnson and Prof. A. D. McVoy arrived. On the morning of the same day Dr. Johnson made a talk in reference to the PROHIBITION CONVENTION, held at the court house. The convention was well entertained by speeches on prohibition from Dr. Johnson and Prof. A. D. McVoy, for about two hours. After which the convention passed resolutions and elected delegates to the convention to be held at Jackson, July 1.

The Conference met again at half past three. Dr. Johnson and Prof. McVoy gave some timely talks on the subject of education. On Sunday we had a refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Church Extension Notice.

Brethren of North Mississippi Conference will please forward money collected for this purpose as early as possible to Col. R. C. Clarke, treasurer. I am informed that the parent church is in a great strait for money.

THOS. Y. RAMSEY.

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Sr., presiding elder of the Winona district, sends this item of grateful news:

I am happy to inform you that the revival still continues in Winona district. Since I wrote Dickens has been completely reinvigorated. A small place, but nearly everybody in place converted and added to the roll. Spent several days in Carroll last week. While I was there in one day $1,325 were subscribed to build a $2,000 church. Seven hundred dollars were given by one family—you know who. Let the church pray for us.

THE CROSSING; OR, GLIMPSSES INTO THE EARLY DAYS OF METHODISM IN GEORGIA. A Centenary Tribute. By Mrs. C. B. Howell and Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House. Price, 60 cents.

This pleasant little volume is unique in design and full of wholesome instruction. A vast amount of valuable Methodist history is woven into this narrative. From the Epworth rectory in the parish in Savannah the leading men in the life of Mr. Wesley are given, and the influences studied that developed the flower and glory of American Methodism. This volume is a prophecy of larger efforts in the field of authorship.

CENTENARY CARDS. By O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $5.00. This volume is made up of short biographical sketches of forty-one prominent figures in Methodism from the founding down to the present day. In this field of literature Dr. Fitzgerald excels and has done some of his most skillful portrait painting in this volume. Among the latter worthies included are Dr. A. L. P. Green, Judge Edward McGehee and Mrs. Lavinia

Kelley. The book is gotten up in good style, and if widely circulated will become a good Methodist educator.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

Combining IRON with PURE VEGETABLE TONICS, quickly and completely CLEANSSES and ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Quickens the action of the Liver and Kidneys. Clears the complexion, makes the skin smooth. It does not injure the teeth, cause headache, or produce constipation—ALL OTHER IRON MEDICINES DO.

Physicians and Druggists everywhere recommend it.

Dr. N. S. ROGERS, of Marion, Mass., says: "I recommend Brown's Iron Bitters as a valuable tonic for enriching the blood, and removing all dyspeptic symptoms. It does not hurt the teeth."

Dr. R. M. DELLELL, Reynolds, Ind., says: "I have prescribed Brown's Iron Bitters in cases of anemia and blood diseases, also when a tonic was needed, and it has proved thoroughly satisfactory."

Mr. Wm. STINE, 26 St. Mary St., New Orleans, La., says: "Brown's Iron Bitters relieved me in a case of blood poisoning, and I heartily commend it to those needing a purifier."

The Genuine has Trade Mark and crossed red lines on wrapper. Take no imitations. Made only by BROWN CHEMICAL CO., BALTIMORE, MD.

PUBLISHERS' AGENTS.—In order to facilitate the transaction of business with our customers we have arranged with Edwin Alden & Bro., Fifth & Vine Sts., Cincinnati, O., and 140 Nassau St., New York, making them our Special Publishers' Agents, and giving them the entire charge of the foreign advertising patronage of our paper. All communications in relation to this department should be addressed to them.

W. R. STEWART.—In another column will be found the advertisement of Stewart's Acclimated Jersey Stock for sale at farmers' prices. The Ocean Springs Jersey Stock Farm is an established institution, and has advanced steadily simply of a self-earned reputation. For prices and further information address W. R. Stewart, Ocean Springs, Miss., or 55 Carondelet St., New Orleans, La.

A loan exhibition.—The pawn-broker's window.

PEACE INSTITUTE.—Attention is called to the advertisement of this institution which appears in another column. New school in the South offers superior advantages. The large and commodious addition made last summer to the already large and convenient edifice makes it one of the most desirable edifices for school purposes in the South. It is heated by steam and furnished throughout with hot and cold water. By means of telephone in principal office direct connection is had with telegraph system of the country. A large and highly accomplished corps of teachers employed for the next term. The past session was one of unusual prosperity. 218 pupils were matriculated. We would advise all parents looking out for a first-class school for their daughters to correspond with the Principals, Raleigh, N. C.

The enterprising hen now comes up to the scratch.

The University School at Petersburg, Va., of which Capt. W. Gordon McCabe is head master, is already well known in South Carolina and three boys from this State are among the pupils. As a school for boys who expect to take a collegiate course it has no superior in the South, and has very few equals, as shown by the success of the pupils at the different colleges and universities. Besides this, the personal influence of Capt. McCabe is for the most salutary order in forming the character of the pupils and in developing in them a true sense of duty and conduct.

That was a very conscientious humorist who broke off an engagement because his girl had "chestnut" hair.

It is sneezy name to pronounce, thought the Canadian, as he exclaimed: "Baskatchewan."

Their works prove their merits; as for instance, after a quarter of a century of established success, the Esterbrook's Steel Pens, sold everywhere.

"What is an epitaph?" asked a Sunday school teacher of her class. "The wife of an apostle," replied the young hopeful.

If there is life left in the bulbs, Parker's Hair Balsam will promote a new growth of hair. It costs but little to try it.

"Ah! you flatter me," lisped a dupe to a pretty girl with whom he was conversing. "No I don't," was the reply. "You couldn't be any flatterer than you are now."

Rev. A. C. Craun, 222 St. Joseph St., New Orleans, the well-known agent of the Am. Bap. Pub. Society, in a statement dated June 15, '85, says: "I have used the New Testament in my family for chronic catarrh and better. Both were cured. The best constitutional remedy I have seen. It is a better and more reliable than quinine."

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of Stone P. O., Pickens county, Ala., having so often read in the ADVOCATE of the great bargains in places offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, concluded to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having closed the sale for one of those latest, improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $50. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We could request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $100, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein invites all when visiting the city to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pains to show, whether you do not desire to buy. He has the celebrated Mathushek, Behning, Mason & Hamlin and Hale pianos at very low prices and on the easiest terms. Old pianos repaired or taken in exchange for a new one. Good second-hand pianos as low as $50.

ASKING.

BY MISS T. R. DAYTON.
"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?"

Give to me, for Jesus said,
That a father gives his children bread,
And how much more shall he give us the Holy Spirit,
If we ask him, give it to me!

Give to me, for Jesus said,
That a father gives his children bread,
And how much more shall he give us the Holy Spirit,
If we ask him, give it to me!

Give to me, for Jesus said,
That a father gives his children bread,
And how much more shall he give us the Holy Spirit,
If we ask him, give it to me!

Give to me, for Jesus said,
That a father gives his children bread,
And how much more shall he give us the Holy Spirit,
If we ask him, give it to me!

Training Young Converts.

MR. EDITOR: We are having extraordinary revivals of religion in many parts of our church, and in every number of our weekly Advocate we have sundry exhortations to the young converts to the training of the young converts. We have a large number of our numerical gains, but we are told to be diligent just how this training is to be done. It is true we are told to take the young converts by the hand, treat them cordially, guard them against anything wrong in their tempers, words or actions, solve their difficulties on points of doctrine and experience and encourage them to use all the private and public means of grace. This is all well enough as far as it goes, but we wish them to be thrifty Christians and become useful in all the relations of Christian life. This is but a small beginning in training them up to usefulness in the church. We must put them every one to work in the Lord's harvest field according to their age and general ability, leaving them to find that we are not to require babes in Christ to do the work of experienced men and women in the church. But we must immediately give them something to do in order to draw out and develop the talents God has given them. If they are heads of families, encourage them to establish regular evening and morning prayers in their families. If they are the children of praying parents, encourage them to take part in leading the family prayer occasionally. Plan to get them into select prayer meetings, where they will not feel much embarrassed to be called on to lead in prayer. After they get well started in oral prayer, as a general rule, they will find it a precious means of grace and take pleasure in it ever afterwards. But how shall we as a church have lost the art of training our young converts to pray in public until, in some places, where we have from fifty to two hundred members we are not able to keep up a respectable weekly prayer meeting for the want of members to lead in prayer. This ought not to be. But alas for us! We have raised up a vast generation of dumb Methodist men and women who can utter a sentence of oral prayer, not even their own dear children. It is supposed they pray in secret, but no one except God ever hears a word of prayer uttered by them. While our church is increasing in material and numerical strength every day we have lost an incalculable amount of spiritual power right here. By our neglect in training our young converts to pray in public, praying men and women, ever ready to assist their pastor in carrying on the work of the Lord, have become very scarce in many places. The pastor preaches an awakening sermon; the hearts of the people are melted and he invites the penitents to the altar, promising them an interest in the prayers of the church, but when he looks round for some one to lead in an appropriate prayer for the mourners he finds no one. Thirty or forty years ago he could have found several, many of whom could pray on a par with their pastors, but they are gone to the church triumphant and but few have arisen to take their places.

MR. EDITOR, may I tell you how the Methodists did things when I joined the church in the fall of 1821? The church, consisting of about a dozen white members and several colored, had lately been organized in a new settlement. The day I joined the members appointed a laymen's prayer meeting to meet once a week to pray for a revival in our rather numerous new settlement, which they kept up faithfully until the opening of the next spring when there was a general awakening on the subject of religion. The laymen's prayer meeting increased rapidly in numbers and interest until one Sabbath afternoon we had a Pentecost that resulted in the conversion of thirty persons by ten P. M. that night. The work went on managed generally only by laymen until our little church had increased fourfold in a short time. Our few old members had been well trained, and they knew how to train our young converts. Our class leader said he wished all the members, including the boys, to meet next Sunday morning at Dr. Minter's, at eight o'clock, when the object of the meeting would be made known. As soon as we had assembled, the house being on a public road, the front door was securely closed and our leader informed us that the object of the meeting was to give the young members a start in public prayer; that he wished us to unite with him in singing a hymn between each prayer and he would call on each of us to pray which he hoped we would try to do; none were present to criticize; the old members had been all along there and knew how to sympathize with new beginners. The meeting commenced; we all tried to pray; some prayers only about an inch long, but we all felt better for having broke the ice. It was at least a beginning. After training us here a few weeks we got the scare off and our leader began to call on us in the general prayer meeting. The women and girls received a similar training under that saintly woman known as Cane Ridge as Aunt Abbie Scott. The result of this judicious and faithful training was soon had out of the most praying churches I have ever known and most of them were faithful unto death. Many of their descendants are yet in the church of their choice and quite a number have been and are yet in the ministry of the same church. Have said enough for this week.

Greenville District Conference.

Our Conference met July 2, at Friar's Point, Miss. There being no Bishop present, our young (new) presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Honnold, presided, and at once showed himself master of the situation. The attendance in one respect was good. All the traveling preachers being present but one, and he was detained by sickness. There were, however, but three laymen present, and two of them are residents of the town in which the Conference was held. All the reports were encouraging, showing a revival spirit all over the district. In some charges revival meetings have been held with the most gratifying results.

Many souls have been saved from sin and added to the church. At other points plans are maturing to push the battle to the gates and lay siege to the strong holds of sin.

Our preachers are being well supported. In almost every charge the full amount assessed for this purpose will be paid. Of the Conference claims, the Bishops and Widows' and Orphans' Funds are in most favor and will be paid.

We have more and better Sunday-schools than ever before, and the outlook from them promises much good. The prospect of a large crop of cotton and corn has stimulated our people to repair their parsonages and churches, and in some places to talk favorably of building new ones. There is in fact a general moving up on all these interests. One thing I noticed with great pleasure—our preachers are taking solid ground and making a firm stand against the whisky traffic. They seem to be waking up to the fact that if our country is ever freed from this monster evil—intemperance—the industry must take up arms and become leaders in the conflict. There is a growing sentiment in favor of prohibition, especially among the colored Methodists. In some places our preachers have organized them and they are earnestly at work to effect that end. We think ourselves safe in expressing the opinion that a majority of the colored people of this district would now vote for prohibition.

In your rounds, Mr. Editor, you should visit us and see one of the richest and best countries on earth. The Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad runs through the heart of this district, opening up avenues of trade, furnishing markets for our produce, facilities for travel, etc., and giving a spirit of enterprise and improvement to our people.

We were glad to have among us Dr. J. W. Cunningham, of St. Louis, and Prof. Williams, of McTyeire Institute, who, by their genial spirits, words of wisdom and eloquence, delighted us all and completely won our hearts. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE meets with favor among us. The next session of the Conference is to be held at Rosedale.

Short Articles.

BY T. A. S. A.

"Going about to establish their own righteousness" was more than a mistake of the Jews. It was a great sin for two most potent reasons: 1. It was a very dubious proposition at best. How came they to have "their own?" and if they felt that what they had was righteousness, whence and what was the rule by which they measured? But granting theirs to be a true righteousness, it must have been exceedingly limited both as to grade and quantity, since human perfection is necessarily narrow. 2. They were busy about this low and inconsistent quantity to the exclusion of the infinitely higher study of the perfection of God. The superior ought never to be crowded out by the inferior.

But there seems to me a pertinency in these reflections to what is transpiring in many places and among many Christians at the present. Not to speak to the merits of the cases named, I wish to mention for illustration one or two: The Nashville liquor traffic as arraigned by Sam Jones and Dr. McFerrin as arraigned by Sam Cherry, and defended by Dr. Rush. I rise to several points:

1. Sam Jones' charges were either true or false. If true, the best thing to be done is to repent. If false, we had better quit talking about the False Prophet in Soudan and talk about the Georgia false prophet. Take either horn of the dilemma.
2. The business of whitewashing is not commendable, and the business of washing dirty linen in the front yard is detestable. To do it under necessity demands apology; to make a habit of it creates a nuisance.
3. When our dignitaries in the pulpits, in the schools and on the tripod begin to inspire telegrams, write pamphlets, or print long articles in our papers giving ex parte versions of personal or communal matters, it is time to call to them to let their own righteousness alone.

4. The secular press cares nothing morally for these matters. They are printed as so much news or gossip and for their social or political significance. No church that refuses to affect the airs of the world in some of its circles ever gets its squabbles into print.

5. The devil smiles complacently over every demonstration that establishes individual or church self-righteousness.

Dr. Potter, of Georgia, calls for "More Light" as to Dr. Shipp's statement that Bishop McTyeire sent for him at the General Conference of 1882 to offer him (Dr. S.) the book editorship. This, the Bishop informed him, was the wish of the college of Bishops and of the Book Committee.

I echo Dr. Potter's call; but not as to the merits of Dr. Shipp's controversy with the Bishop. I agree with him that all that ought to have been kept out of the papers. But I want to know, 1. Can Dr. Shipp clearly establish the fact that this interview took place at the time, in the way and for the purpose alleged? 2. What is the law and who are the electors and what the method of making book editors and other General Conference officers? 3. Suppose Dr. Shipp had consented, would he have been elected, and if elected, would he have given the public this moroseau?

I have all along been innocent enough to believe that elections of this sort took place in open General Conference, after solemn prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit and not after caucusing of Book Committees and Bishops and Conferences, or interviews with heavy men whom it is desirable to unload from one place to another. This looks too much like political jugglery, and if Dr. Potter calls "More Light," I second the motion.

A Dedication Sermon.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sabbath, July 5, I had the pleasure of dedicating a new church at Bastrop, La. I made the trip to Bastrop—two hundred and twenty miles by rail and twenty-eight by stage—in less than twenty-two hours. All along the route I was delighted with the crop prospect. From my home in the extreme part of Mississippi to Bastrop, which is within twenty miles of the Arkansas line, the crops, wherever they have been properly cultivated, are good in the superlative degree. Unless storms or worms or some such disaster should interfere, there will be a more bountiful harvest than for years past. In the vicinity of Monroe the magnificence of agricultural scenery is such as almost to make one envious of the tiller of the soil.

My home during my sojourn in Bastrop was with Hon. C. Newton, to whom, and to his excellent wife, I am under many obligations for their generous, warm-hearted hospitality.

The new church is a gem of its kind. It is an ornament to the town and an honor to the denomination it represents. It is a brick Gothic edifice, modern in all its appointments and exceedingly beautiful in its interior arrangements and decorations. May the diligent, irrepressible Sawyer live to dot "the Pelican State" thickly with similar structures.

Entering this beautiful temple on Sabbath morning, one did not need to be told that woman's presence had preceded him. Her handiwork was apparent everywhere. Arches, altar railing, communion table, pulpit and pulpit platform were most profusely, elaborately and tastefully decorated with evergreens and flowers of almost every hue and variety. The congregation was immense. All available space was utilized. Chairs were in the aisles. Window-sills were transformed into pews. Even the pulpit steps were crowded. And even after all this crowding some had to hear from the outside. The audience was promiscuous, embracing all creeds and those of no creed, and yet there was no disorder. For sixty minutes there was close attention to the preaching of the word. After the sermon the house was presented by the Board of Trustees free from debt and was dedicated according to disciplinary form. Several brethren participated in the service, viz.: R. Randle, R. S. Isbell and William Hart. The music was artistic and appropriate to the occasion. The wide-awake pastor, Rev. J. A. Parker, wisely decided to follow the dedicatory service with at least a week of revival services. He will be assisted by Bro. Coney, and, perhaps, others. Our people in Bastrop are commendably proud of their new and tasteful house of worship. The outlook for Methodism in that field is, I think, decidedly hopeful. Yours, W. C. BLACK.

From Arcadia, La.

Just back from Lisbon and Colquitt; our second round has been completed. In the morning we start on the third, or camp and protracted meeting, round. On the Homer and Haynesville circuits we found the work moving on well and Bros. Medlock and Miller very hopeful. The Sunday-schools are particularly thriving, an additional and mission school having been organized near Homer and the New Salem Sunday-school Bible class of twenty-nine members being one of the best in the bounds of the district and possibly of the entire Conference. We discovered some missionary spirit at work and readily organized two societies, the sisters and brethren taking hold with real heartiness.

The officers of the Lisbon Women's Foreign Missionary Society are as follows:

President, Mrs. M. A. Dawson; first vice-president, Mrs. Lottie Meadows; second vice-president, Miss M. L. Duke; recording secretary, Miss Nettie McClendon; corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. F. Boykin; treasurer, Mrs. J. C. Kimball; solicitor for Women's Missionary Advocate, Mrs. M. F. Boykin; delegate to Minden annual meeting of Conference society, Miss Nettie McClendon.

The officers of the Colquitt Women's Foreign Missionary Society are as follows:

President, Mrs. L. J. Tigner; first vice-president, Mrs. Ola Boone; second vice-president, Mrs. M. E. Spears; recording secretary, Mrs. Marie Wilson; corresponding secretary, Miss Mattie Greer; treasurer, Miss Nannie Palmer; solicitor for Women's Missionary Advocate, Miss Annie Harrison; delegate to Minden, Miss Mattie Greer.

The brethren will organize soon at the other points on their works. The temperance cause is strong and growing stronger in Claiborne. The ladies are becoming thoroughly interested. We had the pleasure of addressing them at the Lisbon Church on Sunday afternoon. With Sister Boykin as their president and leader, the Lisbon Woman's Christian Temperance Union is sure to do a grand work for prohibition in the approaching struggle.

You have an immense number of admirers, Mr. Editor, in the Lisbon neighborhood as is the case all over our district. "Will Dr. Galloway be at the District Conference?" is a question often asked. The hold you have for great good on these North Louisiana people must be tightened, dear brother, by your bodily presence and abounding labors at Roston, the last of August. The Homer district invites you. Please come.

JULY 2, 1885.

We spent "the glorious fourth" with Bro. Godfrey at Bethel, on the Indian Village circuit. Notwithstanding the Barbecue at Focksville, we had a good attendance at preaching on Saturday and Sunday. There is evident improvement in that very hard circuit and the people are awakening to the necessity of making greater efforts in the cause of their Master. We were particularly delighted at the revival of the Sunday-school interest, there being now three or four schools in successful operation, whereas none are reported in the Minutes for last year. All the church seem to go to school and official members like Bros. Patrick, Shepherd and Steagall attend the classes, preparing and reciting their lessons like the boys and girls. Some in the seventies and beyond attend as scholars, and, I believe, Grandmother Jones, now in her eighty-sixth year, is a pupil. All this is just as it should be. There is great loss to the church when the fathers and mothers from age or other reason neglect to attend the Sabbath-school. That is a model school, be it in country, town or city, where all the church regularly attend and each member is either an officer, teacher or scholar. If the nearly 4,000 members of the Methodist Church on the Homer district would regularly attend Sabbath-school and study and practice their lessons, they would learn much of value from the dear old Book, and their spirituality and usefulness would be wonderfully increased. Alas! that the word of God is so little read at Sunday-school or elsewhere. Let the grown-up folks go to the Sabbath-school and let old and young, as children, delight themselves in the Holy Scriptures.

Persecutions in Brazil.

In a letter to the Holston Methodist Rev. James L. Kennedy, one of our missionaries, gives a graphic description of some missionary experiences. Writing from Juiz De Fora, he says:

I resume my pen again. A pen picture of last night's service. The benches were all pretty well filled. At the close of the first prayer, there entered a negro padeiro (priest,) with a white gentleman. The color line is not as clearly defined here as it is in the United States of America. The said priest seemed so nearly intoxicated that he could hardly stand up. He managed to sit down. As soon as I began my sermon, he looked at me as if I were a Catholic or no. I immediately responded I was not.

My subject was Romans v. 1. In a short time he cried out: "I contest that!" I paid no attention to him; but he persisted in speaking and in such a boisterous and angry tone, that before long three or four gentlemen of the congregation arose and told the priest that he must either behave himself or retire. He chose to retire, and for over thirty minutes I addressed a most attentive congregation; but one having retired with the padeiro.

But like the tide ebbs and flows, there are changes in men's life. Tonight at our worship a very different scene presented itself. Having entered into my sermon for near ten or fifteen minutes to a congregation better than the one last night in some respects, all of a sudden stepped in the same priest that we required to retire last night; but this time under different circumstances. Now he comes with his priestly robe and hat, not even removing the latter from his head—a great work of disrespect to us. Last night he appeared in citizens clothing. Now he seemed less under the influence of whisky and to move with "mailee, preposse and aforethought." Last night he had one companion; now he is accompanied with a perfect rabble of dirty, working blacks; some of them were looking creatures. Everyone took this as an evil omen, so much so that a number of ladies retired, that they might not be involved. I kept the priest, rabble and all at bay for some five or six minutes longer; but his reverence could not stand it; so he got up and went out to investigate his followers. At any rate, whistling and interruptions immediately ensued. I persevered; but at last, finding my congregation so disturbed and so disintegrated, I brought my remarks to a close; the hearers were dismissed. No sooner had the hearers part the threshold than a volley of sticks and stones, etc., came pouring in. We simply stood from without the line of the corridor and thus, though some of us barely escaped, no one was at all injured. In a few minutes, we having not yet closed the doors, in came a large number of people who apologized for such nonconduct, saying that my wrongs would be redressed and that it was only a rabble of vagabonds that perpetrated the insult, and that such would not be repeated. So now we are all, myself, wife, two helpers, a servant and her little grandchild, quietly resting in our home, ready to soon retire to the land of dreams. Out of this evil, God will work much good and His will be done! Amen! We will see what follows. Good night.

The Church—No. 3.

"Beyond my highest joy
I prize his heavenly word."
I love the church which I look back upon this river of life, which she pours down along the stream of time from the hour when "God created man in his own image" to the year of our Lord, 1885, and especially for the "lights along the shore, that never grow dim."

There was Adam made in the image of his Maker. How I would like to have seen him and Eve as they fell!
I have stood and looked for hours at the fall of Adam and Eve, and at the happy pair after their fall, and at the unhappy couple after they were driven out of Paradise, and I may never forget the swelling tears that filled the eyes of Eve as she, reclining, looked up to Adam as he cowered before the vivid lightning flashed from the lowering sky down among the trees of that dark outside world; but Adam and Eve before the fall did not come up to my ideal of man made in the image of God and not yet sullied by sin.

And then there was Abel, the first martyr, and Abraham, after whom all of the faithful are named, and whose children they are. And then, further down Moses, the old prophets, the great prophets and the minor prophets;
and John the Baptist and John the Evangelist, and there between the two Jesus, the most perfect specimen of humanity that ever graced the earth, and our "God, manifest in the flesh,"
our Savior.

I wanted to speak of Noah and Enoch, who walked with God three hundred years, and Job, a man who was "a perfect and an upright man," and a multitude of others. And now I behold an Israelite in deed, in whom there is no guile," Nathaniel; and Paul, the great apostle to the gentiles, and all the apostles; the fathers; then Martin Luther and Melancthon, Calvin and Zwingli, Wesley and Fletcher; and then millions more of the clergy and laity who have adorned the world, blessed humankind and gone home to swell the number of that innumerable host around the throne. The church has a good record. "But some of these men were great sinners," says the opponent of Christianity. Yes, all of them were sinners; but they were "sinners saved by grace." The wonder is what grace can do for a man. Take David. He was a great sinner; but he was a great penitent. Hear him confessing, repenting and asking for pardon: "My sin is ever before me."
"Have mercy upon me, O God!" God had mercy upon him, and he mentions it a thousand times. Hear him: "His mercy endureth forever." This was the chorus of nearly all his songs, and the body of some of them; and he became a man after "God's own heart."
Human nature being what it is, the wonder is what grace can do for a man.
What a king he was, what a warrior he was and what a sinner he was!

I love the church for her love: her love for her own—her children, her companions, her fathers and her mothers. "Yes," the opposer may quote;
"the world will love its own." But I love her because she goes beyond this.
She loves sinners—sinners for whom Christ died. That was love that died for us, and the church has love like his that died for sinners. See her missionaries. They visit every clime; they visit every continent, and every corner of every country. In doing this they ride every wave, they have every tempest, they land on every shore, they traverse every plain, they climb every mountain, they find every palace and every cabin, they find the heart of every country, and they are finding the hearts of the people; and the time is hastening when nobody living shall be able to say, "Nobody ever told me before."

Expatriating themselves, these missionaries die on the ocean and are buried in the deep, as was our Bishop Coke. They die in jungles, in the swamps, in the valleys and on the mountains among the heathen, away from home and friends. And what last that sends them? It is love, the love of God—a love that works out all selfishness.

But one says: "Yes; but church at home. How about it?" Well, the church at home prays and she gives.
She furnishes the "sinews" of this war.
She gives the money that mans every missionary station or ship that sails over this sin-cursed ocean for the purpose of rescuing shipwrecked mariners stranded by sin along life's coast. The church gives without taxation, gives liberally now, and she will furnish the means for the cultivation of all of this green earth. See, then, her temples at home. See the ministry she sustains. See the millions of Bibles that she scatters and billions of religious newspapers and tracts that flutter now in all the winds of heaven. We might go on to enumerate: Her schools, her colleges, her asylums, etc.; but has not enough been said to establish the fact that she is a cheerful giver? And who does not love a cheerful giver?

"Onward, onward, men of Heaven,
Bear the gospel banner high;
Rest not till the light is given—Star of every pagan sky."

LOCAL ITINERANT.

An Open Letter to Hon. A. A. Gunby.

HON. AND DEAR SIR: It was with mingled pleasure that I, as well as others of your auditors, listened to your eloquent address on "Justice" delivered before and to the graduating class of Menden Female College, Thursday, June 18. I use the limiting term, "mingled," intentionally to express the fact that while some of your positions were well taken, and many of your statements alarmingly true, yet the pleasure of the occasion was considerably marred to many of us either because we failed to comprehend the full import of your position, or, which seems nearer the truth, because that position appeared untenable and incapable of satisfactory support by a superior quantity or quality of logical proof.

If I did not misunderstand your meaning, you affirmed on the occasion above referred to that all virtue and all vice (terms usually attendant for holiness and sin) receive their just and adequate deserts in this life, as a rule, and hence that, on the whole, men everywhere receive just what they deserve neither more nor less of blessing or cursing on earth. If this be a correct statement of your position, then I beg leave to join issue with you.
That it is true in all I most readily admit; that it is the whole truth about the matter I am not so sure. At least the proofs, or the attempted proofs, which you advanced in support of it did not carry the force of a rational demonstration to my mind and was, therefore, unsatisfactory.

In the absence of a special definition of terms on your part, I understood you to use the words, "virtue" and
"vice," as covering the whole ground of right or wrong-doing as related both to man and God, although this latter personage, together with our relationship to him, were not directly mentioned or even alluded to in your address. If this surmise be correct, then we occupy common ground. But to the proposition that all such conduct both good or bad, that the virtue and vicious are so adequately rewarded in this life as to receive a full and adequate return—an equitable quid pro quo for all the good and wrong done to this I say I am compelled to enter a positive demurrer, and must continue to do so until convinced of its correctness by such a process of logical reasoning as will leave no rational doubt concerning it.

I willingly concede the fact that there is a common belief in mankind as to the justice of justice, if I may so speak, and that men ought to receive what they deserve whether they do or not. This sentiment is found running through all the fictitious literature of the age, is projected into all music of political or national character and is embodied in the famous dramas of modern times; so that mankind are plainly pronounced in their belief as to what the virtuous and the virtuous deserve and ought to receive. I am willing to concede also that in a very important sense men are what they make themselves; that we suffer because of our vices and follies; that in the large majority of cases we could better our conditions if we would; that to a certain extent, perhaps greater than superficial minds are willing to admit, that "virtue is its own reward," and vice its own punishment; that the natural tendency of virtue, or obedience to the laws of God as related both to himself and to man, is toward happiness, and the natural tendency of vice is to produce misery; that poverty, disease and shame are to a very large extent the penalty of that natural law of retribution which dooms the sluggard and spendthrift to poverty, and the transgressor of nature's laws to disease, disgrace and death; and, lastly, I concede that conscience often becomes witness, judge and executioner to the guilty soul, and amites the offender with terror and remorse. To all this I can and do heartily subscribe. But that vice especially—not to mention virtue—meets with its full and adequate deserts in this life both in kind and in quantity, which must be the case if your position be correct, I do not believe, although I am open to such belief on the presentation of proper and sufficient evidence.
Can you produce such evidence?

(1) After a careful and impartial survey of the world about you, going through all the walks of life, and taking in as far as possible all the facts of human experience, are you prepared to say and are you prepared to show that there is an equal, adequate and just distribution of rewards and punishments meted out to the various classes and individuals of human kind; so that each one gets his just deserts, whether of good or evil? And if so (2), are you prepared to show the modus operandi by which such balancing and squaring up of accounts is so effectively and equitably accomplished as to meet all the demands of a government administered with unerring accuracy along the line of pure and unswerving justice? These two points will abate cover the ground occupied in your eloquent address of the eighteenth instant.

And now, with great confidence in your acknowledged ability to make out whatever you should take in hand, and with equal confidence in your fairness and sincerity to abandon an untenable position whenever the balance of proof points in that direction, you are affectionately invited to enter the arena of friendly controversy, strictly confining your remarks to the essence of your late heccelebrated as pointed out in the two interrogatories above propounded. Hoping that the important question at issue will receive your immediate attention, I remain, Yours very truly,

JAS. J. HILLINOSLEY.

When Does Judgment Day Come?

In the ADVOCATE, of June 4, I find an article on the above theme, over the signature of G. E. Green, in which he uses the strong language,
"That people, and especially ministers of the gospel, use hackneyed phrases that have little, if any, foundation in truth in talking and writing about the final judgment day."

I gather from his article that in his opinion everyone is judged as he dies and sent to his reward. Therefore there is no necessity for a general judgment. To have a judgment there must be a judge as well as subjects.
The Scriptures teach that Christ is to be the judge. He is now Mediator.
He will not likely fill both offices at the same time. "God hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom he hath ordained: whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead." Again: "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment." Some misinterpret the text, and say the judgment is after the appointment, and not after death, and say the judgment takes place at death, and not after death; but the text reads that they are to be judged "after death."

There will be a judgment so sure as Jesus was raised from the dead. The truth and justice of God are pledged in the declaration, and all will be present, both small and great, as is set forth in Revelation xx, 11-15. Hear:

"And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them."

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works."

"And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."

"And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

The resurrection of the body must precede the judgment, for it is so recorded in the above Scripture. Not only are we assured as to the certainty of the judgment; but the dead, small and great, are to be present and judged in righteousness. Justice will be meted out to everyone.

The judgment is not so much to assign to each one his place as it is to award to each his just due, as well as to vindicate the sayings and doings of the divine Law Giver and Judge before the congregated intelligences of heaven, earth and hell. "The angels who kept their first estate, but left their own habitations, he has reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto judgment of the great day."

In Matthew xxv we have a description of the judgment. Hear:

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."

"And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."

"And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left."

"Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink."

"This kingdom was awarded to them for their good deeds."

"Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels: for I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat:
I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink."

This condition was awarded to the wicked because of their neglect to perform good deeds.

Therefore, as the awards are made in the presence of the congregated intelligences of heaven, earth and hell, the character of the divine Law Giver and Judge will be vindicated, and it will be shown that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him, and that he doeth
all things well.

One more text in proof of a general judgment: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Many other passages of Scripture might be introduced to prove that there will be a general judgment.

To deny that there will be a general judgment is to set aside what appears to me plain passages of Scripture on the subject. One reason why men can not consent to a general judgment is because they can not see, if union when they die go directly to heaven or hell, that there is any use for a judgment. They forget that each person, like Judas and the rich Pharisee, goes to his own place; that the judgment is not to assign men to a place, but to award each his due according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or bad. There can be no necessity for paradise nor purgatory.
If there were such places, the same difficulty would exist. The soul would have to leave them, reanimate the body and appear before the Judge and give an account for the deeds done in the body. Therefore I can see no necessity for "purgatory or the river of Styx."

I wish to call attention to the closing paragraph. The writer says, "In the parable of the ten talents there is this emphatic language, 'Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'" The writer would induce us to believe this was said to the party at death, which I believe is a mistake. It was said to the party when the master returned from a far country. The master was traveling into a far country to obtain a kingdom. Does it not refer to the Son of man going to enter upon his mediatorial kingdom, and after a long time, when he had surrendered it to the Father, he returned to have a reckoning with those servants—to judge the world? To those who had done well he said: Well done, good and faithful servants; enter ye into the joy of thy Lord. He said of him who hid his Lord's money and neglected to improve the grace given and the opportunities afforded him: Take, therefore, the talent from him and cast the unprofitable servant into outer darkness.

This, I think, is positive evidence of the general judgment, as it occurred long after the money was given to the servants and after the return of the Master.

Temperance and Education.

At the fifteenth session of the Sardis District Conference, of the North Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in the Methodist Church, in the town of Sardis, Miss., June 4-6, 1885, the following report on temperance and education and resolution on education were adopted.

We, the committee to whom the subject of temperance has been referred, deem it unnecessary to consume the time of this body with a very lengthy report upon a subject which has been so often and in so many ways brought before the public mind.

The necessity, safety and beauty of temperance are as visible in the moral world as the sun in the natural world—made so if in no other way by the mighty depths of degradation and ruin into which the victims of intemperance are daily plunged. Men may exaggerate upon other themes, but to over-draw the evils of the sale and use of intoxicating drinks is an impossibility.
This is the curse of all curses, because it reaches and destroys more of our race than any and all things else.

Under its universal sweep and merciless tread the innocent suffer with the guilty. No one can truthfully say of this enemy, "You let it alone and it will let you alone." The little child thrown from the window by her drunken father to be crushed to pieces upon the rocks below was letting the accursed stuff alone, yet its heartless hands were laid upon her. Many wives and mothers in the world to-day whose constant prayers to God have been for temperate, happy families;
but upon their faces we see marked signs of disappointment and despair brought about by the frequent return of bloating husbands and staggering sons.

We think the time has come for less resolving and whereupon upon this matter and more brave, faithful fighting. We find in the Bible a book of the acts of the apostles; but no book of mere resolutions. Therefore we offer for the consideration of this District Conference the following items:

1. That all faithful movements in this cause, of whatever name, have accomplished good and assisted in bringing us towards the light and glory of the long prayed-for day when the temperance banner shall wave over every home and land.

2. That all honorable means, whether moral suasion or the strong arm of the law, be resorted to, and after long experience we are convinced both are necessary.

3. That we rejoice over the rapidly increasing temperance sentiment, especially in the last few years, in many sections where King Alcohol reigned—producing lawlessness and bloodshed, its characteristic troubles, not a drop of the pernicious fluid is now sold; but songs of sobriety, peace and harmony fill the air.

4. That this improved state of things has been brought about by the faithful efforts of the Christian people of our country under deep conviction of the fact that the whisky traffic is the greatest enemy in the world.

And no man can enjoy religion or consistently profess to possess its cleansing and elevating power who drinks it as a beverage, or in any possible way, or to any possible extent give countenance to it. Whisky selling tempts men to tipping, and tipping to drunkenness, and drunkenness to nine-tenths of the crimes that blacken and stain this world. Every whisky seller is dependent in part for the establishment and success of his business upon church members, and, as his business makes drunkards, every one signing his petitions or buying his drugs adopts him as his agent in the production of drunkards and crime.

5. That we preachers and Christian people, the white and black population, take temperance, preach temperance,
pray it, live it and sing it.

E. B. RAMSEY,

S. M. HALL,

J. M. WYATT,

Committee.

Whereas, We are strong believers in education, and especially in education under the auspices of the Christian religion; and inasmuch as we have no school in Sardis district, under the patronage of the church, and cherishing a deep interest in the collegiate institute at Grenada under the presidency of Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M.,

Resolved, That we labor constantly and zealously to awaken a much greater interest throughout the bounds of Sardis district in behalf of this school; and that we recommend the collegiate institute at Grenada to parents and guardians who have children to educate abroad, as worthy of their confidence and patronage.

J. M. WYATT,

E. B. RAMSEY,

T. C. WICK.

On motion, the secretary was directed to furnish a copy of the above preamble and resolution to the New Or-LEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and all papers published within the bounds of the Sardis district, of the North Mississippi Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with request to publish the same.

A Flower on the Grave of Little Lizzie Goodwyn.

The following is a tribute to the dear and only daughter of the late Rev.
Philo M. Goodwyn, who died three months ago, and is published as a gratification to the bereaved mother:

There is probably as much difference between the lowest of the human race and the highest as there is between the latter and the angels on high. Differences are rated in early life. Some children seem horn depraved, and the degree of their depravity is often shocking. On the other hand, some children are endowed with an elevated and refined nature which time and opportunity develop and make more beautiful. Among the latter was Lizzie Goodwyn, whom the writer used to call his "little pet."

Her natural sense, though she was but twelve years old, was superior to that of many grown persons. It was impossible not to perceive in her the natural beauty and delicacy of her mind and heart.
With the simplicity and artlessness of childhood she united the grace and romance, taste and prudence of a horn lady. Naturally she was a lover of flowers and of all things pure and best. Obedient and affectionate, and always on the alert to anticipate the wants of others, it is not strange that she should have been the light of the household and the darling of her mother. Ah,

"Brightly, brightly hast thou fled,
Ere one grief had bowed thy head,
Brightly didst thou part,
With thy young heart pure from spot,
With thy pure love as old,
With thy bounding heart."

"Thou hast gone home, gone home, Thou hast no tear again to shed."

I do not think she was conscious of any dread as the earthly close came.
She seemed to be looking up, and seeing a multitude of people, "so many,"
and among others her glorified father, whom she repeatedly called. I doubt not the room was full of the celestial choir come to escort her to the land where there is no blight.

"And we shall find her there with Seraphs of light, of richer hue than the moon sheds."

I doubt not flooded her immortal spirit and made its pathway luminous.

"Beyond the stars of God,
To the splendors infinite and broad,
Where the 'pure in heart' shall rest with God,"
"Ear has not heard his deep songs of joy, Dreams can not picture a world so fair,
Sorrow and death may not enter there."

She has left us at the dawn of life, ere its burdens and its disappointments, its heart sickness and often its grim terrors come to usker it a bitter thing.
From her memory "there is born a soft light pointing to celestial morn," which shall arise over the night of the grave and which should wipe away all tears from our eyes. She is "Beyond the weeping and the sighing" of earth's mortals in the land where flowers never fade, where rainbows are forever bright, where the songs of paradise never cease, where the inhabitants shall never say, "I am sick," and where children never die. She is safe in the bosom of her Savior and her God.

From "Invalid."

Mr. Editor: Believing that you have the mind, heart and spirit to "rejoice with those that do rejoice," especially with those whose souls have been given for your "hire," I write this—the bearer of "good tidings of great joy," (which I hope "will be to the people,"—that you may rejoice with the people of your first pastorate.)
While we have long been hearing of "showers of blessings" falling around and beyond us, few indeed have been the drops that have fallen upon the "dry and thirsty land," such as revivals, class and prayer meetings, missionary societies, temperance and prohibition organizations. Like the arid view from Mt. Carmel's burning barren height, veiled by no cloud from the scorching beams of the fiery "sun of day" refreshed by no dew like that on Herman's fevered brow, unrelieved by the plying tears of the celestials—
"angels—dewy indeed was the con-look through the vista of the intervening years since we, the inhabitants of this "waste place"—of this "barren immoral vineyard"—have been blessed with "refreshings from the presence of the Lord" until the "waste has become, "It is time, O Lord, to thee to work." At last, as we cling the frayed margin of a very "forty hope," we catch the echo of a cry—

"word of the nation—prohibition,"
"thank God and take courage."

"cloud," which at first was no larger than "a man's hand," has gathered in volume, until we, too, behold a glimmer of "the bright light" shining through its rifts, and, like Israel's nighted hosts, we are ready to follow this "presence," which, to the resulting oppressors, anti-prohibitionists is indeed a cloud as was Israel's guide to Pharaoh's mighty hosts. Alas! the cruel Egyptians they are in danger of becoming engulfed, overwhelmed in the Red sea of intoxicants.

But to return to the subject, which at present agitates and enthuses the people everywhere, prohibition, until it has reached even this isolated and hitherto indifferent "rural district," last night, Sabbath, June 28, at our rural "meeting-house," i. e., where the people meet for various purpoes, (O un consecrated, desecrated spot, not set apart for sacred purposes alone) teaching, speaking, "debating and political societies, etc., the people assembled to hear, for the first time,
"within those sacred (?) walls," the subject of prohibition discussed by one of its most zealous, enthusiastic and gifted advocates, Mr. D. C. B.

baugh, of Smith county, but more cently from Harpersville College, in Alabama, en route to Jackson, Miss., as a representative of the Intelligent and effective "Harpersville Prohibition Club." "He came," he spoke,
"conquered," and met the results of heroic effort to "rescue the perishing by proclaiming 'the gospel of temperance' and holding aloft the banner of prohibition, so that a 'club' was organized at 'Lone Pine,' entitled about fifty members, and electing delegates to attend the convention
Jackson, July 1—Rev. J. S. Park
Memor, George H. Galloway and J.
Beebe.

As "little drops of water" "in the mighty ocean," so every word act advocating the cause of prohibition will swell the tide that is destined sweep from our land the greatest evil the cause which is worse than all plagues of Egypt combined—monarch whose cruel scepter is exercising the nations, which is ultimately to be dethroned by the "conquering heroes" of prohibition who are waring "the holy war" against "King Cobol." Next to the "milk of "evangel," "having the everlasting gospel" of redemption, the religious Jesus Christ, "counsel the angel probi-tation with 'sword and shield,' go-forth "conquering and to conquer."
May it sound, as with "Gideon's trump," in thunder tones the cry has ascended from the hearts of pressed millions till it has reached the ears of the Lord of Sabbath, until the piteous cry as one voice "shall awake every nation," until "the angel dragon" is wounded unto death, and
"the angels shall echo around throne!" "It is fallen," (the power intemperance), "and its name shall beard no more at all in the earth deemed from its greatest curse." Go-speed the advent of this white-wing

THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1885.

The full foreign mission assessment must be raised this year. Will not every pastor say, Amen?

Missionary anniversaries at District Conferences might be utilized to greater advantage. Conversations and collections in behalf of this great cause should characterize every district meeting.

We quite agree with the brother who says "brush harrows and subsoil plows are both needed on the gospel farm; but for lasting work the subsoil plow is preferable." A thorough breaking up of the fallow-ground is the demand of the times. The deeper we plow, the surer and more abundant the crop. Good subsoiling can stand the fiercest drought.

The missions of the English Wesleyan Church are making commendable progress toward self-support. Of the $731,340 received by the missionary society last year $43,150 came from mission stations. As rapidly as possible our foreign missions should be made to rely upon themselves. We will develop a panoplied Christianity by too much and too long continued assistance. Our reports from Brazil on that subject have a prophetic ring.

Referring to the invention of an apparatus by which an echo given back by any object at sea can be heard in time to avoid collision, the Christian at Work facetiously observes: "Now let some one invent a machine by which the slightest whisper of scandal can be echoed back and microphoned into the ears of the parties implicated, and some wagging tongues would be still, and a great nuisance and sin would be sensibly mitigated."

This from Miss Willard, spoken at the close of a spirited but not acrimonious debate in a temperance convention, is as exquisitely beautiful as it is soundly Christian: "To be good natured just because you happen to agree, is easy; the cruelest mind and hardest heart are capable of that. But to disagree with perfect gentleness is an exotic grace, a heavenly violet, only to be nurtured in the soil of human hearts by the sunshine of God's blessed spirit."

There is a striking coincidence in the fact that at the great missionary anniversary meeting at Exeter Hall, in London, May 2, 1853, William Morley Pugh spoke for the first time and Dr. Robert Newton for the last time. As the eloquent voice of the venerable preacher who was four times elected President of the Conference, and who on every platform in England and Ireland had pleaded with peerless power the cause of Methodist missions, was fading into silence, another was called to the front of equal gifts, larger culture and wider popularity. When the veteran of over seventy was tottering to the tomb the elastic, eloquent young hero of thirty was just rising to leadership and urging forward, with words of daring and power, the conquering hosts of the Lord. The church will never lack for leaders. God buries his workmen and carries on his work. He is crowning some and calling others every day.

Canon Lyddon's "Theory of the Episcopate," given in a sermon preached on a recent ordination occasion, has awakened some vigorous discussion. So much so, that the distinguished author has revised one or two sentences and shaded very materially their exceeding High Churchiness. In an article published in the Contemporary Review, Dr. Edwin Hatch makes an elaborate response, of which the following are his closing, well-chosen words:

"There is not a single statement of the New Testament or a single fact of church history that is not compatible with the belief, which is parallel to almost all else that we know of the working of God, whether in nature or in grace, that the Christian communities have a free right of organization; that different forms of organization have been developed by the force of circumstances as the ages have gone on, and that the forms of organization which survive are survivals of the fittest, and thereby part of the moral government of God."

Missionary Methods—A Call.

The call of Dr. Allen, the superintendent of our China Mission, for 150 new missionaries within the next five years recalls some thoughts. Our convictions as to the methods of establishing the kingdom of Christ in heathen lands are clear and strong. Though without the advantages of personal observation, we have been an interested student of the reports and correspondence of men in the field connected with all denominations. Their suggestions and discussions we have read, and the results of various methods compared with some care.

Educational and evangelistic measures should both be employed, and neither should be given undue prominence. It is the function of the church at home and abroad to educate; but this must be subordinate to the great work of preaching. God has ordained "the foolishness of preaching" to be his mightiest agency for achieving the world's redemption. We, therefore, commend most heartily the spirit that prompts this earnest appeal to the church. Though the figure named is a bit sensational and beyond the assimilating power of the mission, it indicates a chivalric spirit and aspiring faith. There is in it something of the martial music of a bugle-horn that thrills the nerves, and makes the soldier impatient for battle. Unless our men at the front have such courage and zeal nothing great or good can be accomplished.

We applaud the spirit of this call because it puts a premium on evangelistic work. He wants men to itinerate and preach. The ear of the empire must first be caught by the earnest preacher on the street or in a humble chapel, speaking, and with a loud voice. It was Paul's plan; it is the Divine method. In a letter to the Richmond Christian Advocate the Rev. W. W. Royall says: "The point of all is this—that if we intend to build up our part of the church of Christ in China, we must, absolutely must, do more evangelizing. Schools, good and useful schools, will spring up everywhere in the most natural and successful way. They will be the outgrowth of a want made manifest by the preaching of the gospel." To the same effect other missionaries are writing, and we are urged to send forth more laborers into the harvest. The need is thus stated and laid upon the conscience of the church. If the heathen perish without a knowledge of our God when the ability to enlighten them is in our hands, how dreadful is our responsibility!

And this recalls the loud appeal of our depleted missionary treasury. Anticipating that the Centenary enthusiasm of the church would express itself in connectional offerings for the expansion of our great ecclesiastical and evangelistic enterprises, the Board of Missions advanced appropriations. But when the Centenary idea became deconnectionalized and expended its force mostly in local work, all contingent appropriations had to be revoked and our lines of operation somewhat contracted. Surely a forward movement is not to be arrested because the Lord's money is withheld! Will the church call a halt, and say to her officers, Retrench; and to missionaries ready for the field, Stay thou at home? The "million for missions" being raised so vigorously by our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church encourages the hope that a like aggressive spirit will pour into our treasury a quarter of a million. With more than half as many members, we ought to raise a fourth as much for the enlargement of our Redeemer's kingdom. To help forward such a result we venture the following suggestions:

1. Let each pastor adopt both methods of public and private appeal. If any brother is absent on missionary day, see him elsewhere and secure an offering.
2. Ask each one to make a slight advance on the contribution of last year. If it involves a little self-denial, so much better for the giver. If it requires the sacrifice of some luxury or ornament, Christ will supply a richer adornment of spirit.
3. See that every cent assessed is raised. The assessment may seem excessive; but really it is far below our Lord's demands.
4. Remember that each congregation which exceeds the assessments for connectional objects this year will have so much credit as a Centenary offering. An opportunity is thus given to those churches that under the stress of local circumstances, or for any cause, failed to properly commemorate the greatest event in our ecclesiastical history to join in a memorial celebration of God's blessings vouchsafed to us during a hundred eventful years. This will develop a more intelligent denominational loyalty and strengthen the hands of every faithful pastor.
5. Be slow to apologize for anyone's refusal or failure to make a proper missionary offering. Pastoral sympathy may be expressed too speedily and to a brother's spiritual hurt. He need not be chided for his penuriousness; but, on the other hand, it should not be condoned. The complaints of excessive assessments do not all come from the pew. And every such criticism is a salve to some covetous conscience.

"Insignificant."

A writer in the current number of Harper's Magazine, treating of the "Mohammedans in India," goes out of his way to remark that "the conversion of Hindus to Christianity has been entirely insignificant." Yet trustworthy statistics show that half a million of Hindus have become Christians, nor is there any portion of the heathen world regarded with more interest and hope by the friends of missions than the great Indian peninsula. And it is quite certain that educated Hindus, themselves, are very far from regarding the progress of the gospel as being insignificant. More than one has given expression to the belief that their own religion was doomed, and that in the Cross of Christ would reign from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. There are as many converts now in that country as there were in the Roman Empire at the close of the first century.—Christian Intelligence.

The ignorance of some secular writers is amazing. They seem to have a genius for mistaking or underestimating the facts of religious and ecclesiastical history. Any well-informed man knows that the percentage of increase in the foreign mission fields of all churches is greater than at home. And this is as it should be. A few years ago every Chinese port was closed against a Christian missionary; now they have the amplest protection, prosecute their apostolic labors without personal molestation, and have gathered into their churches thousands of humble, faithful worshippers of the Lord Jesus Christ. And what a revolution has been wrought in Japan! Her Christian subjects are rapidly multiplying, her system of education is constantly improving, her legislation is becoming more liberal, her caste prejudices and superstitions are giving away, and a nation is being born to God in a day. Corea, "the hermit-nation," long a terra incognita to the civilized world, is now open to the missionary and the gospel standard has already been securely planted. "Insignificant!" these results may be to unbelievers, but to the heart of faith, they are the earnest of a better hope and the prophecy of a brighter day.

Surely the writer of the above has not read Dr. Dorchester's Problem of Religious Progress or Dr. Parkhurst's admirable article in the North American Review, entitled, "Is Christianity Declining?" What a skillful marshaling of the facts of faith! We can not read them without a psalm of praise and a prayer of consecration. They are an eloquent refutation of the blasphemous boast of Voltaire, "that before the beginning of the nineteenth century, Christianity would disappear from the earth." From no outpost is she beating a retreat, but is rather pushing forward with holy and heroic boldness into the regions beyond. Never were her principles so firmly rooted in the heart of the world, nor has the church ever known a period of such glorious activity. Some of Dr. Parkhurst's figures, as related to our own country, are of thrilling interest:

In 1800 there were but 3,030 evangelical churches in the whole of the United States; in 1880 they numbered 97,000. In 1800 the number of communicants in evangelical churches numbered 364,000; in 1880, 10,065,000. In 1800 there was one evangelical communicant to every 141 inhabitants; in 1880, one to every five. While the increase of population since 1850 has been 116 per cent., the increase of communicants has been 185 per cent. In 1745, when Dr. Dwight became president of Yale College, only five of its students were church members. In 1880, out of 12,063 students of colleges, 6,081, or more than half, are professors of religion.

The religious condition of France is thus stated by the New York Independent:

There is steady progress toward the severance of the connection between Church and State. The appalling prevalence of infidelity shows the utter failure of Romanism as a power for proper religious training. The hierarchy had full control in France; it was the sole teacher of religion and morals; but it was unable to hold the confidence of the people, and they broke away from the guidance of the church, and became not merely indifferent, but, to a great extent, bitterly hostile to Christianity. Had the Reformation prevailed in France, the nation never would have sunk into its present condition. But evangelical influences are at work in the land of Huguenots, and there, when presented in a purer form, will win back the allegiance of the people.

The Seashore Camp Meeting.

We spent a few days last week at the Seashore Camp Meeting and in an unusual measure enjoyed that feast of tabernacles. The attendance did not equal other years, but the spirit of the occasion was never better. We noted many improvements on the grounds which have added to the comfort and attractiveness of the place. With the expenditure of a little more money it can be made the most beautiful and delightful location on the seashore. The trustees deserve all praise for their zeal and enterprise in establishing and improving this religious seaside resort. The restaurant kept by Bro. B. O. L. Rayne satisfactorily catered to the tastes and appetite of his patrons. We understand the trustees purpose erecting a fine hotel on the grounds in the early future. When that is done and some other contemplated changes are made, this will be the "Martha's Vineyard" of the South.

The preaching was earnest, direct, searching, instructive. The power of the Highest overshadowed the pulpit and the people sat together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. There were comparatively few in attendance who were not professed Christians, but it was a great season of edification to the church. The experience meetings in the morning, always profitable and joyful, were full of pentecostal fervor and power. How inspiring is the testimony of a fellow-pilgrim! Often we feel lonesome and that our experiences are peculiar. But when some one relates the story of his spiritual struggle, the kinship of conflict invigorates faith and courage. We have always been a witnessing people, and as long as the Methodists have an experience to tell, the Lord has a use for us.

One marked feature of the worship was the singing under the leadership of Mr. Philip Werlein. He introduced the organ and cornet, and, though some at first felt the shock of innovation, soon all appreciated and approved the change. The cornet leads and holds together the voices of a large congregation far better than any precursor however expert or gifted with lungs. The instruments were not used at the close of the service when penitents were called, nor while conducting the altar exercises. Then the informality and joyous freedom characteristic of a Methodist revival were observed. It was generally agreed that the singing was an improvement on previous years.

Another service somewhat unusual at camp grounds was a gospel temperance meeting on Friday afternoon. The attendance was good, the spirit of the hour most devout, and we trust positive and great good was accomplished.

Wise Savages.

The following, from the Youth's Companion, illustrates the fact that we may apply to others for some valuable aid, to our higher civilization. After all our boasted progress the New Zealanders are ahead of us in prohibition sentiment. The indulgences now are, however, that we will soon attain unto the virtue of these savages:

The King of the New Zealand Maories is a wise man. Seeing the evil which intoxicating drink has already wrought among his people, he has taken steps to prevent the introduction of any more liquor into his dominions. By the law of New Zealand, the natives inhabiting any district of the country may petition the governor general to forbid the sale of liquor, and the King of the Maories has taken advantage of this feature of the law. His domain is very extensive, and his people are numerous. As the enforcement of the law against liquor is not, as it is in some countries, in the hands of those who are interested in violating it, there is little fear that it will become a dead letter.

What a lesson there is in this circumstance for the "enlightened" people of America and Europe! Drink has well-nigh destroyed the race of North American Indians, and it has much to do with the decay of the native population of the Sandwich Islands. Yet Christian people have suffered persons among themselves, animated by a greed of money, to carry on a trade in rum with these poor savages.

Drink has killed millions of white men and women, has multiplied pauperism and crowded the prisons. It is left for a savage chief to make an effective stand against the enemy, while the countries with highly organized governments are groping in a blind search for some way to deal with it. Man is gradually learning that his own civilization is matched in many important respects by that of such insects as the ant. A fact like that we have cited may well make us pause and inquire if the wisdom and self-restraint of the South Seas savages are not worthy of our imitation.

"A million for missions" is the alliterative and inspiring watchword of the Methodist Episcopal Church this year, and the responses received indicate the probable fruition of the largest hope. Secretary McCabe says: "There is the sound of a going in tops of the mulberry trees. The million is coming."

—Rev. Dr. C. F. Evans, of Shreveport, has been on a visit to Little Rock, Ark.

—Twenty-seven of the South Carolina preachers attended Wolford College commencement.

—We regret to hear that Sister Heard, widow of the late Rev. Joshua T. Heard, has been very ill. At last accounts her condition was considerably critical.

—The revival at McComb City, Rev. J. T. Nicolson, pastor, resulted in twenty-three additions to the church. A full report of it will appear next week.

—The new president of Bowden College at Brunswick, Me., the Rev. William DeWit Hyde, is only twenty-seven years of age. He is said to be a remarkably gifted young man.

—Bishop Keener expects to attend the Seashore District Conference at Hattiesburg next week, if his health will permit. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. J. D. Hays on Wednesday night.

—Our sincere condolence is extended to Rev. G. H. Hodge, of the North Mississippi Conference, in the death of his little daughter. Heaven becomes more real as our loved ones are transferred to its many mansions.

—Rev. J. S. Oakley, of Starkville, Miss., thus concludes a private note to the editor: "We are preaching in our new church. Hope to have it finished by November 29, at which time we expect Bishop Hargrove to dedicate it."

—Rev. Ross Taylor, son of Bishop William Taylor, of Africa, has returned to his home in California from the "Dark Continent." He was absent about five months. Whether he proposes to rejoin his father has not transpired.

—The Centennial Volume containing the essays, addresses and proceedings of the Centennial Conference held at Baltimore in December last, is just from the press. It can be had for $2 net, and every American Methodist ought to have a copy.

—Sam Jones is stirring the dry bones and beer kegs at Murfreesboro, Tenn. After a six o'clock service in the morning, a whisky dealer rolled all of his whisky out on the pavement and shipped it back to the house from which it was purchased.

—Trinity Church, Atlanta, Ga., stands deservedly in the front rank of our Southern Methodism for its liberal contributions to foreign missions. On a recent Sabbath an offering of $1,500 was made to this cause, and it is determined to increase it to $2,000.

—Our brethren of the tripod are receiving high honor. Emory College has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. J. E. Godbey, editor of the South-Western Methodist, and Rev. J. W. Rush, editor of the Alabama Christian Advocate.

—The smallest salary a pastor in the Presbyterian Church of Australia is permitted to receive is $1,500. We know a number of the clergy of that and other denominations in this goodly land who have permission to receive less than one-fifth of that amount.

—Revs. R. Bradley and J. W. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, called at our office on Wednesday, of last week, en route to the Seashore Camp Meeting. They were accompanied by our old Vicksburg friend and former parishioner, Bro. G. L. Record.

—The discovery of iron in several North Louisiana parishes is a topic of surpassing interest in that section. From superficial examinations made little doubt exists but that rich deposits of iron and coal are to be found in Claiborne, Webster, Bienville and Bossier parishes.

—Rev. Whitford Smith, D. D., has resigned his professorship in Wolford College on account of the infirmities of age. In his palmy days Dr. Smith was a preacher of great power and popularity, and has filled a professor's chair with the amplest satisfaction.

—Here is an item worthy of wide mention: "Since 1879 the Northern Presbyterian Church has had an increase in membership of 10 per cent, in contributions, of 70 per cent." A like comparative development of the grace of liberality among "the people called Methodists" would swell our offerings into the millions. And why not?

—We are in receipt of a sad note from Rev. C. R. Godfrey, of the Louisiana Conference, dated Forksville, July 10, announcing the death of his son Walter, after an illness of only forty-eight hours. This is the first break in that happy family circle, and the blow is very severe to the bereaved parents. But our brother expresses the sweet resignation taught in the blessed gospel: "How joyful will the meetings be in the heavenly world!"

—The entire plant of the old Exposition, including buildings, machinery, etc., was sold at auction on Monday last for $175,000, the Board of Management of the new Exposition becoming the purchaser. It is now intended to push forward with all possible vigor the work of reconstruction.

—Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall and family are at Eureka Springs, from which he sends us a pleasant note. We are glad to know that Mr. Marshall is improving rapidly. The Doctor says: "The half has been told of the numerous cases of hopeless cases by these mysterious waters—God's own sanitarium."

—A writer in the Religious Herald who has attended religious assemblies North and South, thus describes the speaking and preaching: "That in the North is more finished; that in the South more forcible; that at the North more studied, that at the South more natural; that at the North more from the head, that at the South more from the heart; but both are alike honest, manly and able."

—The last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church appointed a commission to draft a plan for the entertainment of that body and to select the place of its next meeting. The commission met recently, and as between Boston and New York City, both places having extended invitations, selected the latter. The General Conference of 1888 will, therefore, be held in the city of New York.

—Just now in Mississippi there is intense political excitement. Rival candidates and their friends are exceedingly active in trying to secure the support of county conventions. An election for State officers is approaching and many aspirants are to keep their heads cool, and the consciences void of offense. Many a man has fallen from grace in the fierce excitement of a political contest.

—Miss Carrie Steele, of Mississippi, who has been accepted by the Woman's Board of Missions to work in the foreign field, attended the Seashore Camp Meeting, attended a niece of Rev. Elijah Steele, the quiet young apostle of the South, who died of yellow fever in the city, and, therefore, has the influence of missionary faith. We are your young friend a long life devoted service among the women of heathen lands.

—Rev. Dr. W. P. Harrison, brother of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, reached the Seashore Camp Ground on Saturday and preached on Sunday at 11 o'clock. His sermon was greatly enjoyed by the entire congregation. Bishop Keener preached in the afternoon with characteristic power. The sermons of the day were by Rev. J. B. A. Abreu, at 8 o'clock in the morning, and by Rev. Dr. M. Andrews at night.

—Canon Farrar is expected to visit the United States in September, and will deliver some addresses on prohibition, of which he is an ardent advocate. If "our kin beyond the sea" who visit this country would extend their journey farther South, they might do good, and carry home some refreshing impressions. English tourists and writers have not been slow to speak of this section, but none ever come to make original observations. We hope the distinguished Dr. Farrar will extend his trip to the Crescent City.

—Rev. H. C. Parrott, of the New Mississippi Conference, writing his revival meeting at McComb, says: "We had seven conversions, of whom was a saloon-keeper. All saloon-keepers of the town were serious, closed their places of business, and attended the meeting night after night. They are clever men and press themselves as being dissatisfied with their business. The basest club suspended operations, and denominations share heartily with us. Rev. H. T. Gaines, of Crawfish, a faithful young preacher, was with us during the entire meeting, and made for himself many friends."

—A note from Rev. Dr. A. H. president of Centenary College, encourages the hope that a largely increased patronage may be expected next year. He is working diligently at home and abroad. When at home he is superintending the building of a house for the president—a long felt. Some facts about the expenses of a collegiate year at Centenary are of interest to the preacher. He says: "Preachers' sons or daughters preparing for the ministry can attend Centenary for $125 per annum. I wish that fact to be fully known; I wish also that the people should know if they patronize the college there will be no need of collecting supplemental funds." We hope halls of that honored institution will be crowded next year—as in old days.

HE HATH DONE ALL THINGS WELL.
(Mark vi, 37.)

BY CHARLES BARNES.

When youthful buoyancy of life
And thrilling pulses swell
Our bounding hearts—we then allow
"He hath done all things well."

When pleasant things surround our home,
And blessings seem to dwell
Forever with us, then we cry,
"He hath done all things well."

When our petitions reach the throne,
And loving answers tell
That we prevail—our glad cry,
"He hath done all things well."

Then let not his chastening love
Make grieving hearts rebel,
Nor let the chastened soul deny,
"He hath done all things well."

But let the inward monitor
To penitence impel,
That we so fully show the world
"He hath done all things well."

He dealt with us as with sons,
And spurs us to excel,
The alluring wiles of deadly ease;
"He hath done all things well."

His promises are to the end,
And through the shadowy dell
His rod and staff shall comfort us;
"He will do all things well."

Oh! Father, grant that when for us
Shall toll the passing bell,
We may with shining seraphs sing,
"Thou hast done all things well."

Primitive Methodist.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: During the whole of 1886 I was engaged almost daily preaching in the city and in the country, and distributing the word of God. I visited almost all the towns and villages for twenty miles around Shanghai on horseback, having Bro. Liew, our native preacher, with me. The little church in the city supplied a great want, and we had almost daily preaching there. In the early part of July I baptized the young carpenter, Young Kyung San, who seemed to be truly converted to faith in Christ as his Savior. He commenced the study of the Scriptures at once, with the hope of carrying the gospel to his own home and people. For years he had been seeking the truth and at last found it in Jesus.

Shortly after the opening of the church a wealthy silk merchant came in and listened attentively to the preaching of God's word. The next day he returned to hear, and again and again he visited the church, evidently deeply interested in the doctrine. He invited me to his home, some sixty miles in the interior, saying, "I want you to go to my home and people and preach the same doctrine." He gave me his address, and said he would expect me in two weeks. In a few days I started in company with Bro. Liew on a small Chinese boat in search of this man's town and home. This was the first extensive trip I had made in the interior, and, of course, there was much to be seen on the way to interest me. The thriving towns and villages and the people in their fields busily engaged at work all attracted my attention, for at that time the ravages of war had not swept over this part of China. The whole country seemed to be at work. Passed one walled city, Tsingpo, situated in a very pretty valley with hills in the distance. The whole valley seemed devoted to the cultivation of rice to almost the exclusion of everything else. At this city stands an old pagoda. These structures are found near almost in all towns and cities, and seem almost inseparable from them. This city is not a large one; but great numbers of people were going in and out of the gates. It was in this city, only two years before, where Dr. Medhurst, Mr. Muirhead and Dr. Lookhart, missionaries of the London Mission, were attacked and badly beaten. This was their first visit, and at that time there were thousands of men from the north waiting at that city to take up rice to Peking. After Dr. Medhurst had preached to the people they began to distribute books among them. There was a general rush for the books, when the missionaries were overwhelmed by the immense crowd. Dr. Lookhart tried to defend himself with a stick, and this exasperated the people. The infuriated mob then rushed upon them with sticks, stones and bamboo poles, and two of the missionaries were badly beaten. It was with great difficulty that they reached their boats and returned to Shanghai. We were not interfered with except that we received some considerable abusive language.

In 1859 the city was occupied by a large force of insurgents, and soon the beautiful and thriving suburbs of the whole city were laid in ruins. In 1860, on my return from the city of Nankin, I passed this city when it was still in the hands of the insurgents. We reached the place in the night, about ten o'clock, and were halted by the guard on the wall. Our boatmen were not familiar with the names of the cities which were then in use by the insurgents, but only knew them by their former names. When hailed, "Who comes there?" they replied, "Friends." "Where are you from?" They answered, "From Soochow." In a moment there was great commotion on the walls of the city, for the boatmen had given them the wrong name for the city of Soochow. I went at once to the bow of the boat, and shouted out, "We are from Soochow." This, of course, confirmed the insurgents in the belief that we were enemies about to attack the city. Gongs and drums were sounded on the wall and in the city. By the yells and moving of lights we could see soldiers collecting on the walls. We were summoned to halt at once. I shouted back that we were going to stop at the east gate of the city. There seemed to be thousands of voices yelling to us to halt or they would fire upon us. It was an anxious moment just then, for we did not know what moment a shot would be fired at us. The boatmen yelled out there were foreigners aboard, and this excited the insurgents the more, for they had been attacked by foreigners only a short time before this. At a given signal drums and gongs were sounded all over the city, and the city wall near us was soon crowded with soldiers. Lights were seen moving in all directions, concentrating at the east gate to resist the foe. When we came to anchor the east gate of the city was opened and about one hundred men came out with swords and banners. I produced my passport which I received in the city of Nankin. On reading this they exclaimed, "They are our brothers." The officers then gave us a cordial invitation to go into the chief, saying, "The chief wishes to see you and have you partake of some refreshments." We went with them, but without a little fear lest we might be detained as prisoners. When we reached the residence of the chief we found it beautifully lighted and tables filled with refreshments. This was indeed a great surprise to us. The chief was a very pleasant man, and called us brothers. Said he was very sorry some foreigners opposed them in fighting the imperial troops. It was about midnight when we returned to our boat. The chief requested us not to leave in the morning until he could see us. A little after daylight we were about to leave when an officer was seen coming from the gate with two or three live goats, a number of chickens and a large lot of fresh beef as a present. They wished to send an escort of soldiers with us; but we felt more secure to go alone, and after thanking them many times for their great kindness to us we set sail and, passing the imperial camp without any difficulty, we reached Shanghai in safety.

Retrospective.

TWENTY-THIRD PAPER.

Rev. Green M. Rogers was a transfer from the Tennessee to the Mississippi Conference; was a man of fine mould, prepossessing in his manners, pleasant in social relations and withal a good preacher and administrator of discipline, making a good presiding elder. He was kind in his intercourse with the preachers on his district, gaining their esteem and affection. While he was presiding elder of Sharon district the writer was licensed to preach. He has not forgotten his embarrassment and timidity while passing through an examination before a full quarterly Conference, consisting of the preacher in charge (Rev. A. T. M. Fly), several local preachers, besides the Board of intelligent stewards and class leaders. The Conference was held at the old Pleasant Grove Camp Ground, in Madison county, September 10, 1882. Being the only applicant for license to preach, the numerous questions had to be answered with no other person to respond. There I sat trembling, fully aware of my imperfect knowledge of theology. Among the local preachers present was the stern-looking, intelligent divine, Rev. Thomas Griffin. Had I known him better I would have feared him less, for beneath that stern countenance was concealed a kind heart. Mr. Griffin could make allowance for novitiate.

The following dream was related by Mr. Rogers, as near as the writer recollects, in his own or similar language:

"While traveling through the Chickasaw Nation, on my way to the Mississippi Conference, with my family my money was exhausted in paying for repairs and other incidental expenses. Night overtook me at the house of a gentleman who had been settled in the Nation a few years. He consented to entertain us for the night. I found him an intelligent gentleman with comfortable surroundings. After prayers, retiring to our room, I told my wife I hardly knew how we would complete our journey, as I had no money; we would trust to Providence. During the night I dreamed that someone put a new twenty-dollar bill in my hand on the Manchester Bank. I had never heard that there was such a bank in Mississippi. The names of the president and cashier were plainly written; other marks and numbers were particularly noted. I felt gratified that I was to be relieved from present embarrassment. While holding on to the bill I awoke. It made such an impression on my mind that I awoke my wife and related the dream. After breakfast the next morning my landlord said to me: 'Parson, before moving to the Nation I was in the habit of attending church and helping to support the ministry. Since we have lived here in the Nation we have had no church privileges, and I have paid nothing to the preachers. Will you accept this as a present?' And he handed me a twenty-dollar bill on the Bank of Manchester, precisely suiting the description of the one I had seen in my dream."

It will be remembered that the name of Manchester was changed to Yazoo City. I reproduce the above "retrospective" as a singular coincidence, showing that the Lord careth for his servants.

As is known, Mr. Rogers became a leading member of Mississippi Conference, was honored by his brethren with seats in the General Conference and for several years filled important charges, doing efficient work. In the prime of life he was stricken with paralysis and passed quietly away to his reward. His courtly bearing, sprightliness of intellect and warm attachment for his friends and the cause he espoused were his noticeable characteristics.

An Appeal for Helping the Poor to Help Themselves.

The House of Rest, Charleston, S. C., was founded by three ladies, in 1874, for all women and children who can not be received and surrounded by good influences elsewhere. It receives orphan babies and the orphans of strangers (both classes) being inadmissible at the Charleston Orphan Home), the children of bread-winning mothers and of sick parents, little girls rescued from degraded homes, the convalescent, the stranger seeking employment, the aged needing a peaceful home, and also the sinner, for whom it is a very successful and the only reformatory in the South, unless there be one recently opened at Washington.

It receives applicants from other places if there is room, and the friends of each one thus admitted pay one hundred dollars a year toward their support. At present there are twenty-nine inmates, including twenty-five children under fourteen years of age. Each inmate is required to do whatever she can. The children receive training in household work and sewing, a common school education, and are expected to be fitted for household positions.

The founders of the House are devoted to its work. One of them has made it her home from choice, so as to give all her time to it. Another one regularly leaves her home to spend the greater part of the day at the House engaged in its work. These ladies impart to the House a redemptive unexpected in a home for the unfortunate, and show in their daily lives the ruling principles which have made it the House of Rest.

May the work "come home to men's business and bosoms!" It only needs to be known to be appreciated. It was founded in the belief that, because it was a work meeting pressing wants in the daily lives of the poor, it would be supported by the people. During the past year sixty worthy applicants were obliged to be refused admission from want of means.

Shall the waiting applicants be received? They can and the work can be enlarged as designed and demanded, and he largely self-supporting when $1,782—the needed sum for the purchase of steam machinery manufactured by B. Eastwood, of Patterson, N. J.—into its self-sustaining laundry is contributed. The laundry's capacity for work would thus be increased at reduced prices, and in it the inmates would be taught to maintain themselves by their own hands, and if unskilled workers, be trained until they become successful in laundry work. Can this sum be more worthily bestowed than by thus teaching young girls and women of the unfortunate poor to earn their bread by necessary work? And can a more practical way be devised of helping the destitute to help themselves?

The Laundry Fund now, July 11, amounts to $223.63. In the faith that there is "much in little," and to enable all to contribute to this noble work, even a two-cent postage stamp for the Laundry Fund of the House of Rest will be gladly received from each hearer, reader and subscriber of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. And as the trouble of sending deters very many who would otherwise gladly contribute a two-cent postage stamp, all who will become stamp collectors for the Laundry Fund of this Christ-like charity will find that it pays by helping it to make a worthy cause one's own.

Reference in Charleston concerning the work can be made by permission to the Rev. C. W. B. Howe, D. D.; the Rev. C. S. Vedder, D. D., pastor of the Huguenot Church; the Rev. F. W. Junkin, D. D., pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Mr. E. T. Horn, pastor of St. John's Lutheran Church.

All necessary inquiries about the work may be made, and all visitors in sympathy with it will be welcome to the founders of the House, who are also the Executive Committee—Mrs. J. Bellinger, Miss E. J. Wagner, Miss Cella Campbell. Contributions to the Laundry Fund must be so specified, and may be addressed: House of Rest, Charleston, S. C.

MARY VAN D. STEVENSON.

"Foreknowledge of God."

This paper I intend as a rejoinder to Rev. Angus Dowling, whose article on the above caption appeared in your columns, June 11, which I read with some degree of interest. I have traversed the ground over and over from childhood up, being raised a Calvinist, and know the trouble through which such minds wade. It is hard to lay aside the bias of early training and take God at his word. Like Paul, I have almost reached the point sometimes where I could wish to die for my brethren's sake if it would only win them away from Calvinism to Christ.

So in this and other articles that yours may evoke you will allow me the privilege of dealing with the subject of foreknowledge candidly, and if I differ with your own preconceived opinions on this subject, deal with me as a brother honestly in search of truth and trying to knock the scales from the theological eyes of all Bible students whom I may have access to.

Your position is as tenable as any one I have ever seen in print; but my candid opinion is that it is not correct in the whole. Hence I shall assume a position never yet taken by any prominent writer except one, and that only assumed, but not argued, viz: That God does not foreknow all coming events, neither does he propose to know them. (Polycarp.) You take the position that God's foreknowledge covers all future events whether moral or natural. This is where the thinking world has made the mistake by blending these in one, associated with moral agency.

Again, "These all show that God understands everything however complex and however contingent." I agree as to the knowledge of complex, but not of contingent ones, if these contingent ones depend upon the moral agency of man. However, it is true that the foreknowledge of an event is not the cause of it. This doctrine is true in its broadest sweep in time and in eternity. That to my mind is a subterfuge which I shall not accuse you of being the author, for it existed long before your day. It is a legal trick showing only one side of the question. While the knowledge of an event does not make it so; yet if it were not so, how could it be known? Here you get into a dilemma.

"Again, God foresees what does not come to pass, and the foreseeing of an event before it comes to pass may prevent or hinder its coming to pass." Nothing is an event which is yet in the future, or purpose, and depends upon contingencies. This is the sad mistake of the theological world. They blend terms and confuse ideas on the subject. I am ready to admit that God foreknows his own plans and purposes from all eternity, and that he has fixed terms, or conditions, or laws, or decrees, as you may choose to term them, by which he will be governed himself toward us and by which we must be governed toward him. These terms are as immutable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Reward or punishment, assistance or rejection, depends not upon God's changing, but upon our changing as the events of life come up. But to say that God foreknows that which depends upon the moral action of a moral agent is not in keeping with sound reason, and to say that God foreknows events that never come to pass is not good child logic. Substitute the term "purpose" for "event," and I will accept that he knows the purpose of a moral agent before it comes to pass. Not before it is purposed or conceived in the heart, but before it is done. And as to a sinful purpose conceived in a wicked heart against God's children, he can forewarn, as he did in David's case, and help them escape, and the purpose may never be accomplished. But there is a vast difference between a purpose conceived in the human heart and an event. I will give and argue my position proper in another article which will follow this one.

Yours in Christ, SAM WHITE.

Woman's Missionary Society.

MR. EDITOR: It becomes my duty to try to give your readers some idea of the business transacted by the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference at their annual meeting held at Aberdeen, June 25 and 27. The Conference officers, Mrs. C. N. Terry, president; Mrs. J. B. Stone, corresponding secretary; Mrs. S. H. C. Strong, auditor, and myself, recording secretary, were all present. Most of the auxiliaries were represented by delegates, some by letter. The first day was occupied in appointing committees, hearing reports of corresponding secretary, treasurer and delegates.

In the afternoon Mrs. Erwin, the hearer of greetings from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Columbus was introduced, and received a cordial welcome. Much sympathy was manifested for the good work being done by the union, and the hearty cooperation of the society guaranteed.

In the evening an address of welcome was read by Mrs. Bishop Palmer, and was responded to on behalf of the societies by Mrs. R. S. Parker, of Starkville. The annual essay was read by the president, Mrs. Terry. In this brief account of our meeting I could not, were I to try, do justice to these addresses. Anything I would say would fall so far below their merit that I might detract from the impression made on those so fortunate as to have heard them.

The second day Miss Lechie Rankin was with us. Gave us a talk in the interest of the Woman's Missionary Advocate, and also read a paper in regard to Miss Haygood's school for girls in Shanghai, which the society fully endorsed. In the evening no opportunity was given for the indorsement to take a mere practical form, and resulted in twenty-four shares being taken. Before the close the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we rejoice greatly in the presence of our much loved missionary, Miss Lechie Rankin, and feel that a rising vote of thanks be given her, and also her beloved mother for giving her to us these few days for her attendance upon our meeting. We will ever cherish with greatest pleasure the memory of this association with her, and our warmest prayers shall follow her even back across the waters. We feel that her presence has been a blessing to us already.

Miss Clark, of Pickens, read an essay in the afternoon which was pithy and humorous, and much complimented, my duties as secretary engaged me so at the time that I heard little of it. Not the least interesting feature of the occasion was the account given us by our corresponding secretary of the meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions in Knoxville. It was like a member of the family returned from a visit to a place of much interest to us. And I can but think that the interest in missionary work would be increased in proportion to the increase of the audience.

We learned with pleasure of the reelection of Mrs. Butler as editor of the Woman's Missionary Advocate, and approved the programme for the monthly meetings as issued by the editor of leaflets and rejoice to know they will be continued. Before proceeding to the election of officers the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we deeply regret that circumstances which forbid our treasurer from again accepting the office, and we accept her resignation only because we are forced to do so.

Officers elected were: President, Mrs. C. N. Terry; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. B. Stone; recording secretary, Mrs. R. J. Thurmond; treasurer, Mrs. A. C. Owen; vice-president, Aberdeen district, Mrs. T. H. C. Strong; Columbus, Miss Mary Callaway; Winona, Mrs. Hartwell; Greenville, Mrs. Myra Smith; Grenada, Mrs. E. G. Payne; Sardis, Mrs. Blackburn; Holly Springs, Mrs. Walker; Corinth, Mrs. Inge; auditor, Mrs. Sullivan; alternate for corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. N. Terry.

The interest culminated on Sunday morning in a woman's missionary experience meeting conducted by Mrs. Davis, a woman whose whole heart is engaged in work for the good of the Master's cause. It is needless to add it was a success, for we know He does own and bless the efforts of such approved instruments.

And now, Mr. Editor, there may be some that will think I have not done justice in my account of the occasion. The old-fashioned school in which I was trained did not use as many descriptive adjectives as are now used, (and sometimes indiscriminately used.) Will only say my feeling is one of humility and gratitude in being allowed the privilege of being a collaborator with such women.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. R. J. THURMOND,
Rec. Sec. W. M. Society.

Christian Privileges.

What a privilege it is in the first place to be a Christian, "a chosen vessel," a child of God, an heir of glory, a joint heir with Jesus Christ! The language of such an one is, "The Lord is my shepherd. I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures. He leadeth me beside the still waters." In affliction, he is my great Physician; in trouble, my omnipresent Friend, and

"When thro' fiery trials, my pathway shall lie,
His grace all sufficient shall be my supply."

When surrounded by dangers my kind Preserver still is near to comfort and protect me. Dear friends, readers of the ADVOCATE, do you not agree with me when I say it is a glorious privilege to be a Christian? Certainly you answer. This is your privilege, it is mine; to have a knowledge of Christ as a personal Savior, and possess the "comfortable hope" of eternal life through him. What a consolation to know, although earthly friends fail us, or be snatched from our embrace by sudden destruction, we have a Friend who will "never leave us nor forsake us." How comfortable it is to be able to recognize the kind hand of Providence amidst the perplexities to which we are incident in this life, and under all circumstances to say, "Thy will be done." Let us then, who have set out to "win the prize," implore Divine aid that we may courageously fight all life's battles, and at last enter the haven of repose, exulting in the happy privilege and blissful realization of living with "God and the holy angels," there to be free from all sorrow and pain, and join in the anthems of praise to "Father, Son and Holy Spirit," while the ceaseless ages of eternity roll.

"And God Shall Wipe Away All Tears from Their Eyes."

Oh, the tears of this life; how often they flow from thousands of eyes! How they tell, as the scalding drops trickle down the care-worn face, of the deep sorrow of the soul within! We know that they are a blessing from the kind Father to his human children. We know that they are given to us as a merciful medium, through which our pent-up sadness may escape. That at times when our burden seems more than we can bear, and our heart is heavy, that freely flowing tears often bring calm relief. Oh, what suffering must those persons experience who know not the power to weep! Have you never seen the strong man when he was struggling with some terrible anguish, and tears refuse to come and relieve him? The aching is his dear desire. See him as he paces restlessly to and fro, his nerves all up-strung, his lips compressed and his eyes glowing with a feverish expression.

Tears are said to flow, too, when we are apprised of some great and sudden joy, and doubtless that is occasionally the cause. It is too seldom though that bright happiness fills the laughing eyes with tears, and too often the grief wrings the scalding drops from our heavy eyes. But think when the battle of life is victoriously ended, and the victor leaves his mortal tabernacle and goes to rest in one not made with hands, one that is immortal, that there will be longer use for tears. For there will be no sadness there, neither death nor sorrow of any kind; for the former things will be passed away. How much to be appreciated is the sympathy of friends when we are hurried with grief and sorrow as they attempt to cheer us up and whisper in our ears words of encouragement! Or with the little child when its tender heart is full of sadness when some disappointment has crossed its pathway and brought unhappiness which is expressed by freely flowing tide of tears! Then how grateful it will be to that kind person who will endeavor to make it feel more happy by speaking cheerful words, showing some thoughtful attention and wipe away the tears from the little eyes! So in our eternal home "God shall wipe away the tears from our eyes." Who is it that shed tears? Let us look around and see. In the dwelling-house just over the way is a family clothed in dark mourning apparel, with trimmings of sallow crepe, their sad faces and red swollen eyes tell us that they have been weeping. From what cause? Come into the room. There rests the lifeless body, perhaps of the father and husband, taken from them in the fullness of his strength, their guide, their comforter, their protector and provider of the necessities of life. Are you surprised that they should mourn? "But God shall wipe away all tears." For there shall be no death there.

Here is another household that is in tears. What is the matter here? There is no crepe on the dress. There is no mourning garb. There has been no visitation of the dread angel of death. This grief has probably been caused from financial reverses. The family has been suddenly reduced from affluence to poverty. Yesterday they were surrounded by every comfort and luxury that wealth can bring, to-day they are about to be turned out of the streets penniless. Unprepared and used to toil they will be forced to face the hard world and do battle with grim want. Or, perhaps, some ward member has been guilty of breach of the laws of society of the State and disgrace threatens the household, and they are in danger of being ostracized by their associates. Or mayhap some other dire calamity has dangers their peaceful happiness. Be whatever their ill fortune is, the hearts are filled with grief and the eyes are filled with tears. "But God shall wipe away all tears." For there shall be no sin in our eternal home, and if there is no sin there shall be no sorrow, no sadness, no grief, no misfortune and no unhappiness. The Father promises that "he that overcometh shall inherit all things; and will be his God and he shall be his son."

NATURE, MINN., June 30, 1885.

The Chief Women.

(A paper written for the Woman's Missionary Society of Enterprise, Minn.)

In reading the word of God we are impressed with the prominence given to the chief women. First of all was Eve. None will deny that she was the chief woman of her age. Although she has had a heavy load laid at her door when we come to weigh the load by even balances, we find that the chief man was "found wanting" also. Eve was the first transgressor and the first chastised. She was the first woman's rights' woman, but her independence of man cost her more than she had calculated on.

"Frailty thy name is woman," said the God that punished also pitied her, and promised that thy seed should "bruise the serpent's head." Oh, what matchless condescension is this! This promise was verified when the angel said to Mary, "Blessed art thou among women."

It is not in the province of this short paper to even mention the chief women that have left the impress of their lives and influence on the age in which they lived. This subject is inexhaustible. We can only bring to our mind's eye the many honorable women noticed in holy writ.

When Paul and Silas were at Thessalonica, preaching Jesus (as Sam Jones did at Nashville), a great multitude of the devout Greeks believed and were sorted with Paul and Silas, and the chief women not a few.

St. Paul has been accused of partiality in a demerit on woman's work in the church. But we have not an read Paul's words. He had deemed her incompetent for any place of trust, would have sent Phoebe, the deaconess, on an important mission to Rome? Would he have called them fellow-laborers? His strictures on woman's work

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, D. D., REV. J. T. SAWYER
REV. W. L. O. HENRICHT.

THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1885.

The brother who discontinues the ADVOCATE because it urged a Centenary monumental offering, has a very mild case of Methodism. If the history of one hundred years and the blessed doctrines of his church fail to awaken real enthusiasm, his convictions can not be very profound.

ALWAYS ADVANCED.—A live, thorough-going pastor wrote recently to a foreign missionary, stating that he had always advanced the collection for missions on the several charges to which he had been assigned. That is a good record and a comfortable reflection. It certainly must be humiliating to report a decrease. We should not be less active and faithful than our predecessors. There may, of course, be local causes of declension; but the rule should be, Always advance. Much depends upon the pastor. The same congregation in two successive years under different pastors often shows a wide difference in its offerings.

An old proverb says, "Wishers and woulders are never good housekeepers;" and "Wishing never filled a sack." But that is only true of faint desire that never ultimates in earnest and persistent labor. When the heart is ready to echo the Psalmist's utterance, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after," blessings abundant will be received. But the desiring must be strong enough to compel a diligent seeking. Reader, what is your one supreme desire of the Lord? An answer to that question will be a revelation to yourself.

Our Romish cotemporary, the Morning Star, attributes the terrible iniquities brought to light by the Pall Mall Gazette to Protestantism, and says, "What it has done for its abandoned flocks in England it will do everywhere if not sooner swept away by a reaction of alarm and abhorrence." Such narrow prejudice and purblind partisanship is amazing in this age and country. The idea of such outrages being the product of Protestantism! What has the Star to say of Romish France, whose lecherousness is the proverb of the world? And of Italy and Spain, the story of whose sins is a hissing and by-word in all decent communities? When Romanism holds undisputed sway, and is not affected by contact with Protestantism, her immoralities are enormous. Who compose the criminal classes of New Orleans? An investigation of their ecclesiastical affiliations might suggest the propriety of a little modesty on the part of our neighbor.

On Saturday, last, by a vote of 111 to 22 a general local option law passed the lower house of the Georgia Legislature amid much rejoicing. The debate had been animated and the interest was high. When the final vote was taken the crowded galleries gave expression to their joy in loud and long-continued applause. Many ladies were present and waved fans and handkerchiefs enthusiastically. There is no doubt of its passage through the Senate and becoming a law. Georgia already had a good law under which more than one hundred of her counties have been redeemed from the curse of the saloons. But so strong had become the prohibition sentiment that additional provisions were demanded. This bill is ironclad. It provides for an election every two years on the question of license or no license until a majority vote in favor of prohibition has been secured, when the matter is ended. Then no more elections on that question are to be held in the county. That is far in advance of any action yet taken by a Southern State, and very nearly approaches the prohibitory laws of Maine, Kansas and Iowa. Such a statute means death to the liquor traffic. The Times-Democrat, of this city—by no means partial to prohibition—sees the handwriting on the wall, and thus discourses in a leading editorial:

"As it is, this work is going rapidly on. In Louisiana, Texas and other Southern States scarcely a day passes without some election of this kind, the voting of a county or district on the subject of the licensing of liquor. There are defeats and victories for both parties; but it can not be denied that the prohibitionists win the greatest number of victories and are continually winning new districts to their ranks."

A Plain Path.

That was an earnest prayer of David when he said, "Teach me thy way, O Lord, and lead me in a plain path, because of mine enemies." His foes were numerous and insatiate. Often he had to seek the hiding-places of the mountains and was never free from constant, sleepless espionage. Every movement was marked and every step was shadowed. Out of these experiences were born many of his most fervent prayers and sweetest psalms. So that the couplet is true that

"David's psalms had never been sung
If grief his heart had never wrung."

Sorrow strung a harp that would forever have been silent. Enemies wrung from him strains of music that otherwise would never have waked the echoes of a thousand generations and taught the ages to trust God in trouble. When danger was greatest he sang the sweetest. When his foes were most malignant, thirsting for his life, and he was concealing himself in the caves of the rocks, the melody of his praise softened the mountain tempest, and on its wings mounted heavenward to the Lord of life. Then it was he said, "He will hide me in his pavilion; in the secret place of his tabernacle will he hide me." So while we sorrow with the persecuted child of song, beset with false witnesses and pursued with unbridled cruelty, we bless God for the triumphant faith that seems never to have been dismayed and the wealth of praise that was never exhausted.

There is significance, therefore, in his pleading for a "plain path." His enemies, or, as the marginal reading has it, "his observers," were intently watching for his halting or stumbling and an occasion to destroy him. One rendering has it, an "even path"—even and level as opposed to the rough and rugged ways of adversity.

A plain path is necessary to true Christian peace. If we are in doubt as to the way, every additional step increases anxiety. So confused becomes the brain of a person lost that he loses the power of careful reckoning. He wanders aimlessly, conscious of being in the wrong way, but without capacity to find the right course. The same path is crossed and recrossed, but not observed. So in spiritual things we must be sure of the way, or every day's journeying will only add to our disquietude of soul. But if the path is plain—no uncertainty or obscurity about it—we walk securely and the mind is at perfect peace. Though lions may crouch by the way and the hill, difficulty, test our strength of limb, we continue the pilgrimage without doubt or fear. The path may be straight, very narrow, long and sometimes rough, but if plain, we are content.

A plain path is necessary to true Christian courage. When one is conscious of being lost he becomes painfully and increasingly timid. The slightest noise makes him start, and his only weapon of defense is aimless flight. So, in spiritual experience, a consciousness of having been betrayed in the wrong way robs us of manly courage. We are short of wonted strength and heroic purpose. Though under the spell of a foul spirit a man may become reckless and defiant, regarding not God or man, he is yet vacillating and craven. When the temporary stimulus is withdrawn, and he is alone with his conscience, his own shadow alarms him and his own heart-beats are loud as the thunder-peals of Sinai. Grossly wicked men are never fond of solitude. In reckless or giddy company they delight, that the monitor within may be laughed into silence. Who has not read of a murderer's dread of darkness and loneliness? He can not sleep without a light in his room and a deadly weapon under his pillow. And even then his is a restless sleep harrowed with awful dreams and visions. But when confident of the right we fear no evil. Sure of the way, we walk with firm step and uplifted head. There is no dodging of friends, no dropping of eyes, no apologies to make, no excuses to render. In proud assurance we courageously move forward. Such an one is thrice armed and fears no foes.

It is safe to avoid everything that needs argument to sustain its rightfulness. If we have to resort to sophistry and casuistry to justify conscience, we had better avoid it. The path is not plain and is shadowed with enemies. Some Christians indulge in practices that require ingenious and specious logic to defend. They are in danger—walking in a doubtful way.

If we offer the psalmist's prayer in faith, the answer is sure. God will lead us in a plain path. We will be satisfied beyond a question or suggestion that the way in which we walk is right before the Lord.

Hyper-Denominationalism.

The Christian At Work has an editorial on this subject more remarkable for its warmth than its strength—for platitudinal exhortation than clear discrimination. It is very easy to ridicule "denominational rabies," and exhort the people to have more of the spirit of Christ and less of denominationalism; but to define clearly the right position is rather more difficult. Though not desiring the "abrogation of the denominations," that is the logic of our cotemporary's article. We can well understand the distinction between a partisan, churchly zeal and a Christly spirit. But at the same time the mind that was in Christ must and will express itself within some branch of the church. A false spirit may possess a people and lead them into gross and grievous errors. They may mistake partisanship for piety, and denominational rivalry for spiritual emulation. But this wrong is not to be corrected by obliterating denominational distinctions. Within the same organization there may be factions and parties more hurtful than the rivalries of different churches. The evil we recognize and would remedy; but an organic union of all bodies would not secure it.

There was a time when "hyper-denominationalism" did disturb the peace of Zion in this country. Years ago the contests were numerous and vigorous. Polemic warriors, well armored and equipped, were ready at a moment's notice to shiver a lance with any daring antagonist. The whole field of theology and ecclesiasticism has been fought over with skill and valor. Not a new movement has been made in years, nor a new weapon of offense or defense invented. Peace has been declared and interdenominational controversy is now scarcely heard. An occasional new disciple of some proscriptive dogma "is spilling for a fight," but his veridancy is more amusing than his valor is respected.

So far as Methodists are concerned, we want to see a more positive denominational life. Not a contented spirit that discounts others and seeks by proselyting methods to disintegrate their congregations, but an appreciation of their own doctrines and polity that ensure their more careful conservation. To many our catholicity is an unmeaning sentimentality; our liberality the weakest latitudinarianism. The broadest Christian charity is incompatible with intelligent denominationalism. Indeed, it is very questionable if a healthy Christian life can be maintained outside the communion of some branch of Christ's church. Through these organizations the world is being evangelized and the communion of saints realized. Their abrogation would offend and not honor the name of Christ. It is a sentiment that is not sustained by the logic of history or right reason.

The Critic has published a letter from John Wesley to his wife not heretofore made public. We have seen it in several papers with accompanying comments. This recalls an unfortunate passage in the history of that great man. Indeed, we have often thought that the only real blunder of his eventful, wonderful history was his marriage. The following judicious references to the letter we find in the Central Christian Advocate:

"His biographers have had so little to say about the unfortunate affair that many Methodists even are surprised to know that he was ever married. Mr. Wesley had been interfered with by his brother, Charles, in an earlier desire to take a wife, having selected one who was in every way worthy of him, as she afterwards proved. In this case, taking his own counsel, he married hastily, but with one of fair intelligence and good standing in Methodist society. She was 'well-off,' but not rich, and this could not have been any part of the consideration, for all her property was secured to her and her children. They were entirely unfitted for each other. Mr. Wesley's labors had measurably rendered him unfit for domestic life. The lady was inappreciative of his position and duties, jealous, and in the end her course was entirely indefensible. It was an indescribable burden for thirty years, although she left him some years before she died. The letter to which we refer was written something over eight years after their marriage. It is a melancholy statement of the domineering and vicious spirit of his wife. The only wonder is, that he did not separate from her at once. We do not say that Mr. Wesley was entirely without fault; but, so far as human judgment goes, he deserved better treatment. Those who knew them both had outspoken pity for Mr. Wesley, and his reputation remained unstained."

Change of Name.

Letters received from prominent and influential brethren in the great North-west assure me that our workers in that part of our Methodism think the time has fully come when we ought to make a change in the name of our church by dropping, eliminating or changing, by substitution, the word "South." No two of them are agreed as to the name upon which we ought to vote this fall. Few of them like the name proposed. What we do upon this line—if we do anything at all—ought to be done promptly, effectively, efficiently and for all time to come. There is no good reason for dillying with this question any longer. It may as well be settled at once and forever as, doubtless, it will be this year. The round of Annual Conferences, commencing soon, will settle it firmly and decisively. This question, however, should be considered calmly, prayerfully and in full view of the best interests of Christ's kingdom among men. Passion and prejudice should be brought into subjection to the law of Christ. In a large part of our church and among the great body of our members there is neither occasion nor demand for a change. The word "South" is not offensive in any way. We rarely or never think of it unless it is obtruded upon us by some brother or sister who has a weakness or tenderness in the political nerves. The body of our people sympathize with this class. They do not want to offend them. They are willing in all things immaterial, where no great principle or truth is involved, to take away or to lay aside any and all occasion for offense. If they can be convinced that any considerable number of our people desire a change in the name of the church, or that the name stands seriously in the way of our progress in the opening fields of the world, why, then, they will submit to the change and help to make it for the general good. I think this is the mind, the animus, the spirit of the great body of Southern Methodists.

We are not ashamed of the name. We have no tears to shed over the cause or causes that led to its adoption. We have no apologies to make for the history of the church as connected with the institution of slavery either before or after the separation in 1844, nor since the emancipation of the slaves. We are abundantly thankful to God for our history, our success, our preservation and our prospects. We do not idolize the name as a whole, nor the suffix "South." We are not so wedded to it that we would "sweat by it to our own hurt and change not." We want to do and will do, God helping us, what we conceive to be for the best. This spirit will, we trust, animate our brethren in the North and West. All who desire to join our church for purposes of usefulness in Christ's kingdom will, we trust, have in them this spirit of conservatism. If this is wanting, useful service will be impossible.

There may be a small minority in the extreme South who are so full of prejudice and so wedded to the suffix "South" that they would quit the church if the name were changed. This number is so small its loss would not be felt; but the great body of our people are not disposed to ride rough-shod over this class, if such class there be. Perhaps there are five times as many good people who seriously and prayerfully oppose the change as there are of those who favor it in the same way. There is no solid reason why a minority—perhaps a small minority—should demand that a large majority yield wholly and unreservedly in a matter where no particular religious truth or principle is in any way involved. What is right? What is best? What will best conserve the glory of God and the salvation of men? These are the questions that occupy my mind and influence my judgment. If the change is to be made just to gratify the political whims and prejudices of a small minority, why, then, I am opposed to it. If it is to be retained for like reasons, then I am in favor of a change. If the change will increase and extend the power and influence of our branch of Methodism, then I say, Change; but if not, there is no need, no real call for change.

The greatest good to the largest number, is my motto. In this light I am considering the question preparatory to casting my vote at Conference this autumn. What good and true men in the North-west have to say has great weight with me. They see this question as we in the extreme South can not see it. Their standpoint is different from ours—whether better or not I can not say. If they have light for those in search of truth, let them turn it on. We want more light—all the light we can get. The action of the Conferences in that quarter will be looked for with eager interest in this end of the world. This will be an index finger, a rousing appeal for change, or a final quietus to this controversy and clamor. Calmness, brotherly esteem and Christian sympathy are now the order of the day. GILDEROY.

VERONA, MISS., July 16, 1885.

—Rev. G. W. Briggs, editor of the Texas Advocate, has been elected to deliver the alumni address at the next commencement of Southern University.

—The Rev. Rufus W. Smith has been elected president of Lagrange College, Ga., to succeed Rev. Dr. J. W. Heldt, who has become Regent of the South-Western University at Georgetown, Tex.

—Three new Methodist Churches were dedicated in the city of Philadelphia on a recent Sabbath. Has any other city witnessed such a scene—the setting-apart of three churches to the worship of God in a single day?

—Rev. J. W. Lowrance writes us a note from Trinidad, Col., inclosing a communication for the ADVOCATE, which will appear next week. He is much interested in the change of name discussion, and is an ardent, able advocate of the same.

—Rev. Dr. W. P. Harrison remains at the Seashore Camp Ground for a season of rest. He preached to the little Methodist community there on Sunday last. No doubt our exhilarating gulf breezes will send him home with invigorated energies.

—A great work is being done among the soldiers in Italy. During thirteen years of earnest labor by evangelists, more than 1,000 soldiers have left the Church of Rome and have been admitted as members of the Evangelical Military Church.

—Rev. M. D. Turner, a member of the North Georgia Conference, in a fit of insanity committed suicide recently. He was a devoted, successful, popular young man, and his death has shocked most terribly the community where he lived and was much beloved.

—The first honor at Emory College, Ga., this year was won by Edgar P. Allen, son of Rev. Dr. Y. J. Allen, of China. The Wesleyan Advocate says: "His valedictory was dignified without being dull—a fine specimen of pure English, both in composition and delivery."

—We are indebted to Rev. J. W. Adkisson, president of Central College, Sulphur Springs, Tex., for a copy of his catalogue. There was a total enrollment last year of 178 pupils, and the session is reported as quite successful. We learn with pleasure of our old friend's growing success. His name abides in Mississippi.

—The Board of Trustees of the Pacific Methodist College have elected to its presidency Prof. J. S. Austin, of Marietta, Ga. He is said to be a fine scholar and an experienced educator. The last session of the college was quite successful. It more than met current expenses and was able to make some outside improvements.

—Rev. Robert J. Harp, pastor of our church at Mansfield, La., has been in the city several days, and, of course, was much at his old headquarters. He has carried the zeal of young manhood into his pastoral work and is a leader in temperance reform. We were glad to see our old friend in usual health and spirits. His family are summering in the North.

—The Louisiana Educational Society has done much to awaken interest in this State in the cause of general education. The officers are men of enterprise and deserve all praise. They have arranged for another visit from Rev. Dr. A. D. Mayo, of Boston, next winter. He will deliver a course of free lectures at given points, and will surely command large audiences.

—Bro. H. N. Langford, of Chilton county, Ala., an old time friend of this ADVOCATE, is now in his eighty-fourth year, and has been a Methodist for nearly sixty years. His wife died some months ago and his home is now deserted. In a note to the publishers, he says: "Death has broken up housekeeping, but my ADVOCATE I must have. This probably is my last renewal."

—Rev. J. A. Parker, of Bastrop, La., writes a short note about the church dedication and encloses an account of the same from the Morehouse Sentinel. He says Bro. Black's sermon on "Angelic Solitude in the Work of Christ," was an eloquent, superior discourse. The meeting was continued for several days, the pastor being assisted by Rev. A. C. Coney, of Monroe. Owing to local political excitement and other causes, the services were suspended without material results. We congratulate our brethren on the completion of that beautiful Gothic structure and pray that great glory may rest upon it.

—Rev. T. W. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, and for the past two years in charge of Woodville Female Seminary, has been elected president of Soule College at Chappel Hill, Tex., and has accepted. Bro. Brown has spent many years of faithful service in Mississippi and his going will be much regretted. He is an educator of large experience and a preacher of fervor and power.

—We regret to announce the death of Bro. D. B. Trousdale, of Monroe, La., an old Methodist of princely type. It was our pleasure to share his generous hospitality last year, and ascertain the high estimate an entire community placed upon his virtues. His house was his father's home, and his heart was always right before God. After a long and honored career, he sleeps well.

—About forty persons were converted at the Seashore Camp Meeting, which closed on Wednesday night of last week. All agree that a most spiritual and profitable meeting was never held at that encampment. Among others converted was the young cornetist who led the music. He is another illustration of the fact that a wind instrument is not an enemy to the office work of the Holy Spirit.

—The Texas Advocate says: "It was a great pleasure to meet at Graham last week, Rev. J. Powell of Jacksonville. Bro. Powell was in former days a member of the Mississippi Conference; then of the Louisiana, being present and filling the chair in the absence of Bishop Soule, at its organization. He has, however, been in this State long enough to stand high on the list of our veteran Texas itinerants."

—At the Waco meeting conducted by Sam Jones, the following is reported to have occurred: "Said a brother, who had neglected family prayer: 'Bro. Jones, I feel as if I was not a bit account in the world. He answers, 'Well, brother, you are just now beginning to feel natural.' Said another: 'Bro. Jones, I feel awful mean about the way I acted; I am sorry for it.' He replies: 'Sorrow ain't worth a cent unless you know quit. Do you feel mean enough to make you quit? If you don't, you don't feel as mean as you are.'" —Among the graduates at the late commencement at Allegheny College was the Rev. Crawford R. Thoburn, son of Rev. Dr. J. M. Thoburn, a missionary in India. He was born in India and purposes to return to his native land. His mother died when he was quite an infant and his father made the long journey to the United States in sole charge of his little babe. The story of that voyage is told in Dr. Thoburn's book, "My Missionary Apprenticeship," is one of the most affecting we ever read. The babe, now a man and college graduate, will return to aid his father in his missionary toils.

—The Times-Democrat, of this city, has initiated a very timely and important movement—an examination into the quality of our mill supply. Dr. Challie, one of our distinguished physicians, commends the investigation and suggests some simple tests by which each family can determine the purity of the mill purchased each day. He calls attention to the fact that an official mill inspection in New York has resulted most satisfactorily. The death-rates among children was decreased there by 4000 in a single year. It is to be hoped that some stringent ordinance will be adopted by the City Council providing needed protection for the people.

—The death of Rev. Dr. S. Iraneus Prime, editor-in-chief of the New York Observer, removes the New York religious journalism in America. For about fifty years he has been connected with the paper over whose columns he presided at his death. His "Iraneus Letters" we have read for years and always with wonder at their variety, piquancy and power. He had a rare felicity of expression and facility of illustration, that gave perennial freshness and fragrance to the productions of his pen. No one would imagine that the writer was a veteran of threescore years and that he was stricken with paralysis one week before he passed away. Gently he fell asleep without sign or sound, but such a life needed no dying test.

—Prof. Henry Drummond, the author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," which has attracted so much attention and given him a world-wide fame, is only thirty-three years of age. He is the second son of Mr. Henry Drummond, head of the well-known firm of Scottish seedsmen. He is the younger brother of the late Peter Drummond, whose name is famed as the founder of the Sterling Trust Society. Educated at the high-school of his native town, he in due course proceeded to Edinburgh University, where he graduated. Without displaying great brilliancy as a scholar, he went through the arts and divinity curriculum with credit, and success. For six years he has been professor of "Natural History and Science" in Glasgow Free Church College. It rarely falls to the lot of any man to achieve such fame at so early an age.

Rev. George A. Mandeville, our city missionary, is holding open air meetings every evening this week in Carrollton. On Monday night Rev. Beverly Carradine preached to a heterogeneous congregation of several hundred. If by this means some are reached who will not attend a church service, God be praised.

It is proposed to endow a Lynchburg chair of English in Randolph-Macon College, and $25,000 is the amount to be raised. There are many liberal, wealthy Methodists in that goodly city and we hope the movement may succeed. The proposition is a suggestion to all friends of education in the South. We must fight in detail and with small arms. There is little aggregated wealth in our latitude and hence we have no large individual offerings. But by selecting a chair to be endowed and work patiently at it, at length the institution will have an ample income. The movement has already begun at Centenary. Dr. C. G. Andrews has in hand the work of endowing an alumni professorship in his alma mater.

Mayor Guillotie, of this city, informed a reporter of The Daily States last week that the debt of New Orleans was decreasing about $33,000 per year, and could now be liquidated for $13,000,000 cash. In 1874 it was $33,000,000, and was reduced in four years to $19,000,000. His Honor further said that his inquiries into municipal administration while on a recent visit North assured him that other metropolitan centers have larger debts than New Orleans. We quite agree with him that a slower reduction of the debt and larger appropriations to public improvements would be the wiser course. When a better system of drainage has been discovered, the future of New Orleans will grow brighter. Even now there is unusual activity among contractors and builders. The sound of saw and hammer is heard on every street. Hundreds of houses, neatly cottages, are being erected.

Rev. Inman W. Cooper sends us the following note, which we gladly give place in our columns:

There is much interest manifested in our Brotherhood. Many of the preachers are paying up promptly. All but one or two will pay. What can we do or say to create an interest among the laymen of the Mississippi Conference? Every Board of Missions could make some worthy person an honorary member. We only have three honorary members. Col. Nugent, Bro. Peter James and Bro. Sam James. Col. Nugent, the liberal, true and worthy Methodist, writes: "I esteem it a privilege to thus aid the widows of our brethren." We now advertise for one hundred such Methodists.

Our Colleges Adversised.

An examination of our advertising columns will show a good list of institutions well equipped and soliciting public patronage. We call attention to each.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

This old and honored seat of learning, located at Jackson, La., is now presided over by Rev. Dr. T. A. S. Adams, a fine scholar and successful educator. He was called to the presidency in the midst of the last term to succeed the lamented Rev. M. R. R. So entirely has he met the expectations of friends in this position that a largely increased patronage is looked for next year. Jackson is a healthy place, the buildings are magnificent and the faculty able and well qualified.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE.

Our special friend, Rev. E. E. Jones, A. M., is now president of this historic institution of the church. Her alumni are numerous, and many of them the distinguished men of the South and both in Church and State. They speak for the careful and Christian instruction of Emory and Henry. The faculty is mostly composed of the graduates of the University of Virginia. See advertisement.

WINTHROP FEMALE COLLEGE.

The history of this institution for the higher education of our daughters has been one of remarkable and uninterrupted success for nearly twenty years. Dr. Johnson, the president, has administered its affairs during this period of its real glory. Two lately-erected buildings have been erected and many other additional buildings for some years past have been very large. Expenses are very moderate, instruction is thorough and other advantages are unexcelled.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mansfield Female College closed its thirty-first session most creditably. Dr. Grace has demonstrated his eminent fitness for the position to which he was called at a trying time, and is deservedly popular. The college never stood higher in the confidence of the people and was never dearer to the loyal heart of Louisiana Methodism. The next session promises to have largely increased support.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE.

Located in the beautiful, classic and healthy town of Staunton, in old Virginia, the Wesleyan has enjoyed large prosperity. Dr. Harris has long been in the presidential chair, and has associated with him a full corps of capable teachers. For terms see the advertisement in another column. It often happens that parents prefer for health-reasons to educate their daughters in a higher latitude. All such can examine the claims of this institution.

TULANE UNIVERSITY.

This institution, established by the beneficence of Mr. Paul Tulane, is located in the city of New Orleans. The Medical Department has long been in successful operation and has been eminently successful. See the advertisement.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE.

The thirty-sixth session of this institution begins September 2, 1885, under the presidency of Rev. A. B. Jones. He was trained as an educator, was long associated with his father in college work, and has increased the prosperity of Huntsville Female College. That is a charming city, and the college is well located. The buildings are roomy and all the appointments most admirable. Send for catalogue.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

This institution, so honored in Alabama Methodism, has revived from the comparative suspension of several years. The two Alabama Conferences have united in its support and intend to restore its former glory. Dr. A. B. Jones is the president. Last term 130 young men were in attendance. Twice that many are expected next year.

ASHEVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE.

This institution, located "In the land of the sky," is popular and prosperous. As Asheville is a great health resort, it has special advantages on that account. Rev. James Atkins, Jr., the president, is an enterprising, scholarly man. Successful in other fields of labor, he commands the confidence of his brethren in this position. The charges are "marvelously low for the advantages furnished."

Others will be noticed next week.

RICHMOND, VA.

May-Febr.

The cause of May-Febr is obscure, but rationally we may conclude it owes its origin to the heat of the sun, but most likely it is due to the pollen of vegetation. It is a fact that May-Febr prevails most frequently when the various grasses are growing off their pollen.

We know that large quantities of pollen float in the air during the summer months, and that the number of cases of May-Febr depends on the amount present, which increases in warm dry weather, decreases when it is very dry and hot, and often disappears after heavy rain.

The most obvious course in the treatment of May-Febr, but not always the most easy one, is to avoid exposure to pollen. Sufferers from the complaint should avoid hay racks and much exposure in the country during the hay season, and should remain to a great extent within doors. Where circumstances admit, change to the seaside is highly desirable and generally effects a speedy cure.

One of the most prominent physicians of the South says: "All treatment of May-Febr heretofore has been found by the profession almost useless in preventing the recurrence of this disease, and I am fully satisfied that all internal treatment fails to control or even modify it. Our only hope to benefit that large class, subjects of May-Febr, is large doses of the local application of such remedies as will in some measure control it. Last summer, just around my location, were five or six persons, great sufferers from May-Febr, who in the height of the attacks were almost instantly relieved by the use of the Air Mediator and Injector, a simple inexpensive instrument, manufactured by the Medical Air Remedy Co., 30 Arcade, Cincinnati, O., charged with Iodine, Carbonic Acid, Quinine, Tincture Opium, Morphine or other known remedies, by the instrument (the natural electric current for the respiratory tract) is sent into the lungs with medicines, and then, with sufficient force to penetrate every passage or duct connected with the tract, it is pumped into the parts affected, thus carrying the needed medicines to the seat of the disease."

Without doubt, it is only by bringing into immediate contact with the mucous membrane lining the air passages, the remedies that we know will abort the attack and afford relief to the sufferer that a cure can be effected. Experience has demonstrated that the use of the Air Mediator and Injector in the above way will abort it, and in no instance has it been found to fail.

Illinois Central R. R. Co.

TOURISTS' EXCURSION TO ST. PAUL, YELLOWSTONE PARK AND PORTLAND, OREGON.

To accommodate tourists who desire to visit St. Paul, Minneapolis, Montana, the Dakota West Fields, Bad Lands, Yellowstone National Park, Portland, Oregon, and the Pacific Coast, the Illinois Central R. R. have arranged for a first-class Pullman Palace Car excursion to leave St. Paul, Wednesday a. m., August 18th, via the Northern Pacific R. R., stopping one night at Fargo, one at Bismarck and one week in the Yellowstone National Park, arriving at Portland August 31st. Tickets will be good for six months from August 18th. Pullman Sleepers and Dining Cars will be run through from St. Paul to Portland. Parties desiring to visit Wisconsin and Minnesota resorts before the excursion leaves St. Paul, can purchase tickets on and after June 1st, good for six months, dating from Aug. 18th. For rates and full particulars of the excursion, apply to J. F. Henry, General Western Passenger Agent, Manchester, Iowa, who will personally accompany the excursion and who will take pleasure in mailing free excursion pamphlets entitled "From the Gulf to the Lakes and the Lakes to the Sea."

Arrangements have also been made for exchange of tickets with San Francisco to parties desiring to return by the Southern or Central Pacific routes. We can not imagine a more delightful tour than a trip from New Orleans to St. Paul, St. Paul to the Park and from the Park to Puget Sound and the Pacific coast.

Garfield says: "Business Colleges furnish their graduates with a better education for practical purposes than Yale, Harvard or Princeton." Such an education can now be better obtained than at Dunsmore's Business College, Staunton, Virginia, where business methods are taught by actual transactions such as occur every day in the commercial world.

A little grammar is a dangerous thing. "Johnny, be a good boy, and I will take you to the circus next year." "Take me now, pa. The circus is in the present tense."

SANITARIUM, Riverside, Cal. The dry climate cures. Nose, Throat, Lungs, full ideas, $5 per week, cost free.

An up-country editor in Pennsylvania, writing about Victor Hugo, said he was the author of Lee's Mieris, "a very graphic description of the surrender at Appomattox."

Their works prove their merits; as for instance, after a quarter of a century of established success, the Waterbury's Steel Pens, sold everywhere.

Countryman (at box office): "Gimme two seats." Treasurer: "Do you want contiguous seats?" Countryman: "No, sir. I'm on my wedding to-day, and 'outfit' but the best goes. Gimme orchestra chairs."

Rev. A. C. CRAIG, 222 St. Joseph St., New Orleans, the well-known agent of the Am. Bap. Pub. Society, in a statement dated June 15, '85, says: "I have used the New La. Remedy in my family for chronic catarrh and tetter. Both were cured. The best constitutional remedy I have seen. It is a better anti-periodic than quinine."

THE GREAT JACKSON ROUTE.—Is the favorite to all summer resorts. It has been rebuilt with steel rails; has adopted the standard gauge with a well ballasted track, and increased speed. They offer the advantages of fast time, through cars, sure connections, and accommodating officers.

Notice to subscribers who order their address changed: Please give full address of last Postoffice, otherwise change cannot be made.

Send the ADVOCATE to your friend for the next year and you will not regret it.

Send fifteen cents in stamps for a copy of Kendall's Treatise on the Horse.

Ask your neighbors to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE please keep this in remembrance.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.—While visiting our Exposition Mrs. Tryphena Farmer, of P. O. Pickens county, Ala., having so often read in the ADVOCATE of the great bargains in places offered by Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, conformed to call on him and obtain, if possible, one of these great bargains. She was more than delighted after having looked the sale for one of these lovely, latest improved "Hale" pianos, and at the astonishingly low price of $250. She will be pleased to show this lovely instrument to anyone who may call on her. We would request all who contemplate purchasing to call on Mr. Philip Werlein, as you can save at least from $50 to $100, and also be convinced that whatever instrument you may purchase is sold under full guarantee. Mr. Werlein invites all when visiting the city to call on him and examine his immense stock, which he takes pleasure in showing, even if you do not desire to buy. He has the celebrated Matheson, Behning, Mason & Hamlin and Hale pianos at very lowest prices and on the easiest terms. Oil pianos repaired or taken in exchange for new ones. Good second-hand pianos as low as $50.

For all points in Texas and California take the Southern Pacific and Star and Crescent via Houston.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.*DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The revenue of the Postoffice Department during the quarter ended March thirty-first last, was $1,733,189 and the expenditures $1,243,722, leaving a deficit of $1,655,553. During the corresponding quarter last year the expenditures were but $1,122,900 and the revenue $1,943,518.

ST. LOUIS, July 16.—At Highmore and Holabird there was a regular cyclone, the latter town being almost torn to pieces, but no lives were lost in the town. A. P. Reed, grain dealer, of Miller, was killed, presumably by lightning, there being no mark whatever found on the body. E. B. Thomson, living two miles from Highmore, was carried forty rods and his neck was broken. Fifteen houses were blown to pieces at Highmore and others were badly damaged.

WATERLOO, Wis., July 16.—During a severe storm, this evening lightning struck the residence and barn of David Lewis, six miles east of here, killing instantly Mr. Lewis, injuring several members of his family and totally destroying the buildings.

DENVER, July 16.—Yesterday evening, at Dehark's ranch, twelve out of a herd of eighteen horses in a pasture were killed by lightning. A hail storm had driven the horses against a barbed wire fence, which conducted the lightning through the herd with the above result.

NIAGARA FALLS, July 16.—A Mrs. Jones, of Buffalo, with a party of ladies at Bath Island fell into the stream, and was carried over the American Falls.

NEW YORK, July 17.—To-day was the hottest of the season thus far. At 3:30 the thermometer marked 90°, and the sun was very little breeze, making the atmosphere stifling and close. Persons were prostrated by the heat and several street-car horses died.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., July 17.—There were eight deaths from the heat in Hudson county to-day. Five of the victims were children.

KANSAS CITY, July 17.—Father Jarline, of St. Mary's Episcopal church, refuses to resign his rectory, as requested by the Episcopal clergy of the city. He repeated his denial of the published charges, and proposed to stand an ecclesiastical trial. Public opinion as expressed in newspaper interviews is strongly against him.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 18.—The veto on the general local option bill was passed by a vote of 111 to 22. A few members objected to the vote. The packed galleries applauded the announcement of the vote vigorously for five minutes, the many ladies rising in their seats and waving their fans and handkerchiefs. The bill was transmitted to the Senate and will be considered by it to-day. A careful study shows that it will pass. The bill provides that on petition every two years elections may be held in counties where intoxicating drinks are sold until the county goes for prohibition, when no more elections can be held. The bill goes to the Senate for final passage.

NEW YORK, July 18.—John Roach, the ship builder, who built the dispatch boat Dolphin, who has been doing business under the name of John Roach & Son, has an assignment to-day.

NIAGARA FALLS, July 18.—The body of Mrs. McIntyre, who was swept over the falls on the day of the opening of the International Park, was found this afternoon, wedged between two rocks at Swift's whirl, on the west side of the falls. The clothing was torn from the body by the force of the current.

ST. LOUIS, July 20.—The special dispatch to the Republican from Douglas, Kan., says: Six persons were drowned in Walnut river, yesterday morning. They drove into the stream and were swept down. Only Anson Carman was rescued alive.

CANTON, Miss., July 20.—There was considerable excitement in town this morning, on account of a party of retail liquor dealers, when it became known that a number of prominent ladies of the different religious denominations had begun a crusade against the liquor traffic by getting up petitions to the authorities under the statute providing that no more licenses be granted for the sale of intoxicants. The ladies are being ably seconded by the men, and it looks as if King Alcohol is doomed.

FOREIGN.

TORONTO, Ont., July 16.—At a public meeting held here last night, the Mayor presiding, resolutions were passed that further admission of the Chinese into Canada should be rigorously restricted, if not totally prohibited.

CAIRO, July 16.—Arabs of the upper class believe that El Mahdi is dead. Lufon Bey, with his garrison, has arrived at Senar. The family in Karlofan has been murdered, and has extended to Khartoum. The hostile Arabs will not advance to Dongola for several months.

DUBLIN, July 18.—The Ennla shareholders of the Munster Bank have resolved to ask the directors to call thirty shillings per share and thus add $1,125,000 to the bank's capital and to their request depositors for ten days to give time to the management to develop the institution's resources.

LONDON, July 19.—A terrible panic prevails at Madrid, where the environs of the city, at least, are undoubtedly infected with cholera. These sections include the residences of many of the wealthy class, and there has already been a complete beggar of the aristocracy. The poor who are forced to remain behind are in a state of panic and are adopting the simplest measures of preventive sanitation.

MADRID, July 19.—In all Spain on Saturday there were 1880 new cases of cholera and 718 deaths reported. In Madrid and vicinity there were nineteen new cases and twelve deaths.

revelations made by the Pall Mall Gazette.

The cruelties of the revolutionary squadron of the British navy continues to show the unsavouriness of many of the war vessels. The following mishaps occurred in a single day, and are said to furnish a fair sample of a day's work: One torpedo boat was destroyed by an explosion of her boiler, one gun-boat was damaged by a collision, one iron-clad was set on fire by careless handling of ammunition, and another iron-clad lost her rudder through structural weakness.

DUBLIN, July 20.—The failure of the Munster Bank was referred to in the Catholic pulpits throughout the south of Ireland yesterday, the priests endeavoring to allay the excitement by advising their parishioners to rely on the stability of the bank.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The camp meeting at Beech Springs Camp Ground, Decatur circuit, will commence on Friday before the second Sabbath in September. Ministers are invited to attend.

Shiloh Camp Meeting will begin on Thursday night before the second Sabbath in October. Preachers are invited. Those who come by railroad will be met with conveyance at Phenahille, Miss.

A LEGEND.

I read a legend of a monk who painted,
In an old convent cell in days gone by,
Pictures of martyrs and of virgin saints,
And the sweet Christ-face with the crown of thorns.

For doubts: not fit to be a chapel's treasure!
Full many a laughing word upon them fell,
But the good abbot left him, for his pleasure,
Adorn with them his solitary cell.

One night the poor monk mused: "Could I but Render
Honor to Christ as other painters do,
Were but my skill as great as his the teacher
Love that inspires me when his cross I view!

"Knew—his halo I tell and strive in sorrow:
That man no more seems less can be admired,
My life's work is all vain—less to-morrow
I'll cast my ill-wrought pictures on the fire."

He raised his eyes within his cell—O wonder!
There stood a vision—thorn-crowned was he,
And a sweet voice the silence rent asunder—
"I could not work that's done for love of me."

And round the walls the paintings shone resplendent.
With lights and colors to the world unknown,
A perfect beauty, and a hue transcendent,
That never yet on mortal canvas shone.

There is a legend to the strange old story—
Let none dare judge his brother's worth or need:
The pure intent gives to the act its glory,
The noblest purpose makes the grandest deed.

The Change of Name.

AN OPEN LETTER TO A NORTH-WESTERN PASTOR.

MY DEAR BROTHER: You write to ask my opinion concerning the proposed change of name for our branch of the church, and as the subject is just now one of general interest, I beg leave to answer your question publicly.

Although my mind has long been made up in favor of a change, I have held myself open to a different conviction, and have carefully read what has been published about it in half a dozen of our leading church papers. I see no reason to alter my opinion, but much to confirm it, that a change of name would be wise in view of the conditions under which we must carry on our work.

This whole matter resolves itself into the question whether we will restrict our field of operations to what is known geographically and politically, as "the South," or will aspire to fulfill the mission of a true church to carry the gospel into all the world. This is the practical issue at stake, which no dialectic skill can evade or diplomatic appeal to sentiment disguise. Some of those who oppose a change virtually admit that we are to be a local church.

Rev. A. P. McFerrin, in the Nashville Christian Advocate, for July 1, gives the plain statement of the case for the other side. He claims that "the South" is big enough not only for us, but for everybody else, and gives us the gratifying news that the world is handing it out. From this standpoint of course there is no special need of change. If we are to work chiefly in "the South" our name will describe us and not hinder us enough to justify a change. But then in simple consistency we ought to throw up the divine commission to carry the gospel to every creature in every clime, and be content to sink into a provincial sect, and tearing from our banner the Christy motto of Wesley, "The world is my parish," write in its place the mock heroic phrase, "The South is my parish," symbol at once of our limitations and pride.

I have weighed as dispassionately as I could the reasons offered against change. They consist of nothing but sentiment, and that of an unworthy kind. In the article referred to above Rev. McFerrin states it frankly. In his fancied "pang" that "would reach a million hearts augmented by the tinge of a blush at the thought of having to surrender," we have the sum and substance of it. He candidly tells us that "argument can avail nothing" against "the tender sensibilities" that cherish this word "South." Thus we are admonished that reason is vain—it is a case of pride! Dr. Fitzgerald virtually puts the objection to a change on the same ground: and in keeping with the principle of taking counsel of his feelings rather than his judgment, he has up to this writing published a great deal against a change and not allowed a word for it. The spirit of enlightened progress asks a change in view of the practical interests of the work; but it is met by the spirit of sectional pride, which says, "No; we blush to surrender." The future welfare of our branch of Methodism in the vast unsettled West is deliberately sacrificed to preserve the antiquated "sensibilities" of the "old guard" that never surrenders even to the providence of God.

The name of a thing should describe its character. Unless we accept the theory of territorial extension alluded to above, the name "South" does not describe us as a church. So long as we go into the regions beyond, it is misleading. It is a geographical term, implying limitations which no true church of Christ should allow to bound its sympathies or its toils. It is a political term, identified with a political history, a sectional controversy, and a civil war, and loads us down with associations alien to millions of Americans, living and unborn, whom we ought to teach and save. I know we repudiate this charge that the name has a political significance; but if it does not mean a geographical district, or a political sentiment, what does it mean? If it means nothing, why retain it to our disadvantage? What does this word mean in Kansas City, in Colorado, in Montana, in Japan, in China? In spite of all protest, it is the symbol of our sectional history and sentiments, and it is kept flaunting in defiance of the genius of our religion only by invincible prejudice. We have nothing to lose by the change. The "pang" that would amite the "million hearts" exists only in the imagination. We have no occasion here to think of this name, much less to use it; and the rank and file of the church would not hesitate a moment to concede the point in favor of the work in the West if it were not for the appeal to sentiment which leading men are ready to make. We virtually surrender a magnificent opportunity to retain the name "South." We have done but little, and we will do still less in the future, to mould the nascent civilization of two-thirds of this vast continent. Our influence is limited to the small class who happen to hail from "the South." The onrushing wave of population sweeps us away, and the odium, not of the sunny land of the South, but of the melancholy history of its woes turns the people away from us.

Brethren, indeed, tell us the name does not hinder us. But facts are against them. San Francisco, with its 300,000 inhabitants, has one struggling Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Our impression on the masses outside of the South is not appreciable except to the fancy of brethren who can see everything else but the propriety of surrendering a name wrought never to have taken. In the very nature of things this name is sure to hinder us immensely. It challenges notice. It invites inquiry. It provokes offense. South of what?—the most natural question in the world. Napoleon's dictum is true, "It is by epithets you govern mankind." Here, as in other things, Rome shows herself above all the rest. She proclaims herself the holy Catholic Church; the church of every age, class and clime, and while we know her influence is chiefly among the Latin peoples, yet who can measure the power she wields by this marvelous name? It appeals to the imagination. It lays the conscience. It proclaims her mission and is a stronghold of her influence.

We are told the change of name will not change us, and therefore will not relieve the difficulty. True it will not change us; but it does not follow that it will not relieve the difficulty. Men are not likely to investigate the history so closely as these brethren suspect unless they are invited to do so by such a challenge as this name gives. Thousands who would hesitate to join a Church South would not hesitate to join an Episcopal Methodist Church. When royalty was overthrown in France, the keeper of a menagerie in Paris had a famous tiger called the Royal Tiger. He promptly changed his name to the National Tiger. Had it remained the Royal Tiger the furious people would have torn it to atoms; but as the National Tiger it became more famous than ever—yet it was the same old tiger still. The incident illustrates the talismanic power of a name. I devoutly wish our leaders were as wise now for God as the Parisian showman was for himself.

The proposed change is very little improvement—not sufficient to justify us in making it. I believed at the time it was a ruse to defeat a change, and thought so until I saw a recent denial from Dr. McFerrin. In diplomacy his genius would have matched Tallyrand or Metternich, and it was just like him to carry his point by strategy when he saw a direct attack would fail. But of course his disclaimer settles the matter. The church will not adopt the proposed name. Episcopal Methodist Church is our proper name; it would describe our polity and distinguish us from every other; and I hope to live to see it adopted. We have suffered much from the intense provincialism which has hitherto controlled the policy of the church. We can enterprise nothing large or lasting until a freer and higher spirit inspires our councils. We are playing at missions. The abortive enthusiasm of the Centenary year, instead of rolling up millions for enlarging the work, spent its futile zeal on local enterprises. The truth must be told the root of the matter is not in us. We are too narrow. We are wanting in the true spirit of Christian aggression. When Gen. Grant witnessed the English drill at Gibraltar he remarked, "They have the swing of conquest." This is what we need. We are content to dwell in our tents, while the gospel demands that we shall go into all the world and all the world is open to our entrance. But this narrowness must give way sooner or later before the more liberal and progressive influences of the age. A church possessing the intelligence and piety of ours will not always handage its eyes from seeing the great world that lies beyond the bounds of its homestead or muffle its trumpet from proclaiming the glad tidings everywhere or insist that the mountain shall come to Mahomet. The logic of time will refute our fallacies and subdue our antipathies, and our beloved church will abandon her entrenchments and move forward to the conquest of the world for Christ. Such is my hope.

To sum up. Since it would do us no harm to drop the term "South" from our name, and might prove an advantage to our work elsewhere, we ought cheerfully to hold our sentiments in obedience to the consideration of practical utility and let the objectionable title go; but as the name offered us now is equally unsuited, we can not accept it, and ought to steadily agitate for a change to Episcopal Methodist Church in the near future. Such are my honest convictions.

"An Evil Thing."

MR. EDITOR: Under the above title the Rev. S. A. Steel publishes a very timely article in the New Orleans Advocate, of July 9, in which he admonishes preachers and people to go forward in God's name and expect the largest results, not waiting for Sam Jones or any other extraordinary instrumentality. German to this, we wish to allude to another custom which has obtained in many places of our Zion, which is that we are to expect God's blessings, revivals of religion and the conversion of souls mainly, if not almost entirely, at certain seasons of the year. A strange nomenclature has come into use in the church, and we hear some people and some preachers talking about the "revival season." We have seen this expression in some of the Advocates as though there was any season of the year in which God is more favorably disposed towards his church and people or more willing to convert souls than at another. Do let this "strange speech" be put away from our Israel. God is always ready and willing to confer the blessings of pardon and peace. "Ye receive not because ye ask not." Would not the conversion of a soul in the winter season be absolutely a surprise in many of our churches? We go through the regular routine of preaching, singing and prayer. We do it in a sort of formal perfunctory manner, and we see and realize no gracious and grand results because we do not labor for and expect them.

"In vain we tune our formal songs,
In vain we strive to rise;
Homannah's language on our tongues,
And our devotion dies."

With the venerable and ascended Bishop Early we always admired the sentiment of that hymn, "How tedious and tasteless these hours," etc., although our beloved and sainted Dr. Summers did not admire all of its theology. How happy and how sweet would be the experience of every soul, how happy the church and how signal and grand would be its victories at all seasons if it lived in the experience and breathed the sentiments of the following verse of the hymn to which allusion is made above:

"His name yields the richest perfume,
And sweeter than music his voice;
His presence dispenses my gloom,
And makes all within me rejoice:
I should were he always thus nigh,
Have nothing to wish or to fear;
No mortal so happy as I,
My summer would last all the year."

When will the church rise up to this high plane and permanently possess and occupy this goodly land! How long will we have to make these annual appeals and extraordinary efforts to awake and arouse a dead or slumbering church and waste the energies in reviving worldly minded church members that ought to be expended for the conversion of sinners! Oh, ye leaders of the church of God, standing at the head of her wavering columns, heed the voice of God to his servant and great leader of his people of old, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

The Brotherhood.

If Bro. Penn will consult our constitution, he will find that what he calls my plan is one of its provisions, and if he will examine the secretary's book, he will discover that while he does not think the plan will succeed at all, it has had a measure of success. This method was suggested by an honored member of our church, Col. W. L. Nugent, who endorsed it with his own name as an honorary member, and I know that three others have followed his example.

In my article, of June 4, I called the attention of our lay brethren to this provision in our constitution and asked those who were able to pay five dollars at the death of a preacher to join us. I then suggested a plan by which those who were not able to pay five dollars could help us in this good and much needed work by paying amounts in easy reach of almost every one. What I did suggest was that five, ten or twenty lay brethren in each pastoral charge club together and make some brother or sister an honorary member of the brotherhood. If five club together it would only cost them one dollar each at the death of a minister; if ten, it would only cost fifty cents; if twenty, it would cost twenty-five cents.

While I can not speak with such certainty of this plan as does Bro. Penn of his, I can say that to me it seems the best we can devise. It not only has the merit of being sanctioned by our constitution and bringing the liability assumed so low that almost any one can afford it, but it makes the work of an unpaid secretary possible.

The party named to the secretary would receive notice of dues when a death occurred and would then have sixty days to collect from the brethren helping to pay the five dollars and forward it to the secretary. But if you secure one thousand one dollar members and have all their names on our books, it would require more time and labor to collect and receipt for it than any one could afford to give without compensation. Finally, my brethren, let us not speak nor think of devising plans to relieve ourselves of the mournful pleasure of paying an amount to the widow and children of a brother with whom we have entered into so sacred a compact. He went to heaven trusting us, as we shall soon go trusting others. If the sacred duty requires self-denial in us, those who minister to ours will have like experiences.

Help these Women.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sabbath we assisted the good women of Grand Cane to reorganize their missionary society auxiliary to the Conference Missionary Society. They first organized in May, 1884, and have done a good year's work; and now reorganize with thirty-seven members by appointing the following officers for the ensuing year, viz: Mrs. M. J. Spearman, president; Mrs. M. H. Williams and Mrs. Jennie Hicks, vice-presidents; Mrs. H. P. Pipes, recording secretary; Mrs. E. E. Crawford, treasurer, and Miss Eva McClanahan, corresponding secretary. Mrs. H. A. Scott, Mrs. E. A. McClanahan and Miss M. Lula Wagner were appointed a committee to secure speakers for their public meetings. These officers seem resolved to improve on what they have already done. Their zeal increases in proportion to their knowledge of the importance of their work. I am satisfied from what I have seen of the working of the Woman's Missionary Society that if we could once get the women of the church fully awake to the fact of their ability to promote the missionary work, we would soon realize more money than we do by our usual spasmodic efforts. Bro. Parvin preached on the subject of camp meetings. His style was purely Parvianian, and he resolved to practice what he preaches by holding a camp meeting in the city of Grand Cane.

The prospect is good for an abundant crop in all this North-west Louisiana.

Protracted and camp meetings have commenced in good earnest. If the editor ever expects to visit this region, now is his time.

J. P.
MASSFIELD, LA., July 14, 1885.

From Arcadia, La.

The people of Vernon circuit and Bro. Wright are mutually pleased and working together for the Master. We think that there is in this promise of a successful year for pastor and flock. There will soon be purchased a suitable parsonage, the Quarterly Conference having authorized a committee with that stirring brother, Dosa Lane, at its head to "procure a parsonage forthwith." There was a very large attendance of official members at the third Quarterly Conference, held at Wesley Chapel on the camp ground. A number of people came out to preaching both on Saturday and Sunday. The love-feast was well up to the standard, and was, indeed, as Bro. Wright expressed it, a "feast of love." The collection for foreign missions and church extension was, in cash and subscriptions, considered good, nearly eighty-five dollars, which amount is a liberal response to the appeal made. We can not, of course, forecast the future; but, from present indications, the preacher in charge of Vernon circuit, backed by his willing and generous people, will find it an easy matter to bring up to Conference a full financial report. This is one of the circuits on which there are good prayer and class meetings, which have been kept up for years. On reaching home I found on my table a letter from Bro. Sheppard stating that his meeting at Athens "closed last (Thursday) night and the interest increased to the close of the meeting. Our congregations were unusually large. The church was stirred to the bottom and came squarely to the front. Penitential tears flowed down the cheeks of old hardened sinners, mourners were comforted, and I received ten into the church, every one of them first class and five of them young men of promise. I trust we will get a preacher out of them." It is cheering to receive letters telling of Zion's travail and the birth of souls into God's family. May the Father send the fire of love and the agony for souls upon our preachers and people everywhere, and may he call into his glorious ministry numbers of young men willing to "endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ." As elsewhere, so in the Homer district, there is work waiting for young men of that stamp.

A Note from Presiding Elder Ramsey.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from a two weeks' trip to that portion of the Winona district lying in the Yazoo Valley. I find the church advancing at every point visited. At Grapeland we had an interesting quarterly meeting; three persons received into the church. Sunday night commenced at Minter City, and when I left on Thursday ten had been added to the church, and the work increasing in interest every day. At Sharkey they have commenced building a twelve hundred dollar church on the ground where a drinking saloon formerly stood. At Emmaville also a movement is on foot to build. Bro. Futrell is doing a fine work in that charge. Spent last Saturday and Sunday in Greenwood charge with Bro. Hoskins. At Greenbrier I found a people here ready for the gospel. I expect to hear of a good revival at that place under their zealous pastor. The Lord seems to be answering the earnest prayers made at our District Conference for a revival all over the district.

On the change of name of the church I vote, No! I do not believe there is any necessity for it.

Fatal Faith-Cure Fanaticism.

Bishop Taylor, of Africa, gives an account of the death of Rev. Charles L. Miller, one of the missionaries who accompanied him to the Dark Continent. He refused to take medicine of any kind and insisted upon a cure by miracle. We are glad that Bishop Taylor puts himself on record as against such fanaticism. Without further comment we give his letter in full:

It becomes my painful duty to inform you that dear Charles L. Miller has passed away from among men to his glorious home with God and the angels. He was holy and harmless and making good progress in the study of the Portuguese language, and I believe, had he lived, would have made a grand success as a missionary in this needy country. He had a fine constitution and good health till the ninth of April. Then he had a mild attack of African fever, such an attack as is almost invariably relieved and removed by one good sweat and a dose of quinine—God's remedy for it in this country—his ordinary way of curing all persons here attacked by fever. Nearly half my party had been attacked, and all quickly relieved except three young men who refused all human agency or medicine, and insisted that God should cure them by direct miraculous power in answer to prayer. Dear Charles was one of them. The fever burned away at his vitals for sixteen days without even a teaspoonful of hot tea to start a perspiration. We have three good physicians in our party. Dr. Johnson reasoned with him, and told him he would certainly die if he did not take something to break the fever. Charles replied: "Well, then, I die, for I won't take any medicine." I pleaded with him as a father, but he made no reply. At midnight, on April 25, Charles said: "Oh, Bro. Whitney, I am choking. Go and tell Dr. Summers to come quickly and give me medicine." His fever yielded promptly to the ordinary treatment, but had done its fatal work before the treatment began. The recuperative power of his system was gone, and for twelve days he lay in utter prostration of body and delirium of mind. At half-past eight A. M., May 7, he died. The other two young men referred to refused medicine long enough to keep them down about six weeks, but took needful remedies in time to save their lives, by the mercy and power of God. They are still invalid, but expect that they will recover.

WHAT LIFE HATH.

Life hath its barren years,
When blossoms fall unheeded down,
When ripened fruitage falls to crown
The summer fall, when Nature's frown
Looks only on our tears.

Life hath its faithless days,
The golden promise of the morn,
That seemed for light and gladness born,
Meant only nothingness and morn,
Unhushed harp instead of praise.

Life hath its valleys, too,
Where we must wait with vain regret,
With mourning clothes, with wild rain wet,
Toward sunlight hopes that seem must set,
All quenched in plying dew.

Life hath its harvest moons,
Its dewed corn and purple-weighted vine,
Its gathered sheaves of grain, the blessed sign
Of plentiful ripening, bread and pure, rich wine,
Full hearts for harvest time.

Life hath its hopes fulfilled;
Its glad fruitings, its blest answered prayer,
Sweeter for waiting long, whose holy air,
Indrawn to silent souls, breathes forth its rare,
Grand speech by joy distilled.

Life hath its Tabor heights;
Its lofty mounts of heavenly recognition,
Where unveiled glories flash to earth in union
Of love and truth and clear fruition,
Hail! mount of all delights.

Conscience.

BY REV. J. B. A. ARRENS, D. D.

(A sermon preached at the Seashore Camp Ground and published by request.)

TEXT: "Having a good conscience."—1 Peter III, 16.

The liberty of conscience is invaluable. It smiles at tyrant's rage. It is free notwithstanding the clanging chains of despotism. No man ever suffered incarceration or decapitation for conscience's sake. Conscience having done its work, principle is begotten. It is after this principle has been asserted and its prescribed course of duty has been pursued that man can be called to an account and, perchance, be doomed to suffer. Conscience itself is free and untrammelled. Prison bars and the executioner's sword can not influence it for weal or for woe.

The etymology of the word "conscience" is very expressive. It is a compound of con, to know, and science, con-sci-ence, with. That would make it joint knowledge—a superadded testimony in any given matter which presents itself for cognizance in the relatively circumscribed or boundless realm of knowledge. The romantic school of theology held that this superadded testimony was in a certain sense the work of the Holy Spirit bearing more or less distinctly witness with our spirits, either approving or disapproving our character and action. Without the Holy Spirit's witness, pro or con, our knowledge would be purely intellectual; but with this witness the knowledge of the moral quality of character and actions is added.

Idiomatically, we often stultify ourselves by calling the really good conscience bad, and vice versa. When a conscience stings, bites, pierces, cuts, burns, afflicts, torments, it is good, for it operates healthily and performs its proper functions well. A conscience which afflicts not may be very bad. Its non-affliction may result from its dormancy or even seariness.

What is conscience? It has been called heaven's viceroys. If that be so, then there are thousands of viceroys even more potent than that chief of imbeciles, poor Tewfik, Viceroy of Egypt, who is an expressive personification of the unregenerate man. The good he would do he does not; but the evil which he abhors he commits. Certainly, conscience has regal authority; but in many instances, alas! that authority is not from God. Lord Dufferin, Viceroy of India, scrupulously pursues a course prescribed by the British government; but the consciences of most men pay little, if any, heed to the requirements of Heaven.

We often err when we claim that parties who, according to our estimate, are decidedly wicked are utterly conscienceless. What our conscience condemns the conscience of the supposed wicked people may approve. When a Hindoo mother throws her infant into the Ganges to be eaten by the voracious alligator you say, "That is cruel murder; but that mother has by that very infanticide quieted her conscience. With her sacrifice she appeased her god. Not making the sacrifice, conscience would have mercilessly stung, bitten and burnt her. When the widow of the oriental chief yields to autemism, burning herself to death on the funeral pile of her departed lord, no Hindoo will declare that barbarous act suicide. On the other hand, widows who shrink from the task, preferring life to a painful death, may suffer much from a condemning conscience. On the same principle a thousand of heinous crimes are committed without any compunctions of conscience.

Conscience is the standard measure of the moral quality of our character and actions. But standards differ. Take, for example, the standard measure of liquids, of weights, of distance. It differs in different governments. An English mile is but one-fifth of a German mile. An Italian pound weighs less than the Russian. The French gallon is smaller than the Austrian. The standard of currency also differs. The American has his dollar; the Briton, his shilling; the Latin nations, their franc; the Tanton, his mark. The intrinsic value of these coins differs materially. But shall I on that account call the Frenchman penniless because he has not a dollar in his possession? Or dare anyone call you impenniless because your pocket is devoid of a franc or a mark? The same applies to conscience. Men have conscience and act conscientiously; but the consciences are wrong. At least, as standards, they differ from the standard of high heaven. They show the impress of the nether world.

Right here we find the strongest argument in favor of the necessity of a Divine revelation. Who shall show us any good? What mortal can arrogate to himself the right to fix a standard measure for my character and actions? If another has that right, I, too, claim it for myself. Ten men view any given matter from ten different standpoints, in ten different lights; have hence ten different views, resulting in ten different principles and boundless lines of duty. All aim at the same goal; but all go in different, some even in opposite, directions. And all this in good conscience.

This confusion God prevented by making known his will, saying, authoritatively: This thou shalt do, and this thou shalt leave undone; this is right and this is wrong. The Lord hath spoken, the omniscient has revealed the proper course for mortal man. The Creator has given a lamp to the feet of his creature. The statutes of the Lord are the sign-posts for our guidance. Our consciences must be trained in accordance with the teachings of the Bible. The Bible must be read, its contents heeded, its precepts followed. Yes, blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord, and who in his law doth meditate both day and night. Our consciences are heaven's viceroys when they are implicitly subject to the laws of heaven. Conscience operates in a three-fold manner:

1. It prescribes our course, marks a line of duty. Is, hence, director. Thus when Joseph was tempted to sin conscience protested, and he yielded. King Saul, too, was directed by his conscience no longer to persecute David after the latter had given proof of marvelous magnanimity; but he heeded not its dictation. Your conscience has pointed out to you your sin, your hypocrisy, worldliness, lukewarmness, and directs you to reject and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. You may obey like Joseph or continue to sin like Saul. Joseph attained to honor and station; Saul committed suicide.

2. Conscience, next, is a witness, a witness of exact knowledge—one who can not be intimidated or bribed. It witnessed against Iscariot, and he confessed, terrified; I have betrayed innocent blood. It witnessed to Job that he had walked in his integrity before the Lord. Iscariot committed suicide and Job attained to prosperity and happiness. You are either guilty or guiltless, and there is an eye and ear witness to prove it. Denial or excuse will not avail.

3. Conscience, lastly, acts as judge, whose decision is in keeping with the circumstances and final. In the case of David it rendered judgment, and, with broken spirit and contrite heart, he lamented: I have sinned. It condemned Felix when Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. Felix trembled, but did not repent. In your case, too, sentence has been passed. Whosoever believeth not is condemned already. Will you confess and repent like David or, like Felix, procrastinate and be lost? What though you tremble and even lament on the very brink of despair? It is the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanses from all sin.

As to its condition, conscience is either dormant or awake. Sins lull it into sleep. Sins are the soothing syrups and lullabies to conscience. Joseph's brethren furnish a good example. Long-continued jealousy and envy, this satanic vermin, rampant in thousands of hearts, fitted them for the crime of fratricide. Finally their brother is sold into slavery. In their downward course the circumstance with which to deceive their reverend father followed as a matter of course. But, lo! how rudely their consciences were waked up from their lamentable sleep when they discover that their brother is alive and holds the reins of the Egyptian government! Trembling for their lives, which they had forfeited, they declare themselves willing to become their brother's slaves. But see in Joseph the humble child of God, sitting at the feet of Jesus, whose conscience is wide awake! Fear not, says he to his brethren, trembling for their lives; fear not, for I am to you in the place of God—or, as a man of God rendered it: Fear not, for I fear God.

Herod's conscience had been lamentably dormant when he consented to the murder of him of whom Christ said that of all men born of women there was none greater than he. Without trembling hand he signs the order for John the Baptist's decapitation; without horror he beholds the dead man's head on the charger. But, lo! conscience makes cowards of us all. It awakes in the voluptuous king. When he subsequently heard of Christ's miracles his awakening conscience leads him to believe and say: It is John whom I beheaded. Who can say how often his guilty conscience may have presented that ghastly sight, John's gory head, to his terrified vision in the lone hours of the night, depriving him of rest, disturbing his sleep!

You who without compunctions of conscience can indulge in sin, desecrate the Sabbath, swear, use intoxicating liquor; you who can lie, cheat, deceive, defraud, steal without conscience biting, stinging; you who can indulge in pride, envy, hate, revenge without the condemnation of conscience, you have a conscience sadly asleep. Oh! that the Holy Spirit, with stentorian voice, would cry into your soul: Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

Conscience either condemns or approves. A condemning conscience is one which stings, bites, burns, pierces, cuts, fills with terror, horror, with despair, with hell. We call it remorse. Rightly that grand old Roman, Cicero, says: "You speak of furies who kindle consuming flames in the bosom of the lost. These furies are nothing more than the recollection of our wicked deeds." A dying man suffered agony from remorse. He asked his friends if they knew the true meaning of the word "remorse." Had Webster's definition read; had it written in black ink on a large sheet of white paper; had it underscored; had it rewritten in large capital letters. "It does not convey the meaning," he cried; "it is more than the word expresses. It is the fire of hell burning in the soul. A huge devil fans the flame. My sins are the fuel." A condemning conscience bites like an aspen; it stings as if prostrated on a bed of needles. An artist was engaged to paint a guilty conscience. He painted a galloping horse pursued by a swarm of angry bees, and added the subscription, "You'll not escape us." How expressive and true! Like the box constructor, remorse twines itself around the guilty soul, filling it with unspeakable agony. Yes, remorse is the worm which dieth not. It is a fire whose smoke ascendeth for ever and ever.

An approving conscience is one freed from guilt by the atoning blood of Christ. The term "good conscience" is a synonym with the peace of God which passeth all understanding. Sins forgiven, God reconciled. We can say: Abba, Father. An approving conscience secures for us heaven on earth. It would be heaven in hell. What of affliction and woe; what of suffering and death! With a good conscience

"Pain is pleasure,
With God's favor loss is gain."
With a conscience void of offense toward God and man, we are truly happy. No matter what betide we are held as a lion.

Dear reader, you live on the brink of a crater. There is a volcano within. It is now slumbering. You build bowers, plant flowers, sing songs, rest in ease, deem yourself secure. Beware! Soon there will be ominous mutterings as of distant thunder; soon smoke and fire will enshroud you. Despair and suicide follow. No matter how callous and hardened you may be, how impenetrable and invulnerable you may deem yourself to be, be sure your sins will find you out. Your cunning, your skill, your wisdom, your money, your friends, your dash, your arrogance, your hypocrisy will not shield you against a guilty conscience. The archer is within. Our memory is the bow; our sins, the arrows. How sadly full is the monster quiver of our lives with arrows, poisonous and sharp! Some are bleeding from many wounds.

But in the blood of Christ we have an antidote against the poison which these arrows imparted. A look to the brazen serpent cured the bitten Israelites. A believing look to the Lamb of God will heal the soul and cleanse conscience from the putrefying sores of guilt. Look and be saved! Look now, look well and live! Blessed be God, we can rejoice with the apostle, having a good conscience—a good conscience after the manner of John Wesley, who confessed:

"I the chief of sinners am,
But Jesus died for me."

Judge Gunby's Reply to Rev. J. J. Billingsley.

MR. EDITOR: On the second page of your issue of the sixteenth instant I find an open letter addressed to me by Rev. J. J. Billingsley, of Minden, La., on the subject of the haccalaureate address which I had the honor to deliver before the Minden Female College on June 18. The kind and considerate tone of the letter, as well as the high character of your valuable paper, which reaches so many intelligent and estimable readers, would prompt me to reply through your columns to my old friend and colleague; but I had not determined to publish my address in pamphlet form; so that my propositions and my arguments may be scrutinized by all who are willing to send ten cents to E. H. Kells, Monroe, La., for a copy of said pamphlet.

I am led to this course because I do not wish to engage in a controversy until it is known and understood exactly what I did say—a consummation not easily arrived at by a public speaker. For instance, Mr. Billingsley sat on the stage while I was speaking and visibly expressed dissent, as I am informed, from the positions taken by me during the progress of my speech. Yet he evidently misunderstood and mistook the first principles and purposes of my effort judging from his reference to "holiness and sin" and "violations of God's laws." I expressly excluded all consideration of such matters from my address. I stated at the outset that I should not invade the domain of the theologian—a task for which neither my studies nor inclinations fit me. I spoke not of religious duties, not of Christian virtues, but of moral duties, of social virtues. I may be wrong, but I understand that all ministers draw a distinction between religion and morality. The two are not synonymous in the minds of the theologians; but the same doctrine exists to-day which was preached when the poet sang:

"Morality, thou deadly hane,
Thy tens of thousands thou hast slain!
Vain is his hope whose stay and trust is
In moral mercy, truth and justice!"

In accordance with this doctrine I confined myself, as I had a right to do, to an examination of the rewards and punishments sure to follow from the observation or violation of the laws of society, the laws of nature or the laws of individual consciousness. Without going into definitions, I simply referred to right or wrong in the usual acceptance of those terms. In other words, I regarded that as right which a man knows or ignorantly neglects to know to be right.

The position assumed by me is an old one both in profane and sacred systems of thought. It is imbedded in the literature, creeds, traditions, mythologies, philosophies and religions of every age and nation. Was I not right to enforce its truth upon graduates? What could be a greater incentive to right living? That there are many seeming exceptions to the rule I readily admit, and my thesis can not be demonstrated from observation or statistics. But it is the yearning of every true heart to see justice done in this world, and it is the highest business of society and individuals to make that aspiration a reality, which it certainly will become when society reaches its "perfect day." It is my every-day duty, as a judge, to do what little I can, in my humble ability, to bring about the universal reign of justice among men, and in furtherance of the same object I made my feeble, but earnest address. If I erred, surely it was on "virtue's side."

But, Mr. Editor, while I beg to rest my doctrine on the arguments advanced in the oration which will be published, without further discussion, I would like to submit to my learned and reverend interlocutor whether or not my doctrine is supported by the Bible. Is not the whole of the Old Testament substantially a commentary on the earthly rewards and punishments promised and actually meted out to men by a just God? If we turn to the Psalms of David—that wonderful treasure of the poetry, philosophy, religion and emotions of a wonderful people—are we not taught that the wicked are terribly punished and the righteous are triumphantly rewarded in this life; that it is God's providence which covers the hills with flocks and the valleys with corn; that wealth and riches are in the house of the good and desolation in the house of the ungodly? "I have been young and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." (Psalms xxxvi, 25.)

"I have seen, the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Yet he passed away, and he was not." (Psalms xxxvi, 35.) Turning to the Proverbs of Solomon we find the same doctrine enforced, and when he urges the highest excellence of wisdom he exclaims: "Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand are riches and honor." Are these not earthly rewards?

Nor does the New Testament teach a different doctrine. The sermon on the mount, quoting from that wonderful thirty-seventh Psalm, declares: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Again, in the gospel of St. Mark x, 29, we find this unmistakable language: "And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, but he shall receive a hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life."

What do these and many other similar passages and examples teach if it is not that even in this life the righteous are rewarded and the wicked punished? I ask my friend, in all seriousness, to answer whether it is a good Christian doctrine that justice is postponed to the next life?

Submitting this question, I beg to conclude this response with the statement that the highest social, as well as the brightest Christian, virtue is that "charity" which, in the eloquent language of St. Paul, "thinketh no evil" and "is not puffed up."

Very respectfully,

A. A. GUNBY.

The Great Iron Deposit in North Louisiana Near the V., S. and P. R. R.

MR. EDITOR: Among the many interests brought to light by the late Exposition, there are none, perhaps, of more importance to our State than this. Mr. Kimball has had an eye to this deposit for years, and Mr. Enderly's visit to that region enabled him to bring to light this hidden wealth. I think our capitalists should look immediately and well to this interest; for if they do not, very soon capitalists from a distance will invest and the net earnings will go to build up other States than our own. Doubtless the building up of a great iron interest in our State would go far to infuse life and vigor into every department of industry in our midst. The ore found on

Mr. Kimball's place is reported by experts to be very rich and of just such component parts as will make it easily worked into either first-class iron or steel. There is a vast region of heavily timbered land connected with it, so that charcoal can be used for smelting at a nominal cost. Mr. Kimball proposes to place this interest in the hands of a company on very fair terms. And while iron manufacturing interests seem to be somewhat overdone, still with the very unusual advantages of so much surface ore, of such great excellence, the proximity to market, the easy means of transportation and the vast amount of timber at hand for charcoal, it seems to me it is quite an inviting field for capital.

Mr. Barker, (miner and metallurgist), as an expert, says: "I unhesitatingly recommend this estate as a good point to locate iron works, believing that if placed under proper management it will become the center of a great iron industry."

NEW ORLEANS, Louisiana.

N. B.—I append a copy of certificate from Dr. Albricht, mint of the United States, at New Orleans, La., Melter and Refiner's Department.

N. F. W.

MAY 16, 1885.

I certify that I have this day analyzed a sample of iron ore for Mr. H. D. Kimball, received from Mr. Edw. Enderly, commissioner for collecting minerals for Louisiana, and found it to consist of Peroxide of Iron (Hematite).....70 per cent.

Quartz and .....30 per cent.

It contains no sulphur of sulphates, nor any phosphates, and is therefore a good ore for iron.

Change of Name.

MR. EDITOR: In all my church papers, except the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, I have seen something said, pro and con, on the subject of the change of the name of our church. And by asking space for this article be assured I do not wish to distract your peace or provoke controversy, but simply to tell you and your readers—many of whom are my personal friends—just how I see it on the border. It is not a subject which should in any antagonistic sense be discussed. We want the facts as they are apart from all prejudice, and then to work and vote for the best interest of the common cause of our blessed Christ.

The Annual Conferences must vote on the question. I believe the majority would be overwhelming if the last General Conference had adopted the report of the committee, "Episcopal Methodist Church."—We are shut up, however, to vote on "Methodist Episcopal Church in America." This was the substitute adopted by the General Conference, and is honestly believed by men who were on the Conference floor at the time to have been a ruse to defeat the proposition altogether. Whether it was or not does not matter, and I am not sure but that it is after all the best name we could adopt. It is the old church name. We have a right to it. Let us adopt it; and, if our brethren of the "Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America" do not like it, they have only to blame themselves for putting it off so we might put it on. The distinction will be sufficient for all legal purposes and that is all we need.

My first reason for wanting the word "South" eliminated from our church name is that it is now a misnomer. Originally it was true the "Methodist Episcopal Church in the South." Judge Nelson, of the Supreme Court, in deciding the church property question, says: "The same authority which founded the church in 1784 has divided it and established two separate and independent organizations, occupying the place of the old one." He fully recognized in the decision that we were still "Methodist Episcopal Church," but must be designated "in the North" and "in the South." Our fathers did wisely in causing the division in 1844. Not to have done so would have been to lose to a large extent our influence over the entire South. We are proud of the history we have made and believe as firmly in the principles underlying our actions as ever, but we must not be less wise than our fathers were; we must adapt ourselves to the growing demands upon us just as they did in 1844.

I want it eliminated in the second place because it is sectional, not because it is geographical. I grant that to adopt the name proposed we have only changed one geographical name for another, but we are rid of any sectional taint or prejudice which may attach to us. Of course we disclaim any political significance in the word "South," but it is with great difficulty that you can convince a man of opposite political preferences of this fact.

Our mission is to the world. To all men of all political preferences we boast of great success in the past and say we have done well and urge that as a reason why we should let the name stand just as it is. But can any man who is able to look the facts in the face just as they are, without prejudice, say we have come fully up to the measure of our opportunities in the land where we have legitimately operated? Look at the burden first. Territory legitimately belonging to the Southern branch of the church. I was told a few days ago by an old man who was for a number of years a member of the Missouri Conference that we are not to-day relatively as strong as we were twenty-five years ago. Why is this so? Because we have been offensive by reason of the word South attached to our church name to the majority of the incoming Methodist people. There are important towns and cities in the States of Missouri where we scarcely have an existence, some places do not exist at all, where the other branch of Methodism is strong and flourishing. I am answered, "We are holding our own and that is as much as we could expect to do." But I say we are not "holding our own" taking into consideration the fact that we once occupied the entire ground, and if we could have made ourselves unobjectionable to the people coming to us we would have assimilated them. To say that we are better off without than we would be with a man who would object to us because we have the word South to our church name is to betray a want of information lamentable in the extreme or a very strong prejudice. They have as much right to their sectional or political views as we, and are by them no more unfit for the kingdom of Christ than we. The same sort of unholy prejudice prompts us to retain the sectional word. As a branch of the church of Jesus Christ we can not afford to circumscribe our power for good in this way. What I ask, I leave we gaze beyond the territory legitimately our own? I am aware there has been a great deal of connectional puffing about our large success in the West and North-west; but, brethren, I ask you look at the figures and facts. I can not go over the whole field. Just look at our nearest neighbor, Kansas, where we once occupied the whole ground, and to-day we only have a name to live. The Northern Methodist Church has four strong Conferences in the State. They are strongly entrenched in every place. We have in the entire State, so I am informed, permanent organizations but in three of her towns or cities. One of them is in Wyandott, just over the river from us, and I know we have only a name to live there. Some one will say I should not have written these facts. I do it because they are facts, and I want you brethren in the South to know them. It is urged that the difficulties to success, if the name were changed, would be just as great. This might be true for a few years, but afterwards it would be forgotten. Our children would not feel about this matter as we do. The common sentiment of the people is broadening and a sectional name to any church is an incubus it can not carry without great detriment. My last reason for wanting the word "South" eliminated is I do not want organic union. Eliminate the word South and perpetuate a separate ecclesiastical existence, retain it and have organic union; or, that is what is absorption.

J. W. LOWMAN.

Kavanaugh College.

In the absence of those legally authorized by the Conference to report rather than see the whole matter go by default, as a friend and neighbor to the college, I take the subject in hand. The commencement exercises began on Sunday, June 28, and closed on Monday, July 3. The sermon was by Rev. J. E. Thigpen, of Hazlehurst. Text: Job 46. It was appropriate to the occasion, making religious knowledge superior to all other knowledge. Monday and the two succeeding days were spent in examination of the various departments. The examinations were rigid, and the pupils bore themselves well, and the patrons and officers of the college were highly delighted with the virgin session of Kavanaugh, placing it in the front rank with older institutions. The primary and intermediate departments gave their entertainments on Tuesday night, consisting of recitations, music and calisthenics, and they all acquitted themselves with much credit. The collegiates entertained a large audience on Wednesday night with music and recitations, electing with an original drama entitled "Kavanaugh," which evidently showed the ear marks of the president and was highly received and enjoyed. On Thursday, at eleven A. M., the immense church was filled by an appreciative audience to listen to the essays and orations. After prayer by Rev. W. Harmon, Miss Lella Beart, representing the freshman class, read a very interesting essay on "Lo, the poor Indian." She was followed by Miss Mahol F. Craven, the essayist of the sophomore class. Her subject, "Mary Stuart," and with historical faithfulness, but in her own original style, reviewed the life of this unfortunate queen. John E. Hoffman, major of the sophomore class, acquitted himself with marked distinction. His subject was "Influence." This young gentleman is a native of Summit, Miss., and by his exemplary Christian life will exert an influence for good upon the follows. W. P. Spinkman, the orator for the faculty, selected "Kavanaugh College" as his subject, and he profited from the evidences already developed of a wonderful success for this new institution. Will T. Sparkman, in his address to the undergraduates, had for his subject, "Mississippi Present, Past and Future," and gave evidence of a strong and vigorous mind. The graduating exercises took place on Friday, at eleven A. M., with an increased audience. The graduates were Misses M. J. O'Mara and S. R. Ball, and the degree of "bachelor of Letters" was conferred on them. Miss O'Mara's essay was "Edgar Poe."

ORIGIN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

REV. W. L. O. HENNING.

THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1885.

The first bridge ever built across the Jordan was opened to the public a few months since. From remotest times it has only been crossed by means of a ford. This bridge is near the mouth of the river where it flows into the Dead Sea.

An exchange suggests that Christian women will be pleased with the rendering in the Revision of Psalm lxviii, 11. In the version to which we are accustomed it is, "The Lord gave the word: great was the company of those that published it." In the Revision it is, "The Lord gave the word: The women that publish the tidings are a great host."

The following item is from the Christian Neighbor:

Mrs. Sophia Price, who died recently in Maryland, bequeathed $200 to St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Baltimore, to be applied to the relief of the poor of that church; $200 to the trustees for that church; $200 to the Sunday-school; $500 for foreign missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; the residue of her estate to her niece and the trustees of St. Paul's Church, half to each.

Our Southern Methodist Churches in Atlanta, Ga., are enjoying large prosperity. The following we find in a correspondent's notes to the Wesleyan:

Last Monday morning we found that the nine churches in the city had received fully $450 by application from the world. Trinity has about 1,400 members, and has received 150 new members; besides more than 50 by certificate. First Church has received more than 70 by application; St. Paul's, 50; Paynes, Grace and West End, 40 each; Evans, about 30; Sixth, 13, and City Mission, 15. The Lord has blessed us gloriously. Not more than 50 of these are the direct result of Dr. Munhall's meeting.

The Vicksburg papers announce that Rev. R. S. Woodward has started a mission church in the southern part of the city, and, in connection with Bro. W. G. Paxton, has organized a Methodist Sunday-school there. That looks like progress. Churches must keep pace with growing populations. And it often happens in our larger towns that many members will not affiliate with the congregation. Their reasons may be frivolous, but are nevertheless potent. Another organization will hold and utilize that class. If there is prospect of permanency and development, the second church ought to be projected early. As will be seen by a note from Bro. Black, Meridian has "taken time by the forelock," and we shall expect like news from Jackson at no distant day.

The following pleasant personal we find in the Southern Christian Advocate:

Methodist preachers' sons are occupying a high position in the educational work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We mention the following names of educators of growing reputation: Rev. W. F. Tillet, A. M., C. F. Smith, Ph. D., W. M. Baskerville, Ph. D., Vanderbilt University; Prof. Blackwell, Randolph-Macon College; Prof. Woodward, Gamewell and Littleton, Wofford College; John F. Bonnell, A. M., Emory College; Morgan Galloway, Jr., A. M., South-western University; Rev. George W. Walker, A. M., president of Paine Institute; James H. Kirkland, Ph. D., S. C., now studying in Berlin.

To which we add the names of Prof. Mood, in South-western University, and Prof. Moulner, of Centenary College. If we were to extend inquiry into female colleges, the number would be largely increased.

How to form a library is an important question to a young student. A distinguished author has commended the following rules to be observed in beginning the collection of books:

1. Set apart a fixed sum, weekly or monthly, as the case may be, in proportion to your income, and spend that and no more for books.
2. Always devote a portion of your money in acquiring works of reference.
3. Never buy a worthless book or edition.
4. Take care not to buy too many books of one class.
5. Do not, at least until you have a fair show of books, be deluded into buying sets of an author.
6. Do not spend too much on magazines.
7. Be particular as to the binding of your books.
8. Keep a catalogue of your books, entering in pencil inside each the date of purchase and the cost, and in the catalogue all particulars as to loans.
9. Take care to read what you buy, and buy only what you will read.

Editorial Correspondence.

Attending two District Conferences in four days, held over three hundred miles apart, necessitated a liberal patronage of the railway carriage and for two nights a disagreeable economy of sleep. How rapid is the itinerant's transit from point to point now as compared with our fathers! It was a heroic and honorable achievement for the early Methodist preacher to travel a circuit two hundred miles long and make a monthly visit to each appointment. But that would be sluggish movement in our time. The railroad has made us all neighbors and brought the ends of a continent together. And the church is benefited thereby. All agencies and inventions of our modern civilization are subsidized by the Holy Spirit for the enlargement of Christ's kingdom.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

To attend this Conference, held at old Cane Ridge Church, in Jefferson county, we went up to Jackson Wednesday night, and on the early morning of Thursday started westward by the "Little J." railroad. Along the way we noted a most favorable crop prospect, and the face of the farmer wore a smile of hope. From present indications the harvest yield of the Gulf States will be larger than for years. After an hour's delay at Harrison we boarded a freight train on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas for Hays' Station, six miles distant. Arriving at an unexpected hour, we landed and looked about in vain for a chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof. But a short walk of a half mile brought us to the church, and in time to enjoy a sumptuous, old-fashioned dinner on the ground. The Conference had organized in the morning with the presiding elder, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, in the chair. Our old friend hasn't increased any in avoirdupois, nor has he lost any of his well-known accuracy and clearness of statement, consecration to duty and mastery of business details. Bro. N. J. Vick, of Vicksburg, was elected secretary—a position he has held acceptably before. There was a measurably good attendance of the delegates, and the Conference proceedings were full of interest. The brethren were swift to hear and not slow to speak. The reports were altogether encouraging as to the spiritual state of the church.

In two places notably—Wesley Chapel, Natchez, and Vicksburg—there had been large gatherings. Most of the pastors regretted a decline in family religion and the small number of active laymen to assist in the social meetings of the church. One pastor said not a single male member in his church would offer a prayer in public. This is a matter for grave concern, and should indicate the wisdom of returning to the early Methodist method of making young members "take up the cross" at once. The first day of our espousal to Christ ought to mark the beginning of an active, continuous life-service. A week of timid shrinking from duty at that time will generally determine a life of negative church membership.

The report on temperance presented by Rev. R. S. Woodward had a clear, resonant ring, and was adopted by a rousing vote. It created a little breeze of friendly discussion, but was passed at length with practical unanimity. Rev. T. C. Bradford, president of Port Gibson Female College, was chairman of the Committee on Religious Literature, and reported resolutions cordially endorsing the editorial and business management of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. For the kindly words of brethren and their renewed pledges of hearty co-operation we are profoundly grateful. The name of President Bradford reminds us that the Port Gibson pastor reported that every young lady at the college last term became a church member. Such a statement deserves emphatic and prominent mention. Our colleges must educate Christians.

While attending the Conference we were a guest of Bro. Thomas H. Watkins, son of the lamented Dr. W. H. Watkins. His brother, Rev. A. F. Watkins, serving a neighboring pastorate, resides with him this year under the old, historic family roof-tree. They live in the very house where their honored father was born, and which was built by their grandfather in 1809. A venerable, sacred structure! Around it gather many Methodist memories. The timbers are seemingly yet as sound and the building as substantial as it was fifty years ago. How many chieftains of Mississippi Methodism have found a welcome there! We felt indeed that the place was sacred—that the spirits of the fathers hovered near. With grateful appreciation for home-like hospitality and unnumbered kindnesses from all the brethren, we left on Friday afternoon for the way of Vicksburg and Meridian, and compelled an all-night ride on the cars. Just as the morning sun was coming out of the eastern gates, rejoicing as a young man to run a race, we arrived at Hattiesburg. The sun was not visible, however, for heavy clouds darkened the heavens and poured out rain in copious measure.

After breakfasting at the Johnson House, kept by our old Hinds county friend, Bro. William Johnson, in company with President McVoy we reported at the church. Bishop Keener having failed to attend as was hoped, Rev. B. S. Rayner, the presiding elder, occupied the chair, and Rev. R. J. Jones sat at the secretary's table. The reports were all in from the several pastors, which we understood were generally quite cheering. The Nehemiah spirit is abroad in the district. Within the past several years church property has increased fifty per cent. in value, and a number of new churches are in process of erection. A committee was appointed to consider the question of titles to church property, and made a report that will doubtless stimulate the brethren to greater carefulness and diligence in that matter. The Conference strongly endorsed this ADVOCATE, gave the editor a patient hearing and a handsome list of cash subscribers. President McVoy, of East Mississippi Female College, spoke to edification on the subject of Christian education generally and the interests of his college specially. The institution at Meridian prospers, and promises to do so more and more.

On Sunday there were immense congregations. From far and near the people came, and by every conceivable mode of conveyance. At eleven o'clock this editor was commissioned to preface his sermon with a collection to complete the large new church at that place. About two hundred and twenty-five dollars were secured, which, with other amounts available, will be ample to finish and furnish the spacious and slightly temple. The love-feast in the afternoon was a gracious season. Later, in obedience to earnest request, addresses on gospel temperance were delivered by President McVoy and the writer. Such congregations we have not seen—no, not in Israel. Through rain and mud they came, crowding the houses at every service. Rev. J. W. McLaurin, the indefatigable and successful pastor, is continuing the meeting assisted by Rev. J. D. Hays. Quite a number of penitents were at the altar on Sunday night.

Hattiesburg is a new town, only three years old, but has about one thousand inhabitants. Everything wears an expression of newness. But few houses have been painted and nearly all look as though there had been a race to pre-empt a good location and be the first to begin business. Among the most imposing and best appointed dwellings in the magic city is the district parsonage occupied by Presiding Elder Rayner. And that is as it should be. At six o'clock on Monday morning we left for the duties of the desk. For speed few roads can distance the North-eastern, and the ride across that twenty-five mile bridge, with the breezes of Lake Pontchartrain fanning you, is most exhilarating.

Progressive Religious Journalism.

A correspondent of the Nashville Christian Advocate, signing himself "S. A. C.," finding a newsboy on the cars selling the Christian Advocate, says: "July 14, 1885, may be mentioned as the first day that a religious newspaper was ever put on sale on railroad trains. I believe it is the first in this country." If "S. A. C." had been a reader of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, he would have seen a letter from Rev. Dr. T. A. S. Adams, just two years ago, referring to the fact that he purchased from a newsboy on the Illinois Central railroad, near the Tennessee line, a copy of this ADVOCATE. We have been furnishing the ADVOCATE to the news company regularly for sale on the trains.

The Christian Index, the strongest Baptist paper in the South, is quoted as saying:

The Baptist system economizes nothing, organizes nothing, directs nothing. We have the poorest organization in the world. Nothing can compare with it for inefficiency. Practically, we have no organization at all. Outwardly, we are bound together only by a rope of sand. Each church is independent of every other and every man goes his own way. Methodists are a well-organized army, fitted out with all appliances, thoroughly equipped and in complete drill; Baptists are a mob—every man for himself, and we have none to direct us."

This comparison is rather favorable to our system. Let some weak-kneed Methodists read and be satisfied. Ours is a grand system and only needs efficient administration.

"A Piece of Impertinence."

The clergy of Mississippi and, as we are informed, some of the laity have been favored during the month past with copies of one of the numerous "Advocates" published in various places by the Methodist Episcopal Church—in this case, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The sheet in some cases has been sent marked from the printer's office in New Orleans, and in others has been sent by zealous hands unknown.

The paper is edited by a preacher of Mississippi, somewhat noted for the marked disproportion between the volume of his lungs and the volume of his brains.

The particular reason for this act of impertinence, judging from the marked article, appears to be that the said preacher is not pleased with Bishop Thompson's administration of the diocese of Mississippi, and especially not pleased with his late address to his convention, and breaks out in consequence into the usual bigotry, intolerance and misrepresentation about the church in true sectarian fashion.

We have merely to say in reference to this ugly manifestation of spleen and intolerance that the diocese of Mississippi had no idea that it was called upon to elect this gentleman's opinion when it elected its Assistant Bishop; that it would now be very much disappointed in its choice if the Bishop pleased such men as he; that it will go right on minding its own business, as the Bishop will probably also do, whether he is pleased or not pleased, and that it has no worse wish concerning him than that he might get a little Christian charity and some trifle of good manners to supplement what he calls his "religion."—Church News.

The above is from the columns of a little paper, published monthly at Natchez, Miss., which claims to be the "official organ of the diocese of Mississippi." That editor occupies a responsible position speaking officially for the church of a great State. But we fear that he is not a general according to the scriptural standard. At least he has never captured a city—not even Natchez. The Bible says: "Greater is he that ruleth his own spirit than he that taketh a city." Manifestly from the above the editor lost grip on his temper and surrendered his claim to the order of the garter. Indeed, he seems to be really mad about something. This we regret. Brethren in orders ought to be an example to the flock in all gentleness, meekness and godly sincerity. Nor will they look upon the slightest offense of a pastor in this regard with the least degree of allowance. We are, therefore, pained at the editor's display of passion. Bro. Marks has a bad mark in deportment, and, in the language of the college student, it affects his general average. Why, he talks ugly, calls names and gets into a rage generally. Unless reminded of the fact that the editor is a handsome, courtly, cultivated, exquisite clergyman, one would suppose him to be a veritable King of Dahomey or an ecclesiastical mad bull of Bashan. But he isn't at all, and is entirely capable of teaching us a "trifle of good manners."

The "piece of impertinence" against which the editor animadverted so madly was an article in this ADVOCATE, entitled "Gelatinous, Creeds Christianity." It was a criticism on certain language employed by Bishop Thompson in his address to the diocesan council. Among other things he said: "The 'popular Christianity,' so called, about us has no vertebrae. It is usually a quivering, gelatinous mass without form or void. Let me tell you there are thousands in our communities dissatisfied and homeless because they take this creedless, gutless, sentimental wordiness for Christianity." That sentence we analyzed and properly characterized. By comparison it was ascertained that in clearness of creed statement, integrity of doctrine, consistency of life, fidelity to duty and active leadership in moral reform the "popular Christianity" stood confessedly in the front. Indeed, to stigmatize other evangelical churches as "creedless, gutless," etc., is nothing less than blasphemy. For this simple, unpretentious defense we are charged with "impertinence," "bigotry," "intolerance," "spleen," and "misrepresentation." There is no effort made to answer argument; but the little editor simply gets up on his heels and howls. He doesn't defend the Bishop's address, but gets mad and calls names like a fishmonger. "Impertinence," the textographers tell us, means intrusion, meddling with what does not concern us. According to that definition the editor's piece is unhappily titled. We didn't intrude into such august presence, but only made answer to an offensive caricature of evangelical Christianity outside of the Episcopal Church. We simply exposed an impertinence. Instead of being offensive to the charge of "bigotry" and "intolerance," we rebuked their display. Exclusive in ecclesiastical economy, denying to every other Christian church the right of ordination, claiming to be the sole conservators of truth, the Bishops and other clergy are everywhere "intolerant." But for a Methodist, with his traditional and constitutional catholicity, expatriating no citizen of Christ's kingdom, excommunicating no true believer in the Lord Jesus, and bidding God-speed to every evangelical church, to be accused of "bigotry" and "intolerance" is decidedly amusing. We are impertinent and intolerant because we will not join the editor's "microscope sect."

In the same issue of the little paper is a letter from Bishop Thompson, in which he speaks of visiting a certain town and "preaching twice in the Methodist Church kindly lent us." And those acts of courtesy have been frequent in past years. But did anyone ever hear of an Episcopal Church being "kindly lent" a Methodist preacher? Nay, verily. Why not? Would it not be a "trifle of good manners" to reciprocate such hospitality? Ah! that reveals the real bigot and lofty intolerant. We quite agree with a valued, scholarly friend that the only way to exercise proper charity toward such persons is to "consider them the most helpless victims of their own imaginations that have appeared since Don Quixote rode forth."

The statistics of that diocese reported at the last council show a communicant membership of 2,098—an actual decrease. But the editor estimates the number to be 2,300, or probably 2,500. He is distressed at the "lame showing," the "unfortunate mistake," and makes haste to correct it. And this is the little hand that claims to be all the Lord's anointed in the great commonwealth of Mississippi. An astronomer was led to the discovery of a new star by the slight, eccentric movements of a certain planet. He was sure of the existence of another distant body which caused the observed planetary disturbance. Only in that way do thousands of people in that State know of the existence of the Episcopal Church. Its invisible presence causes eccentric movements among other Christians—especially the young and worldly minded. This leads to inquiry, and the use of a powerful lens discovers the planet of feeble light. If the more than a million inhabitants of the State had to depend upon the little editor and his fellow-clergy for the gospel, they would have to be as economical of food as the horned frog of California, which can subsist six months on two house flies. There are more Methodists in one presiding elder's district, embracing four or five counties, than "Churchmen" in the entire State.

As to the personal allusions we do not care to speak. But what is exactly the normal proportion between lungs and brains we would like to know, if not considered "impertinent." Another question, however, is more important—What is the normal use of lungs and brains? But we refrain lest our persistent "impertinence" should further enrage the little editor and aggravate his hay fever.

Death of Gen. Grant.

The most illustrious citizen of the United States has been gathered to his fathers. Apprehended for months and almost hourly expected for days, death came on the early morning of Thursday last. Quietly the great soldier composed himself for his last sleep, and passed away seemingly without a quiver of pain or a shudder of fear. A week or more before the fatal day he wrote to his attending physician a note evidencing a thorough knowledge of his own case, and expressing a perfect readiness to go when God should call him. Careful preparations had been made, and, with words of abounding thankfulness for God's goodness to him and the generous sympathy extended him from all sections, races and religious creeds in our country, he welcomed the death angel's speedy coming. His last words were characteristic—few, simple and expressive. There were no exclamations—no rhapsodies—but a calm, deliberate surrender of himself to the Lord of the living and the dead. He walked through the valley of the shadow of death—no anxious, excited step—no hurry of getting ready—no flurry of an unexpected and unprepared event. His letter reads like one who had made perfect peace with God and only awaited the hour of his heavenly coronation. However distinguished was his life, crowned with unparalleled successes, all would have been vanity and vexation but for this "victory that overcometh the world."

The facts of Gen. Grant's history are well known and need not be repeated. Estimate of him heretofore has depended much on attitude and political affiliations. But within the past few years he has been removed from party politics, and war passions have so died away, as to allow an unprejudiced study of his remarkable character and career. And now that he is gone, there is as genuine sorrow in the South as in the North. Not so romantic, perhaps, but as chastened and sincere. Around the bier of this illustrious citizen all points of the compass and past sectional differences are forgotten.

Gen. Grant possessed this power to command. Quick perception, composure of manner, confidence in himself, strong will and tenacity of purpose, made him a great leader. He was never a nervous, glib talker, kept his own counsel, was always self-possessed, and, therefore, impressed his subordinates as having an exhaustless reserve power available for emergencies. These are the qualifications of leadership, and they gave to Gen. Grant the exceptional distinction of never having lost a battle.

His fame will not rest upon his career as a soldier. As a statesman and civilian his history was not so brilliant. The peculiar conditions of the country, just emerged from a terrible war—some flushed with victory, others humiliated with defeat; statesmen divided in opinion as to the best methods of restoring the political autonomy of the Southern States—exempt his administrations as President from ordinary criticism. That he should have been imposed upon, that low camp followers should have crept into place and power, is only the repetition of history. Amid all those trying reconstruction days it must be said that Gen. Grant manifested no spirit of vindictiveness, but always the magnanimity of a great, brave soldier.

His conduct in the case of Gen. Lee entitles him to the world's gratitude. When it was seriously proposed in Washington to arrest the commander-in-chief of the Southern armies and try him for high treason, Gen. Grant promptly resented the suggestion. He demanded that the terms of capitulation should be preserved inviolate, or he would surrender his own sword. The excited state of the public mind demanded a man of iron nerve to stay the wild fanaticism of victorious partisans, and Gen. Grant was equal to the hour. Had he said the words Davis and Lee would have died on the scaffold.

He was a man of kind heart, strong personal attachments and eminent domestic virtues. Amid all the honors heaped upon him by his own and other lands his love for home and family was never affected. In quiet, sheltered, sacred circle he was more a chieftain than upon the reddened field of battle.

He died a member of the Methodist Church, and in certain hope of a blessed resurrection. He will be buried in Central Park, New York, with national honors, and both shores of the sea will unite in preserving in perennial fragrance the memory of his many virtues and distinguished abilities.

Rev. John Barcroft, presiding elder of the Holly Springs district, sent us a postal notice of his District Conference. It was a long-cherished desire of ours to attend the session, but a temporary physical indisposition made it quite impracticable. A full account of the Conference will appear next week. He writes:

Our Holly Springs District Conference just closed was a season of grace. The pastor, Bro. Cogdell, continued the meeting. May a great awakening be realized! The secretary of the District Conference undoubtedly furnish you for publication an abstract of proceedings. You do not know what you missed by your absence.

BYHALIA, MISS., July 21, 1885.

Our sincerest condolence is extended to the Rev. G. W. Bachman of the North Mississippi Conference in his sore bereavement. May our kind heavenly Father shield him from another stroke and lift up the bruised hearts. He writes:

I write with a sorrowful heart from a sad home to inform you of the death of our eldest and dear daughter, Ida, which occurred on the twenty-first instant, at 4 P. M. She was in her eighteenth year. One of our children have been very sick, but are improving. My wife is quite sick, she is a little better today. We sincerely ask prayers for yourself and readers of the ADVOCATE for us in these days of affliction and bereavement.

KOSCIUSKO, MISS., July 24, 1885.

Rev. R. M. Blocker sends the following bulletin from Bellevue, La.:

Just closed a revival service of days at Pleasant Valley church, built up and twice accessions to the church. Rev. Bro. Fount was with me two days. The Lord is greatly blessing the people of the charge. Crops fine. Health good and people happy.

—Funk & Wagnalls, Publishers, 12 Deay St., New York, announce the seventh edition of Miss Cleveland's book, "George Eliot's Poetry and Other Studies." The demand has been beyond expectation, and the order has been several editions before the day of publication. One week ago, on Monday next, the book was ready for publication. The seventh edition is now ready for publication. The book is a study of the life and works of George Eliot, and is a valuable addition to the library of every student of literature. The book is published by Funk & Wagnalls, 12 Deay St., New York.

I GAVE MY LIFE FOR THEE.

I gave my life for thee,

My precious blood I shed,

That thou might'st be saved,

And quickened from the dead—

I gave my life for thee;

What hast thou given for me?

I spent long years for thee,

In weal and woe,

That an eternity

Of joy thou might'st know—

I spent long years for thee;

Hast thou spent one for me?

My Father's house of light,

My rainbow-circled throne

I left for earthly night,

For wand'ring and lonely-ness I left for thee;

Hast thou left aught for me?

I suffered much for thee,

More than thy tongue can tell,

Of bitter agony;

Thou too, preserve from hell—

I suffered much for thee;

What dost thou bear for me?

And I have brought to thee,

From home above,

Salvation full and free,

My Spirit and my love;

Great gifts I brought to thee,

What hast thou brought to me?

Oh, let thy life be given,

Thy years for me be spent,

World-fetters all be riven,

And joy with suffering blend—

Give thou thyself to me,

Gladly I'll welcome thee!

"Rights and Privileges of Laymen."

BY REV. W. T. J. SULLIVAN, D. D.

Under this heading Bro. T. J.

Upton writes. He wants the laymen utilized in the Bishop's cabinet and proposes:

"1. That one layman be elected by each District Conference as a member of the Bishop's cabinet, and that the appointments be made by and with the advice and consent of said cabinet composed of an equal number of ministers and laymen."

There is serious objection to this proposition. To carry it out would require a radical change in the fundamental law of our episcopacy. It is now the duty of the Bishops "to make the appointments of the preaching men in the Annual Conferences" and to choose presiding elders, fix their salaries and change them when he judges it necessary "to change the preachers in the intervals of the Conferences." His other duties are minor and subsidiary to these.

To take these duties away, therefore,

and confer them upon a cabinet, would strip the episcopal office of its essential power and reduce it to a mere presidency, which would be useful to those Conferences only which might have no man competent for the chair. As our work is now ordered, the Bishop is a deeply interested observer and participant in every item of business, and studies

every element of a preacher's fitness or lack of fitness and every fact of his surroundings. He consults at will his presiding elders and others and hears their statements. He does all this from a point of view that regards primarily the efficiency of the whole work and with freedom in those local and personal influences which would inevitably play so large and injurious a part in the deliberations and conclusions of the cabinet. The presiding elders and preachers and laymen may and do differ widely in reference to where the men shall be sent;

when they have given their advice, the decision is left to one godly man, who grasps the interests of the whole field, who is equally concerned for every part in the measure of its claims and whose judgment is, on the whole, likeliest to achieve the highest good of the work. What- ever errors, mistakes or hardships result from this method will not be removed by Bro. Upton's plan. On the contrary, where the cabinet would eliminate one trouble it would be apt to give rise to more than one. It seems to me a matter of very great importance in a connectional ther- any that the appointing power shall be left where it is and as it is. Lay- men already have access to the Bishop, and the whole church has access to the presiding elder, who by usage is the Bishop's advisor. This access is not authoritative over ap- pointments, but it is influential; and this is as far as it should go, either for the good of the church or of the laymen. Indeed the good of the one is the good of the other. The layman can not claim, nor does he claim, the "right" or "privilege" of authority over appointments under our economy. The layman already has a wide field in which to use his powers and show his zeal and devo- tion. He has membership in all the Conferences. In the legislative Con- ference he has vote for vote with the clergy in making laws for the church and providing for her work, and in case of a separate vote by the clerical and lay members the latter can defeat a measure by non-concurrence. In the church Conference and Quar- terly Conference laymen make up almost the whole membership and decide all questions that go to vote. They can decline to recommend ap- plicants for license to exhort or preach, and they can withhold license from an applicant and refuse to renew one to an undisciplined preacher. Their substance and energy are called for in building and keeping up churches and parsonages, in supporting the ministry, in giving to missions, to widows and orphans and to the dis- semination of the Bible and religious literature. For spiritual culture and ministry they have the prayer meet- ing, the class meeting, the Sunday- school and the home; besides what they can do in special forms of brotherly assistance to the pastor. There is indeed no lack of "rights and privileges" to the members of the church. We only have to lift up our eyes to see the fields white unto harvest. The achievement and illustration of spiritual life will bring into effective use the manifold and ample "rights and privileges" which our church gives to her members of all classes. We do need all the aid that our laymen can give us, but that is provided for in our law and usages and in accordance with these it can be fully rendered.

A Hint to the Wise.

BY REV. W. C. BLACK.

The cause of prohibition is moving on gloriously in Mississippi. I doubt if the most sanguine prohibitionist five years ago expected Mississippi to be as far advanced on this line in ten years as she is to-day. This rapid growth is due to several causes. One of these causes is the wisdom of the leaders of the movement. Those who have shaped the action of its conventions have been clear-headed, sagacious men who have kept the question of prohibition before the public on its merits, free from all political alliances and antagonisms. This was the only safe course. A third party movement may suit the latitude of Kansas and Ohio, but not that of Mississippi. The action of the convention, held in Jackson, July 1, was judicious. The demand for local option was well timed. In the present state of affairs in Mississippi that is exactly what we want. Now let the friends of prohibition everywhere carry out the resolutions of that convention. Let them make it their business to know how every candidate for the Legislature stands on this question of local option. Let there be no evasions. Let there be no dodging behind vague generalities about temperance. Many a man can make a beautiful speech on "temperance" who will not vote for a local option law. When a candidate avows himself opposed to local option let no prohibi- tionist vote for him, no matter how many conventions may have nominated him. And we must see to it that every candidate for legislative honors is sound on the question of local option by counties. I learn from a reliable source that it will be the policy of the saloonists to work for local option by beats. Now this will not do at all. What would pro- hibition be worth to Hinds county if one ward in the city of Jackson were filled with saloons? Something of course, but comparatively little. Now, if the prohibitionists are not wide-awake, they will be imposed upon just here. Candidates will pledge themselves to local option and then vote in the Legislature for local option by beats or supervisors' districts. Brethren, take warning, demand of him who solicits your suffrages for a seat in the Legislature a pledge to vote for local option by counties.

Judas.

BY REV. ANOIS DOWLING.

All of the apostles of Christ were of Galilee save Judas, who was of Judea. Although of a different part of the country, yet he was called to the same work of the other apostles and received the same high and holy commission. The fact of being called by Jesus Christ to the work of the ministry is proof that he was a man of true faith and capable of making full proof of his ministry. To him, as well as the other apostles, Christ said: "Freely you have re- ceived, freely give," and "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves." The power to cast out devils is proof that he was not allied to devils. The authority to preach the gospel of salvation shows that he was saved, else Christ works by the kingdom of darkness to build up the kingdom of light. The devil must have been out of him, or he could not have entered into him at the Paschal supper. All the facts in this case show that Judas was once a true believer and gospel preacher.

Why did Judas fall away and betray Christ? Was it because that Christ knew in the beginning who should or would betray him? This knowledge of Jesus was calculated more to prevent than cause the deed. To prevent him from doing the deed Jesus warned him carefully. Was the betraying of Christ by Judas in the divine plan of human redemp- tion. Not at all. Was there any virtue in the act of Judas? None. Rather he committed a grievous sin, as he himself said: "I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood" or person. Was Judas or- dained to betray Christ? Some peo- ple think so; but the word of God nowhere says so. The passage of Scripture, upon which some people rely to prove that Judas was ordained to betray Christ, is found in Matthew xxv, 9-10: "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, * * * As the Lord appointed me." Who was ap- pointed? Judas or Jeremy? Jeremy. The word rendered ap- pointed, here, is rendered by John Wesley, "commanded." Jeremy the prophet was commanded to fore- tell these matters as a warning. Nothing refers to Judas as ordained to betray Christ, and thereby commit sin by divine ordination.

The inspired account shows that Judas was a true believer and faith- ful preacher. Perhaps because of his fitness for office he was elected or appointed treasurer among the apostles. There was nothing wrong in the office; nor in being capable of discharging the duties thereof; nor did Christ and the apostles design to do the apostle Judas any harm in putting him into an office of such fearful responsibilities. Had he dis- charged the functions of his office judiciously he would have been honored.

In handling money for good pur- poses Judas, no doubt, became care- ful, especially as the money was not very plentiful. He had to make a dollar bring its full value and do its full work in supporting Christ and his preachers and helping the poor and needy who called for assistance and relief. Thus by degrees he be- came a money lover, and finally a thief, stealing the money put into the apostolic treasury. At last, in order to make money, he actually sold his Lord and Master for fifteen or eighteen dollars. This completed the work of his apostasy. The fall was utter and horrid, and although he returned to the high church court and made his confession of sin and hurled the money into the sanctuary, yet he found no relief from his con- suming sense of infidelity to the meek and lowly Lamb of God. Under the smittings of an inflamed con- science he departed and went and hanged himself. Doubtless he hung, untouched and unpitied, till he rotted and fell, bursting open and his bowels gushing out. It is very probable that Judas was not buried at all.

In regard to him Christ said: "Those that thou gavest me, I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition." Judas fell by transgression from the office and work of the ministry and went to his own place—perdition. The life of Judas is just as much of an "example" to us as were those of whom St. Paul spoke, and which are "written for our admonition," "to the intent we should not lust after evil things" and "fall." Did Judas fall? The Bible says "he did." How did he fall? The Bible says he fell away "by transgression." How deep was his fall? To perdition.

Although these truths and facts are recorded in regard to Judas, yet some people, called Christians, to escape the force of them, will say that the Bible teaches that "Judas was a devil from the beginning." Such a quotation can not be found in the Bible, from Genesis to Revela- tion! To save a pet theory, there- fore, some people will not only per- vert the word of God but will manu- facture Scripture to suit their whims and speculations. He that breaks one of the least commandments and teaches men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven. Whoever shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book—the Bible.

The love of money was the root of bitterness, in the heart of Judas, that sprung up and defiled him. In his life, shame and death we see the awful possibilities of this country and century even among those in high places.

Rigor Quærenalis or Episcopal Age.

BY BARNABAS ST. JOHN.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to call your attention and that of your readers to a strange affliction which has recent- ly appeared among the preachers of our Conference, and which so far has baffled the skill of our most emi- nent physicians. Upon inquiry I find that it has prevailed in this country before, but never so generally as now; for whereas formerly it at- tacked only an individual here and there, it now threatens to involve the entire body of our Conference. I am not sufficiently versed in pathology to give you a full and scientific diagnosis of the disease, but hasten to mention some of its most strongly marked symptoms in order that should it appear in any one of your patronizing Conferences you may be prepared to guard against it.

1. It is distinctly periodic. Those who have studied its nature hereto- fore assure me that the attacks recur regularly at intervals of four years. Its first approach is usually observed in the summer or fall, after which it rapidly increases in violence toward the following spring, culminating some time in the month of May, when the paroxysm passes quickly off leaving the patient a little nerv- ous and irritable but otherwise not seriously disabled. This, at least, is the course of acute attacks. This, I am told, is a chronic form, that lingers like the typhoid, never mani- festing itself violently but showing no certain intermission through a long term of years.

2. It is largely a mental affliction. This is indicated by the fact that the patient never perceives that he is affected throughout the entire period of his sickness and convalescence. Keen to detect the slightest sign of the "affection" in others he seems wholly oblivious of its ravages in his own system. Indeed it has been re- marked that the more violently one is himself involved the less conscious of the fact he seems to be and the more alive to its manifestations in others. And herein lies one of the chief difficulties of treatment—any intimation of the patient's true con- dition being met by a prompt and emphatic denial. Yet, strange to say, there is no indisposition to dis- cuss the possibility of infection; and, to be told that one's friends regard him as a fit subject for the epidemic, or that they think he ought to ex- ercise especial care in regard to it, has been found to produce a most gracious and soothing effect. Thus, however prudent he may be in other matters, he seems to find a fascina- tion in the thought of his imminent peril in this.

3. While the disturbance produced, is chiefly mental, a very marked and peculiar physical effect is observable in a number of instances, so that under its influence the old have been known to grow suddenly young and the young to assume a gravity of demeanor far beyond their years. Those even who have previously claimed the indulgence of Confer- ence on the score of youth or age are now willing to be regarded ready for any burden which the church at large may impose upon them.

The most remarkable feature of this strange malady, and one that is never absent, is the fact that the symptoms are always aggravated by mention of the approaching General Conference. The uniform testimony of those who have investigated the subject is that if the patient could only be relieved of the apprehension he seems to entertain that this august body will call him from his present field of labor to a connec- tional work of painful prominence and responsibility the other symp- toms might be removed by milk diet and close attention to pastoral duty.

It is proper to add that as yet no name has been given to this disorder. The common people call it the Epis- copal Age, but it will probably be known to medical science hereafter as Rigor Quærenalis.

I sincerely trust, Mr. Editor, that you and your brethren will escape the infection; or, if it should come among you, that you may find some mode of treatment that will be prompt and effectual.

BAVVIEW, TEXAS, July 25, 1885.

P. S.—I neglected to say how thankful I am that I have so effec- tually escaped the contagion. I love my present charge too well to desire promotion, though my brethren have frequently urged me to suffer the use of my name next May for some connectional position. I am compelled to be almost rude some- times to impress upon them how of- fensive the bare suggestion of such a thing is to me. When I made my speech on missions in our Confer- ence last year I actually trembled when I saw Bishop McTyeir beckon to my presiding elder and keep him for a time in earnest consultation, frequently glancing, with uplifted eyebrows, towards the place where I stood. As you will probably be a member of the next General Confer- ence, let me beg you, my dear brother, not to permit the use of my name for any connectional office. But if it should be presented, in spite of my wishes to the contrary, please to remember that I will not shrink from any work for which my brethren may select me, and that if I must be torn away from my pres- ent congenial surroundings, I prefer the position of book editor or mis- sionary secretary.

Missouri Letter.

I feel very much as if I had been in a young cyclone—"twisters" we call them out West—for two weeks. We closed the great camp meeting at Plattsburg yesterday, and it was the most remarkable religious gathering ever held in Missouri! During the twelve days of its continuance the size of the crowd ran the gamut all the way from three thousand to twenty thousand, reaching the latter figure on Sunday, the twenty-sixth, the last day of the meeting. Sam Jones was with us nine days, unique, inimitable, irrepressible. He has, perhaps, never appeared to better advantage than at this great Plattsburg District Camp Meeting, and he has impressed himself on the people of Missouri as no man has ever done before. All portions of this State were represented as well as Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Illinois and Texas. Hundreds of ministers came to hear him, and without a solitary exception, so far as I know, all went away delighted. If the meeting had only resulted in giving an inspira- tion to the Christian people present to lead lives of greater devotion and consecration, it would have been a great success; but besides accom- plishing this there were several hun- dred professions of religion made, and no less than a thousand irrel- ligious persons were induced to turn to God. Some of the hardest infidels and skeptics in this country were earnest seekers of religion during the meeting, and two of the most profane men in Clinton county said they never intended to swear again. Men were brought under conviction by reading his sermons as published in the newspapers, and on Sunday ten thousand people stood up and promised to lead a better life.

Bro. Jones' power over a congrega- tion is marvelous, and he can do with his hearers just what he pleases. Eternity alone will reveal the results of this camp meeting, and it is im- possible to estimate the number of people who have been raised, through Sam Jones' sermons during the last week, to a higher plane of life. I believe that God has raised him up for this especial work, and the Lord is certainly with him, in his min- istry.

Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D., of Nashville; Rev. J. T. Gibson, of the North Georgia Conference, and Rev. W. C. Dunlap, commissioner of edu- cation and agent of Paine Institute, were also with us at the camp meet- ing and rendered valuable service. Missouri was for twenty years Dr. Leftwich's field of labor and he feels a warm attachment for the Mis- sourians, which is heartily reciprocated.

Sam Jones has promised to come to St. Joseph in September and attack the strongholds of sin in this ungodly city. He will find a broad field here and will undoubtedly ac- complish a vast amount of good. A remarkable revival of religion is also going on at Richmond, in this dis- trict. It is being conducted by Rev. Louis Mysonheimer, the boy evan- gelist of West Virginia, and it has now been going on about five weeks. Up to this time there have been 175 conversions and 84 additions to our church, with a number of accessions to other churches.

Our Conference is only a little over a month off. It meets this year at Columbia, the Athens of Missouri. If you will look in on us at that time, we will give you a hearty Western welcome and will show you the most beautiful town in the South-west.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI. M. B. CHAPMAN.

We mentioned last week the revival at Clinton under the pastora- te of Rev. T. L. Meilen. In few words and in his own characteristic way he thus reports the result:

Last night we closed a protracted meeting at Clinton, Miss., after two weeks' labor and prayer. Our pre- siding elder, Rev. J. A. Ellis, preached on Saturday and Sunday, July 11 and 12 and on the twenty- first. Dr. C. G. Andrews came to our assistance and gave six ser- mons in two days and nights. The Lord honored us with his presence. Results: 1. A progressive church dis- banded. 2. A union of all denom- inations in the good work. 3. Ten conversions. 4. Neighborhood and personal quarrels adjusted. 5. Seven received into full membership, two applications in abeyance, and one convert goes to the Protestant Epis- copal Church with his good wife. 6. The whole church revived, ex- cepting one or two who would not attend. 7. Increased interest in the Woman's Missionary Society. 8. A prayer meeting organized; new con- verts ready to pray. 9. Finances improved. 10. Preacher greatly blessed.

For this unusual and gratifying item of news we are indebted to friend Gilderoy.

This fact was developed at Fulton, Miss., during the session of the Aber- deen District Conference. In that town, numbering four hundred in- habitants, there is not a single grown white woman or girl over twelve years of age who is not a professor of religion and a member of some branch of the church. The religious influences are first-class in that com- munity.

THE LAND BEYOND THE SEA.

The land beyond the sea!
When will life's tasks be o'er?
When shall we reach that soft blue shore
O'er the dark strait, whose billows foam and roar?
When shall we come to thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
How close it often seems!
When flushed with evening's peaceful gleams;
And the wistful heart looks o'er the strait, and dreams:
It longs to fly to thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
Sometimes distant and near,
It grows upon the eye and ear,
And the path narrows to a thread-like mere.
We seem half-way to thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
Sometimes across the strait,
Like a drawbridge to a castle gate,
The slanting sunbeams lie, and seem to wait
For us to pass to thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
O how the lapping years,
How the unnumbered days,
Have borne, now slowly, now in fleets, the bliss
Of those we love to thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
How dark our present home!
How dark our future home!
With arms outstretched to thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
When will our tale be done?
Slow feet we tread, more swiftly run
Into the fold of that unstinting sun!
None stick we are for thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
Why doth thou lie in light?
Why art thou better, onward night?
Dear land, look always plain, look always bright,
That we may gaze on thee,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The land beyond the sea!
Sweet is thine endless rest;
But sweeter far it is at Father's breast,
Upon thy shores eternally possessed,
For Jesus' sake, O land,
O calm land beyond the sea!

The Proper Attitude of the Church toward the Temperance Reform.

BY HON. W. H. OODALE.

Just now we mean non-political reform, and not what is generally known as the "third party movement." What is the proper attitude of the church toward the temperance reform?

We assume that, whatever may be the dicta of the church upon total abstinence, in point of fact there is a difference of practice and, presumably, of opinion among its members among its numbers—a difference that amounts to something, that constitutes, indeed, a serious barrier in the path of temperance reform. The merits of this question we will not here discuss. We may even concede for the present purpose that moderate drinking under ordinary conditions is all that is claimed for it by those who practice it. Still, in the presence of the temperance reform, it becomes when practiced by the professed follower of the right an undoubted evil of the most insidious and fatal tendency. Just as the most noxious vapors slumber in harmless repose beneath the surface of the soil left bare by the receding flood until the light and heat of the life-giving sun quickens in them their death-dealing power, so it may happen in our own lives that a practice, harmless in seclusion, becomes pernicious in the light of a reform movement.

The question changes. It is no longer, "Is it right for me, a church member, to make a moderate use of intoxicants as beverages?" but it becomes, "Is it right for me to oppose the temperance reform?" or even stronger than this—"Is it right for me to place in opposition to this reform whatever of the influence of Christianity may be potent in me?" The rules of the church, as the great principles of morality upon which they are predicated, are general in their character, intended as nearly as possible for all circumstances and conditions, dealing not so much with specific acts as with broad principles. Thus the Discipline of the Methodist Church upon the question of "worldly amusements" does not undertake to prohibit by name specific forms of unwholesome pleasure; but in a broad and general way, and with a keen probe into the moral sense of the subject, draws the line where the Divine sanction can not properly be invoked.

But "circumstances alter cases," and pleasures the most harmless under certain conditions become pernicious under others. A ready example is at hand in the case of the "skating rink." Surely no more harmless pleasure could be devised than roller skating properly conducted, while under the fearful perfections and excesses that have lately marked its abuse nearly all over the civilized world it is a question whether even the "dance of death," with all its evils, has ever proved more demoralizing. We can readily understand how withholding Christian influence from this once innocent pastime becomes under the changed conditions a question not of propriety merely, but of positive duty, a duty intensified by a thousand-fold in the light of organized effort to check the growing evil.

We have never felt it important to settle the question of the character of the wine produced at Cana, save, perhaps, as a matter of historical utility. We are quite satisfied that, whatever may have been the quality or properties of the wine produced by the Master in that age when wine was the strongest intoxicant known—in that age when the powers of darkness had not yet taxed the genius of wine in the production of a decoction more potent in evil, more pregnant with heart burnings and misery than any draught that held in all its foulest caverns had ever known; we are satisfied, we say, that, whatever he may have done then, today, in view of humanity staggering under the accumulated horrors of the whisky curse, he would sooner command the stones to be made bread, or bow down and worship at the beck of hell's arch-fiend than add one drop to that deadly cup in which are hidden all the shrieks of the lost, all the pangs of an endless despair. Wine drinking then could not lead to whisky drinking. To-day in America, at least, its course is inevitable.

Besides, the mortifying concession with which we were forced to begin this article does not stop at wine drinking. We are forced by the irresistible argument of facts to concede that a portion of the membership of our Christian churches, and, judged by the ordinary standards, a respectable portion, still continue to use as beverages not merely wine, but also the stronger intoxicants and, presumably, to defend their use. We assert it as a fact, though a fact that we will gladly restrict upon the testimony of any observant reputable witness that it is not in accord with his experience, that in most communities the workers in the temperance reform find their best efforts hindered and their most potent arguments foiled by "Deacon A.," or "Elder B.," or "Steward C.," whose silent example is, when the cry of reform is in the air, more effectual for evil than the combined personalities of all the dram sellers in the town.

Let the distinction be clearly drawn. We are not arguing here the question of the right or wrong of the use of intoxicants as beverages by church members under ordinary conditions. We assume that, whatever we may think of it, they, at least, think they are right. But the temperance reform is a fact; one of the most potent as well as potent facts of the age. We can not ignore it by putting our heads in the bushes or burying our faces in the sand. And, whatever the church or its members may think of it, there is no longer any doubt what the world is getting to think about it. Outside the church, in that tribunal of public opinion, which is the court of last resort, it is fast being settled that the use of intoxicating beverages is inconsistent with the highest type of manhood. Shall the world be allowed to set a higher standard for gentility than the church for Christian character? God forbid!

We repeat: The question is not now in the light of the temperance reform whether it is right or wrong for "Deacon A.," or "Elder B.," or "Steward C.," to use intoxicants as beverages. The question is, "Is it right for them to place the influence of the church of Christ just as far as it is represented in them in opposition to this work?"

And what is the duty of the church toward "Deacon A.," or "Elder B.," or "Steward C.?" We will avoid all debatable ground. We will not say—at least not now—that it is the duty of the church either to reform them or to remove them from its membership; but we do say, and with an emphasis that we wish might carry our words all over the world, that it is the duty of the church not to allow itself to be represented by them. It is the duty of the church to see that others than "Deacon A.," or "Elder B.," or "Steward C.," be selected to fill the official stations in the church and to represent it in its own ecclesiastical gatherings and before the world. If they must be endured, let us, at least, not hold them out to the world as the proper exponents of the church, as the "bright and shining lights" of Christianity. If the church must put up with them, let it do so in the same spirit and with the same precautions with which a prudent family takes care of a mentally afflicted member—keep them in the background and pray for their recovery.

Let there be no doubt upon a question of such transcendent importance. The temperance reform is the business of the church. "Not its especial business," did you say? Why, my brother, what is the church but the hosts of the Lord organized for an aggressive warfare upon the hosts of sin wherever they may be encountered? Is the temperance work any less the work of the church because it is not its only work? If the Goliath of the Philistines be named "Intemperance," shall not the David of Israel's camp go forth to meet him? Is there danger that the church will "degenerate into a mere temperance society" simply because the stone in its sling has been washed in the waters of the brook Kedron? It is the business of the church to charge upon the hosts of evil wherever they are entrenched behind the bulwarks of "Intemperance," or of "Sabbath breaking," or of any other form of sin.

Perhaps, after all, it is only a question of who constitutes the church. It does not follow that the muster-roll of heaven must needs correspond with that of earth, and in the last great day we think it will appear that the "hosts of the Lord" are they who fought the battles of the Lord.

I never was deeply interested in any object, I never prayed sincerely for any thing but it came. At some time, no matter how distant a day, somehow in some shape—probably the last I should devise—it came.—Dr. A. Judson.

The Church—No. 4.

"I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."—David.

Writer, you love the church of God. Do you love it as you ought? Do you do your best to lengthen its cords and drive deeper its stakes?

Reader, do you belong to the church? If not, should you not join it? If every one did as you do, would there be any church in the world? Would we not all go back to heathenish darkness? Man, woman, "in the name of your God, set up your banner."

Brother, you love the church of God. Do you love it as you ought? Do you pray for its prosperity? Do you labor for its upbuilding? Do you give of your money and your means that there may be "meat in his house?"

Sister, you, too, love the church. Do you love it as it deserves? Does your heart live in the church? Does the welfare of the church live in your heart?

I love the church for what she has done for women. The church has lifted them from the slavery and degradation of heathenism to the highest plane of refinement, light, love and purity this side of heaven. Indeed, millions of them in Christendom are angels. All they lack is the wings, and they will get them by-and-by. There is one of them enmeshed in my memory. She was my mother. She lived to be on the earth, my mother, for sixty years; truthful, honest, pure, pious, cheerful, hopeful, joyous for sixty years. She was always anxious for my welfare, always praying for me, always watching over me, and when I did wrong she said, "My son, why did you do so?" or, "If I was derelict in duty, 'My son, why do you not do it?' What enabled her to be such a woman for so long a time? Her church and her God. In this I am not boasting. The land is full of such mothers. Christendom has millions of them, and millions more of women who have no souls to remember them, and they are equally pure, true, noble, good and worthy of honorable mention and affectionate memory.

These mothers, sisters and other maidens are molding the minds, hearts and lives of the children. Oh! the plastic touch of a pure woman on the burning brow of the feverish head of the sick and suffering, and on the yielding heart of the child or youth! Should I not love the church that gave me such a mother, and that is giving the world millions of them?

In this line also the church has not a bad record. I somehow think well of "Eve," the mother of all living, notwithstanding her fall. And then we come to Sarah and Rebekah; and then the midwives "who feared God and did not as the King of Egypt commanded them," and thus we have Moses to be the great leader of God's people, and there his sister, Miriam, who sang, "Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously," etc. But the time would fail me to tell of Jael, Deborah, the widow of Zarephath, and the Shunamite who, with her husband, built "a little chamber on the wall" for the "holy man of God," who sometimes passed that way, that he might "turn in thither." And then Esther and Elizabeth and Mary and Lydia and Tabitha, etc., and in more modern times, Madame Guyon, Lady Huntingdon, Susanna Wesley, Mrs. Fletcher, and a host of others, with the millions referred to above, gone to glory and yet on the earth, and what a galaxy of beauty and goodness spans the centuries from the oration to the present time!

That is a view of the better half of our race that is most pleasing; but it is only the truth of her and the church. Let us now turn to what is without the church, and let us contemplate the two positions; and in doing so let me quote from the North American Review:

At the origin of society she is everywhere a drudge, a slave, a chattel. Among the Babylonians, we know from Herodotus, it was the custom to sell women for sale to the highest bidder, and every woman was required, at least for a time, to put a price on her virtue. With the Lydians, at least, this was a universal practice. The Syrians, to the immolation of children to idols, joined the compulsory sacrifice of women's honor. Strabo affirms that even the most distinguished families among the Armenians presented their daughters to the goddess of debauch in the Temple of Anahitis, and the same writer tells us that a law of the Medes required every man to have not less than seven wives. That polygamy and infanticide were common among the Persians is a fact to which Herodotus testifies, who also testifies that the Scythians were promiscuous in their domestic relations, were conjugal and immaculate widows on the graves of their husbands. And Strabo asserts that the ancient Hindus bought their wives, treated them as slaves and burned them when their husbands died. Among the Mongols community of women was consecrated both by law and custom.

The difference is infinite, and infinitely in favor of the church. Let our mothers and sisters and wives and daughters be of the church.

LOCAL ITINERARY.

"Rights and Privileges of Laymen."

Mr. Editor: I arise to "second the motion" of Bro. T. J. Upton, in last week's ADVOCATE. Why should "lay members" be headmilled to take part in "law making" and in nearly every part of church work and church management and be excluded from the very place where they could tell most vitally and most effectively on church interests? The Louisiana Conference had the honor of starting the movement in favor of lay representation. Let her now come to the front and in-stat that lay members be heard "officially" in making the appointments for the preachers. Why should not the coming General Conference "legalize" what has heretofore been "mere matter of precedent" and constitute the presiding elders of each Conference and an equal number of laymen regularly elected, a cabinet legally constituted and empowered to advise with and assist the presiding Bishop in arranging the works and in stationing the preachers? Such a measure would be in harmony with the spirit of lay representation, would prove a wonderful help to the Bishop in making judicious appointments, and above and beyond all, it would most effectively throttle the greatest danger that now threatens to wreck our beloved Zion. Fairly starting on our second century of organized exaltation we will be wise to mark the indications of Providence and to fit our machinery for the effective safe and rapid propelling of this "old ship of Zion" with its millions of immortal souls on board journeying heavenward.

Foreknowledge of God—No. 2.

DEAR BROTHER DOWLING: I promised in this article to define my position on this subject. After years of study and prayer I have candidly assumed that God knows (or foreknows) from all eternity his own plans and purposes. But as to moral agents he does not know; neither can he know the futurity of any one without destroying his agency. This is evident from the fact that there are but two sources of knowledge either in the human or divine mind; that is, it depends upon the thing in existence or the thing in fact. I mean by the thing in existence that it has reached the point where there is no contingency. I mean by the thing in fact that it has been preconceived in the mind of the agent to bring it to pass. Now, my brother, read this proposition over carefully and lay aside prejudice as naturally exists in most human minds and then hear my brief argument.

If my position is logically correct as to the basis of knowledge, I certainly have the right side. God can not know what my future is, or could not know what my future would be, from all eternity, unless he had purposed that it should be just that way. But you say, and so do all Calvinists also, that the knowledge of a fact does not make it so. Very true. But was it in existence before I was born? If so, how? Not by any volition or choice of mine whatever, for I had neither agency nor being; hence had neither plans nor purpose in the case. So if it were so in fact, who planned and purposed that it should be so? There being but two that could, I as the agent yet unborn; or God as the sovereign.

Impossible to be by any action, state or being of my own. Hence if God knew it before I was created, he must have purposed it. If he purposed it, where is my agency? But "the knowledge of a fact does not make it so." Very true. But if it were not so either in fact or reality, it could not be known. My brother, our difficulty does not lie in the truth of this proposition, but in a theory which asserts that we must not limit God's knowledge. If you will look at this carefully you will see that this position does not limit God's knowledge in the least; it only places it upon a base of facts. (God is no myth.) And presents God as knowing all things as they are, and all things as they are purposed in the human mind and in like manner with reference to himself.

You will say this makes God changeable and depend upon man for his decisions and actions. Not in the least. For when God created man he made him to be governed by certain principles, and annexed penalty or reward thereto. And designing to make him free in every part to act, but subject to the divine government. He gave him the power of volition—untrammeled volition—and in order that the purpose of God might stand, and his plans not be thwarted, he prepared provisory means of grace in Christ to meet all the exigencies of man's fallen condition in weakness in the divine mind, but gives him all that his attribute of omniscience claims. It presents him as a present and ever watchful God, jealous of all his own works, present in all places, active in all his attributes, and competent to manage and control all his affairs in time and in eternity.

Respectfully, SAM WHITE.

Retrospective.

IN company with our now deceased brother, Rev. R. W. Kennon, who was at the time a member of the Mississippi Annual Conference, the writer spent a few days pleasantly with Rev. J. B. McDowell, (if I mistake not his initials,) at his plantation in Rankin county, Miss. He afterwards moved to Sharon for educational facilities. We found him an agreeable associate—without betraying a smile he would relate, as few could, amusing incidents which had occurred in his past history.

"A merrier man, Within the limits of becoming mirth, I never spent an hour's talk withal."

Some of these incidents the writer has not forgotten. We hear about "getting in the wrong box." Mr. McDowell found himself in the wrong pulpit one Christmas morning. It happened on this wise. Through the influence of Dr. Winans Mr. McDowell was licensed to preach and received into the Mississippi Conference before he had ever attempted to preach a sermon. He had made a few successful efforts in the way of public lectures. The Annual Conference at which he was received was held in Alabama. Mr. Winans (then presiding elder,) had him appointed to the Amite circuit. On his return to his home and district he made it convenient to call on Mr. McDowell, informed him what had been done in his case, gave him the plan of his circuit and urged him to go to the work, etc. Young McDowell yielded to his elder's entreaties, and with an itinerant Methodist outfit mounted his horse and started to labor among entire strangers at a distant point.

The first appointment, as he read it, on the plan given him, was at "Love's Church" on Christmas day. When within twenty miles of the church it was not difficult to find persons who could give him directions, as the Rev. Mr. Love and his church had an extensive acquaintance. On our young preacher went, reaching the designated church at ten o'clock A. M., Christmas day, where he found a large congregation seated in the church. With saddlebags in hand he entered the church and pulpit to preach his first sermon. While looking for a suitable hymn he discovered an old gentleman going first to one and then another to ascertain who the intruder could be. Finally he entered the pulpit and without a formal introduction said to the mistaken occupant: "I presume, brother, you are laboring under a mistake. You have no appointment here today." "Is this not Love's Church?" asked Mr. McDowell. "It is," responded Mr. Love, who was the pastor of that Baptist Church. Said he: "I have been pastor of this church for many years, and have had a stated appointment to preach on Christmas days." Mr. McDowell drew from his pocket the plan of his circuit, when upon close inspection found that his appointment was for Love's Church instead of Love's. "Well, well," said the good old pastor, "it is a God-send. I feel quite unwell to-day, and you must preach for us." The young preacher heaved to be excused, but the old gentleman insisted. While Mr. McDowell felt somewhat relieved from his embarrassment, he realized the fact that he was unprepared to fill the appointment. Said he: "I made choice of a text that could be treated in a manner not to disturb the settled voices of even a Baptist congregation." It was: "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." He gave his audience to understand that there was nothing unreasonable in religion, that it changed the heart and improved the morals of all who sincerely embraced it and lived up to its reasonable requirements, etc. The sermon was short. At its close the pastor of the church concluded the services with an exhortation rather eulogistic of the sermon hoped that the very appropriate discourse would be long remembered by the congregation. After pronouncing a benediction he said: "My young brother, you can not reach your next appointment in time; my wife is in the habit of preparing a Christmas dinner, you must now go home with me, stay till to-morrow morning and I will then give you directions so that you can reach your appointment for the day after." He accepted his kind hospitality, partook of a good dinner, found everything agreeable. Early the next morning he was on his way to fill an appointment in the bounds of his own work, realizing that it is good, pleasant and profitable "for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Holly Springs District Conference.

The Holly Springs District Conference, of the North Mississippi Conference, closed its session on Saturday evening, eighteenth instant. It convened at the new church just erected at Mt. Pleasant, Marshall county, Miss., on Friday morning, July 17, Rev. John Barcroft, presiding elder of the district, presiding. The day before the meeting of the Conference was devoted to the Sunday-school interests; the attendance was good and resulted in awakening an increased interest in our Sunday-school work. All the charges were represented on Friday except one, and all the pastors were present except two—the Rev. J. W. Anderson being very ill, and the other, Rev. J. W. Poston, being detained at the bedside of his afflicted wife. Much sympathy was felt and expressed for these brethren. There was a good attendance of lay delegates. The reports from the work showed upon the whole a very good state of affairs, except in the matter of finance and in the almost total abandonment of class meetings and of family prayer.

The writer of this has attended a number of District Conferences, but this was characterized by a depth of religious fervor and spirituality that he never witnessed before. The president announced at the opening that the religious exercises would receive the prominent attention and that the Conference would be a failure unless the members were made to enjoy a revival of religion in their own hearts. Friday morning, by request of the presiding elder, a six o'clock prayer meeting was held, and before the close of the session on Friday it was manifest that the spirit of God was present. It was rather remarkable to witness the Conference pursuing the usual rather dry and tedious routine of business to suddenly become so powerfully and deeply moved, and yet such was the case on Friday evening, and the religious enjoyment was as intense as I have ever witnessed, even in the midst of a revival meeting. The sermons preached during the Conference were old gospel sermons and were very effective. J. T. Moody, E. H. Moon, J. W. Malone, C. L. Ballard and the venerable T. P. Holman, of the Memphis Conference, all preached with power to large and attentive congregations. The people of Mt. Pleasant threw wide their doors and gave the Conference a warm welcome. They have just completed a beautiful house of worship, and the first services held in it were those of the Conference. The pastor, Rev. D. M. Cogdell, justly stands high in the esteem of his people. Presiding Elder Barcroft presided with dignity and ease, and on Sunday preached a strong and effective sermon to a vast throng of people.

The Conference, by resolution, set apart Friday, August 7, as a day of fasting and prayer for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the district and for an increase of laborers in the harvest. Take it all in all, the writer never saw the like before; the sentiment of all was that it was good to be there. The following delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: Rev. W. W. East, R. H. Cook, M. C. Pegues, Dr. F. P. Boatner. Alternates: W. G. Gibson, E. J. McKinney.

Next Conference to be held at New Salem Church, New Salem circuit.

John Wesley's Views of Sanctification.

BY REV. W. SPILLMAN.

There has been much written and said on the doctrine of sanctification, and not a small amount of which, in place of throwing light on the subject, has contributed to the darkening of counsel. Among all the writers on sanctification none that I have met with are so plain and scriptural as John Wesley in his "Plain Account of Christian Perfection." By a careful study of his writings it will be seen that he made a distinction between sanctification and Christian perfection.

I propose, therefore, Mr. Editor (with your permission), to lay before the readers of the ADVOCATE a few extracts from Wesley's "Plain Account of Christian Perfection," as found in a old Discipline published near a hundred years ago. Wesley says, "What I propose in the following paper is, to give a plain and distinct account of the doctrine of Christian perfection. After discussing two propositions—(1) In what sense Christians are not perfect; (2) In what sense they are perfect—he adds: "To cast a fuller light on this important subject I shall lay before the reader the minutes of several of our Conferences on this weighty, the momentous, doctrine. On Monday, June 25, 1741, our first Conference began, six clergymen and all our preachers being present. The next morning we seriously considered the doctrine of sanctification or Christian perfection. The questions asked concerning it, and the substance of the answers given, were as follows:—

Q. What is it to be sanctified?
A. To be renewed in the image of God, in righteousness and true holiness.
Q. What is implied in being a perfect Christian?
A. The loving God with all our heart and mind, and soul. (Deuteronomy vi, 5.)
Q. Does this imply that all lower sin is taken away?
A. Undoubtedly; or how can we be saved from all uncleanness? (Ezekiel xxxiv, 20.)

"Our second Conference began August 1, 1745. The next morning we spoke of sanctification, as follows:—

Q. When does inward sanctification begin?
A. The moment a man is justified. Yet sin remains in him, the seed of sin, till he is sanctified thoroughly. From that time the believer gradually dies to sin and grows in grace, till he attains to perfection.

In the fourth Conference, June 18, 1747, the question discussed was, "How much is allowed by our brethren who differ from us with regard to entire sanctification?" Under this head we find the following:

Q. What is Christian perfection?
A. The loving God with all our heart, mind, soul and strength. This implies that no wrong temper, none contrary to love, remains in the soul, and that all the thoughts, words and actions are governed by pure love.
Q. Do you affirm that the perfect Christian excludes all infirmities, ignorance and mistakes?
A. I continue to affirm quite the contrary, and always have done so. . . . To explain a little further on this head: 1. Not only sin, properly so called—that is, a voluntary transgression of a known law, but sin, in a larger properly so called—that is, an involuntary transgression of a Divine law, known or unknown, needs the atoning blood. 2. I believe there is such perfection in this life as excludes these involuntary transgressions, which I apprehend to be consequent on the ignorance and mistakes consequent on mortality. 3. Therefore, I believe a person filled with the love of God is still liable to those involuntary transgressions. 5. Such transgressions, however, are not fatal, and need not for the reason above mentioned, lead to this death to sin gradual or instantaneous? . . . .

Q. . . . . If he may be dying to sin some time; yet he is not dead till he is separated from his body, and in that instant he lives the life of love. . . . . Yet he still grows in love. . . . .

place, in the knowledge of Christ, in the love and image of God, and will do so not only till death, but probably to all eternity.

"In the year 1704," Wesley adds, "upon a review of the whole subject, I wrote down the sum of what I had observed in the following short propositions:"

1. There is such a thing as Christian perfection, for it is again and again mentioned in the Scriptures.
2. It is not so early as justification, for justified persons are to go on to perfection. (Hebrews vi, 1.)
3. It is not so late as death, for St. Paul speaks of living men that were perfect. (Philippians iii, 12.)
4. It is not absolute. Absolute perfection belongs not to man, not to angels, but to God alone.
5. It does not make a man infallible. No one is infallible while he remains in the body.
6. It is perfect love. (I John iv, 18.) This is the essence of it: Its properties, inseparable fruits, are rejoicing evermore, praying without ceasing, and in everything giving thanks. (I Thessalonians v, 16.)

7. It is improvable. It is as far from being an indivisible point, from being incapable of increase, that one perfected in love may grow in grace, as winter than he did before.
8. It is amissible, capable of being lost, of which we have had instances, but we were not convinced of this for several years.
9. It is constantly both preceded and followed by a gradual work.
10. But is it in itself instantaneous or not? In examining this let us go on step by step.

If we connect what John Wesley has said on Christian perfection, Peter's declaration as recorded in his second epistle, 1-11, there will be little difficulty in understanding the all-important doctrine of Christian perfection.

Pastoral Visiting.

Mr. Editor: Much has been written on this subject by older and far more experienced ministers; but as we have a number of young ministers in our Conference, and I am one of the number, I will relate a little of my experience.

Last year, by pastoral visiting, I succeeded in bringing a man out to church who had not been to church before for twenty-five years, although he lived within three miles of the church. Shortly after this I visited at his house and insisted on his coming out at next appointment; but he replied: "No; it had been so long since I had been to church that everybody stared at me, and I can't stand it." He promised me he would go again before long, and I suppose he has done so.

Soon after I came on my present work several members of my church remarked to me: "I suppose you will be in it. Nearly all our preachers do." I replied: "No." "Well, will you live in C. S. then?" "No," I said, "I have been sent to the Bayou Terre circuit, and I am going to stay among my people." "What! you going out in the country? Our members always stay on the railroad." "I told them if they would give me a horse to ride and something for me and my horse to eat, I would spend the year with them. One of my friends went so far as to go to H. and inquire for me, supposing as a matter of course I was living there. Every one seemed delighted that "our preacher" was going to "stay among his people." "But it is due my people to say they are men with families and there is no parsonage on the work."

A few weeks ago I rode up to one of my appointments, and soon after I alighted from my horse one of the prominent members came to me and, laying his hand on my shoulder, said: "What is going to happen? Old Bro. is at church to-day. Why, it is the first time he has been to church for eight years." I replied that I had been with him and I suppose that was what brought him out.

At my first church Conference several members insisted on my turning out of the church because they would neither attend nor help support the institutions of the church. But of course I would not consent to that. I went to see them, and for several appointments past the church has been reconverted.

I incidentally heard in the early part of the year that a certain man, of whom I had not heard before, was dangerous. As soon as I could I went to see him. I saw that he had an interesting family, but that they were exceedingly ignorant. I decided to cultivate their acquaintance as best I could. I invited the young man over to see me. Invited him all to church and to Sunday-school, and made it convenient to go with them to and from my evening appointment. Recently five of them attended the church, and some, if not all, of them professed to have been converted.

I could cite other cases in my short ministry of two years, but these are sufficient. My young brethren, let us not wait until our usefulness is much lessened, but let us increase it as we go along. Let us be faithful and diligent in the performance of this important duty.

"Over and Over Again." Religion is sometimes the only way to escape a truth upon the mind. The original little "Liver Pills" are due to be wonderfully effective in case of sick and nervous headache, indigestion, rheum of blood, cold, cold extremities, and all ailments arising from obstruction of the bowels. Their action is thoroughly gentle, and the ingredients are entirely vegetable. They can be taken with impunity into the most delicate stomach. All druggists.

From the Work.

TRINITY CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: I have not seen anything from this part of the spiritual vineyard for some time. I will, therefore, partly from request, and also a desire that the brethren in other parts of the vineyard might know what the Lord is doing for us and rejoice with us, write a short letter for the much-beloved ADVOCATE, which now finds its way to the homes of many. I am glad to say the circulation is fast increasing. Bro. A. D. Miller is our pastor. This is his third year with us, and, I believe, he ought to remain his time in full-four years. I think the soul of any Christian would rejoice to happen in my midst at Gosque Chapel and engage with us in any of our several services. It is but little over one year since we organized, and now have something over forty members. Six out of twelve male members have family prayer. Nine of same number will exercise in public at church. Before organizing our church, we, with some of our Lutheran brethren, organized a weekly prayer meeting, which by the grace of God we have kept in full blast for nearly two years. Since our organization as a church we have regular old-fashioned class meetings once a month in which God meets with us and that to own and bless. We have a live Sunday-school. Our pastor, with the assistance of Bros. Cammack and Mathew Miller, gave us a five days' meeting, embracing the second Sabbath. The lay brethren of the Lutheran and Baptist Churches took an active part with us.

A Broken Spirit.

(Synopsis of a sermon preached in St. Charles Avenue Church, July 26, 1885, by the pastor, Rev. Charles L. and reported in the Times Democrat.)

Text: The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit, Psalm xli, 17.

After going into some explanations in regard to sacrifice, the preacher remarked that the spirit and practice seemed lacerated in us. We expect and demand it of each other. The country demands it. Love and friendship demand it, and what in the way of sacrifice has been withheld from their altars? Now if we expect and receive sacrifices, shall not God?

If you noticed the text, God passes over the things usually required as sacrifices—passes indeed over everything, when he has a right to all things and settles upon one thing.

The sacrifice God demands from every man is his spirit. Give me your spirit, that which is made in my image; that strange, hoping, fearing, inescapable thing; that hidden life within you with its immortal longings; that view of the inhumanity of the world which communicates itself to the world so imperfectly, and flashes its glory so faintly through the medium of a few organs; that thing within you that reasons, loves, worships—give me that!

No one can consider the estimate God places upon this spirit, and felt powers over its movements, and felt powers without seeing that God in demanding the spirit has asked for the greatest of all things. What is the world itself, when you remember that it was made, decked, stored for the sake alone of the spirit?

No surprise then at the demand for the spirit, but here is the wonder, that he asks for a broken spirit. It is the very thing that men do not want, that the world shuts its heart and door against; that you get out of patience and sympathy with, and yet here is the sacrifice God demands of broken spirit. Not a man spirit—not a hopeless spirit, but a spirit broken by repentance. Can you tell me what there is in repentance that so moves God, that makes the angels rejoice and stir all Heaven, as you have seen the dead stir from the forest? God loves us to be cheerful of penitence in the eye, it possesses a greater value than all the gems of the earth. It is the first flesh of a sin that will never set—the beginning of a life of endless blessedness.

Here the preacher enlarged on the new state and relations produced by repentance.

Moreover, he added, God not only wants the spirit broken by repentance, but broken under his spirit and Providence by the various experiences of life. I will not distinguish one from another and say which is from man and which from God; but I beg you to notice this:—there is looking within and without—and finally there is calling upon God.

After a few months or years look in on the man and see how contrition has bowed his heart; how humility fills him—what self distrust, what abasement of self in his own eyes—in a word, what a broken spirit. I see many refusing to respond to ordinary means, I feel like saying lookout for the extraordinary. God wants his sacrifice—the broken spirit, and it must be had though the body has to be broken.

Then there is the suffering born of the humiliations of life. You know them. How they break the spirit. And there is the suffering born of the disappointments of life. How they break the spirit. And the suffering of loneliness. Some seem called to it, and the suffering of long waiting. God and his suffering of long waiting. God and his suffering of long waiting. God and his suffering of long waiting.

Then there is the suffering born of the humiliations of life. You know them. How they break the spirit. And there is the suffering born of the disappointments of life. How they break the spirit. set aside and forgotten. Be content! A month or a year ago you were in the midst of an unbroken family circle; today they are all gone. Adapt yourself to the change. Why don't you go through the empty rooms just as though your child had not flittered away from you into heaven? Run up the steps and bound into the hall as though your wife was there to meet you instead of being yonder amid the palace of God? Can't you adapt yourself to the loneliness and darkness of your life? Adapt myself, you reply, God help me, I am a broken-spirited man.

These and a thousand other experiences constitute the suffering by which under grace the spirit is broken. But O how the soul rebels all along, like a caged eagle, dealing itself against the wires that confine it or like a prisoner one moment, still, then another fired with the intolerable thought of long captivity, springing up clutching and shaking the bars of the grated window, then sinking back with tears, sighs, groans and agonies unutterable. So little by little the work goes on; the spirit does not fall into line at once—does not accept at once the sharp pain—the bitter cup—the anguish of some intolerable experience; there is much wringing of hands in the soul—cries, that if heard would thrill a heart of stone—there is much of self-wounding, but in the midst of it all a gracious work is being done. Through it all comes stealing in the wisdom of God—along the lines of pain, along every shuddering spiritual nerve, upon every wound is poured the peace of God, the comfort of God, and the love of God, till by and by there comes happily, not exhaustion, not anaesthesia, but a great calm, a great peace, for there has been a great victory. Here is a broken spirit, but a broken spirit, my brethren, is a healed spirit; a whole spirit. Why is it that God so loves a broken spirit? One reason is, that it is an humble spirit. To that man will I look, and in him will I dwell; he that is of an humble spirit.

Another reason, the broken spirit is an emptied spirit. You can't get anything into a vessel that is full. God has to break the spirit, and then empty it before he can come in.

Another reason is, the broken spirit is a weaned from the spirit of the world. In a holy, beautiful sense, it has taken the veil, and lives now for God.

Finally the broken spirit is the only one that God can use with any effect in the world. Look when and where you will, the men and women who are blessing this earth, are those who know all about Gethsemane, who have trod the wine-press alone, and have been broken and ground in the mill of suffering.

When Rachel gave birth to her second son she said to him Benjamin, i. e. the son of my sorrow—afterward Jacob called him Benjamin, which means the son of my power. It is still the same, you have to be broken before you are Benjamin—you have to be a son of sorrow before you become a son of power.

How David was broken and broken but without that we would never have had the Psalms. What troubles beat upon the great heart of Paul; but what a power for good he was under God's hand. So with Payson—so with Multitt, whose spirit was broken by slander; but God was with him in life, and he stands as a pillar to him blessed at the last day.

It is the broken spirit who are doing all that is to be done on earth. It was Moses, a broken-spirited man, who led 1,000,000 of men through the wilderness. It is he who is to appear to the assembled multitude of the world, and the judgment that God has handed the powers of hell and overcome the world by an army of broken spirits men and women.

No need to wonder—their sufferings emptied them, and then God filled them. Through their eyes he looked, through their voice he spoke, at the judgment. Meeting the hindrance of his presence and power in the world.

Hereafter when suffering approaches don't be alarmed—don't grieve—say it is God's discipline, training, teaching, whereby I can be a blessing to others, as well as a sacrifice well pleasing to himself.

Science and Modern Discovery.

The present occupant of Sir Isaac Newton's Professorial Chair at Cambridge University, Professor G. G. Stokes, F. R. S., who is also Secretary of the Royal Society of England, delivered a remarkable address at the annual meeting of the Victoria Institute, in London, towards the end of June, Sir H. Barkly, G. C. M. G., F. R. S., occupied the chair, and the audience, which included many members of both Houses of Parliament, filled every part of the large hall. Professor Stokes gave an important account of the progress of physical science during the past quarter of a century, and reviewing the results, specially noted that as scientific truth developed, so had men to give up the idea that there was any opposition between the Book of Nature and the Book of Revelation. He said that for the last twenty years or so one of the most striking advances in science had been made in the application of the spectroscope, and in the information obtained with regard to the constitution of the heavenly bodies. The discovery that there were in these particular chemical elements, which were also present in our earth, exalted our idea of the universality of the laws of Nature, and there was nothing in that contrary to what he had learned in Revelation. He said that the God of the Hebrews was the God of the hills and not of the valleys. Entering with some particularity into the composition of the sun, the Professor said this gave an idea of an enormous temperature, since iron existed there in a state of vapour. This was utterly inconsistent with the possibility of the existence there of living beings at all approaching in character to those we have here. Are we then to regard this as a waste of materials? Might we not rather argue that as in animals we reason by the differentiation of office in different members of the solar system as marks of superiority, and could regard the sun as performing most important functions for that system? In fact all life on our earth was ultimately derived from the radiation of solar heat. Referring to the doctrine of conservation of energy and of dissipation of energy, he pointed out at some length how the sun, as far as we could see, was not called for an eternal duration in the same state and performing the same functions as now. We must regard the Universe on a grand scale, and then there was progress. If we contemplated nothing but periodically, perhaps we might rest content and think things would go on as eternal duration in the same state of the Universe on a grand scale as one of progress, this idea obliged us to refer to a First Cause, Professor Stokes concluded with recommending that the Annual Report of the Society, read by Captain Frank Petrie, the honorary secretary, be adopted. It showed that the number of home, American, and Colonial members had increased to upwards of eleven hundred, and that the Institute's object, in which scientific men whether in its ranks or not added, was to promote scientific inquiry, and especially in cases where questions of science were held by those who advanced them to be subversive of religion. All its Members and one-guinea Associates received its Transactions free, and twelve of its papers were now published in a people's edition, which was to be had in many of the Colonies and America. The address was delivered by Dr. J. Leslie Porter, President of Queen's College, Belfast, the subject being "Egypt: Historical and Geographical," a country with which he had been thirty years intimately acquainted—having returned to the antiquity of Egyptian records, which in so many instances bore on the history of other ancient countries, he proceeded to describe the various changes through which that country had passed since its first colonization, and, touching on its physical geography, came to the Nile, the main results of recent exploration. One or two special statements may be here recorded. Dr. Porter said:—"Were the Nile, by some convulsion of Nature, or by some gigantic work of engineering skill,—either of which is impossible,—suddenly cut off of its present channel away up to Khartoum, or at any other point above Wady Halfa, Egypt would speedily become a desert." No tributary enters the Nile below Berber, that is to say, for the last several miles of its course. "The fertile land of Egypt is about equal in extent to Yorkshire." The White Nile, issuing from Lakes Albert and Victoria Nyanza, is broad and deep, never rises above a few feet, and supplies the permanent source of the river of Egypt. "The other tributaries produce the inundation." Of these the Atbara, from the mountains of Abyssinia is the most fertilizing, as it brings down with it a quantity of soil. The deposit of this soil is slowly raising the bed of the river as well as extending on each side; for example, on the plain of Thebes the soil formed by deposits has in 2,500 years covered upon the desert third of a mile. "While the ruins of Hierapolis in the Delta, which once stood above reach of the inundation, are now buried in a mud deposit to a depth of nearly seven feet." In conclusion, he referred to Egypt and its present condition, saying:—"The commerce from the upper tributaries of the Nile, and from the wide region of the Soudan, forms an essential factor in the prosperity and progress of Egypt." The Earl of Belmore and the Right Hon. A. S. Ayrton moved and seconded a vote of thanks, after which the company present assembled in the Museum, where refreshments were served.

ORIGIN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ORAS. E. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, D. D., Rev. J. T. SAWYER
REV. W. L. O. HUMPHREY.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1885.

A splay letter on the "change of name" controversy, from the pen of Rev. T. W. Dye, will appear in our next issue.

By reference to the proceedings of the Denver Conference in another column, it will be seen that the vote on the change of name stood 16 for and 10 against change. That Conference is so situated as to feel the force of argument on the subject and the vote above shows a marked diversity of opinion. Some supposed the Denver Conference would favor the proposition almost unanimously.

The latest returns give the following statistics of British Methodism: Chapels, 16,834; ministers, 3,787; local preachers, 35,951; members, 768,624; Sunday-school scholars, 1,548,215. Within the last thirty years the population of England has increased 42.4 per cent; during the same period Methodist chapels have increased 45.7 per cent; sittings provided, 73.7 per cent; church members, 45.8 per cent; Sunday-school scholars, 175.5 per cent. These figures show that Methodism in England is more than keeping pace with the growth of the population.

A State Prohibition Convention for Louisiana will be held in Shreveport, August 19. We hope the convention will be largely attended. Let every parish send a representative and set forth such a declaration of principles as will unite all friends of reform for a glorious victory. The North Louisiana parishes are awake and one after another will take their stand in the prohibition column. More than everything else this great State needs relief from the curse of the liquor traffic. We invoke the earnest, zealous co-operation of the preachers of all churches, creeds and colors, in emancipating this commonwealth from the thralldom of the saloon.

We again urge brethren to push the missionary collections and forward the cash at once to Dr. Kelley. Our drafts must not be protested, and no missionary should be compelled to live on short rations. Their condition is quite different from ours. They have no wide circle of friends to render aid and sympathy, and no Board of Stewards to advise with them about matters temporal and ecclesiastical. If the drafts are not promptly forwarded and paid, they are embarrassed for the bare necessities of life. The Board of Missions only asks for the full assessment. If each pastor will forward that small amount, all stringency will be relieved and our cause in heathen lands take a long step forward. Two hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars is a meagre offering to convert the heathen world by a church of nearly a million members.

Good Key-Note. Faithful Warning.

The first Conference of the season has been held at Denver. The secretary writes: "The session was pleasant. The general collections were all a little in excess of the assessments—a good key-note for the Conference of 1885. Healthful progress is reported all along the lines."

Talk about the debt of the Board of Missions! There would be no debt in six months—indeed, there would be a little money in the treasury—if each preacher in each Conference would raise his full assessment for the church—$264,000—could be realized. What a consummation! Brethren, the Board has been in debt so long—let us arise, awake and get out. Reader, resolve that you will be one, and may the Lord assist you to succeed.

No debt is made by an officer of the Board. The appropriation for the support of the foreign missions are made by the full Board in annual session—all the Bishops present. The assessments are made at the same time. It is a part of our business to plead with the brethren to raise them in full. If this call should not be heeded—if the full assessment is not met—the Board must remain in debt. We tell you the plain truth. The alternative is before the church.

Please to send us every dollar you have in hand, and report the remainder at Conference.

ROBT. A. YOUNG,
Sec. Board of Missions.

The Change of Name.

We have but little to say on this much discussed question now before the church for decisive action. Much has been written, and other pens are doubtless sharpened for the contest. The arguments pro and con are identical with those advocated with more or less ability twenty years ago, with this difference—many of the considerations urged in favor of change have been disproved by the facts of history. It was insisted that the blues would narrow around us; that the border work would be disintegrated and destroyed, and that the great West would be closed against us if the geographical suffix was not removed. But what are the facts? The last two decades in many respects have been the most wonderful in our history, and our largest growth has been in the contested territory. If the advocates of change proved to be such poor prophets then, have we evidence of any new light now? Is the spirit of the seer more manifest than in former times?

We have no special affection for the suffix, nor for any sectional memories that gather about it. And had the name been changed in 1866, it would probably have been well. But we can readily see how the old war passions clung to the word, and how its elimination would have alienated many loyal and long-trying friends. Now, however, after all these years, with sectional differences buried and old, unpleasant memories forgotten, the reasons for change are not so potent and urgent.

Our duty and field of labor must necessarily have regard to the geography. It is so with all churches. No one organization expects to compass the world. Indeed, in mission fields there is a denominational comity that accords one territory to a certain church, while other missionaries seek different locations. And that is right. It is the spirit of Christ. The heathen are perishing without knowledge, and in the speediest way possible all evangelical Christians should seek their enlightenment. Wesley's grand motto, "The world is my parish," is rightly emblazoned on our banners. But nobody expects that the organization known as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under that or some other name, is to cover the globe. When Wesleyan missionaries had established our cause in this new world our fathers very properly became a family to themselves, and at the Christmas Conference, of 1784, became a separate, independent ecclesiastical organization. It caused some "pangs" among the brethren in England; but it was right and, by the history of one hundred years, wisdom has been justified of her children. And so in the fullness of time we may expect organic independence of what are now Methodist missions in Mexico, China, Japan, India, Brazil, etc. The Wesleyan missions of Australia are already virtually a distinct, separate organization, and must be so in the nature of things. It was the geography that gave American Episcopal Methodism a separate existence, and the geography made an independent ecclesiastical organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. But for Atlantic Ocean rolling between the history of American Methodism would have been written quite differently.

What we need just now is not so much a change of name as an ecclesiastical, fraternal American Methodism that will establish metes and bounds, and carefully avoid the waste and wrong of rival altars and antagonizing interests. Our Northern brethren feel no call to Canada because Methodism of a noble type is well established in that section. They regard a geographical line and properly remain on the southern side. To invade that territory and seek the establishment of a rival Methodism would be an unseemliness worthy of ecclesiastical rebuke. We have no call to New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago because Methodism already flourishes there, and in its growing success all Methodists ought to glory. Nor would our relation to those sections be altered by a change of name. Our church organization, by whatever name called, will be slow to send missionaries into that territory. What we need, therefore, is a commission, council or ecclesiastical conference that will delimit and rectify ecclesiastical lines, so that Methodism in America will not be handicapped by petty rivalries. This may seem impracticable—the hope of a visionary; but to our imagination it is a future, tangible reality. Then it may or may not be that ours is the proper designation.

But in any event the name suggested should not be adopted. And, as that is the only question before the Conference, it will meet an emphatic negative.

The Union of African Methodism.

We notice with pleasure that representatives of the African Methodist Episcopal Church and of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church have been in session at Washington City, discussing the feasibility of organic union. These churches are so nearly related to each other in history, polity and spirit—the principal divergence being on the theory of the episcopacy—that a union of strength seems every way desirable. They occupy the same territory, labor among the same people and have, substantially, the same kind of ecclesiastical government. The uniting of their forces would save much waste from unnecessary rivalry and conserve the general interest of African Methodism.

The commission included such men as Bishop Wayman, Bishop Jones, Prof. Green, John C. Davey, and others. It met in the John Wesley African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and patiently considered all difficulties in the way and the possibility of a perfect union. An exchange says: "Those constituting that commission were men of large brains as well as warm hearts. Some were graduates of colleges and one was a professor in an university. Their deliberations were conducted with both propriety and dignity. They carefully considered every point of difference, while avoiding any sacrifice of principle." The result of the meeting was an agreement upon a basis of union, the consolidated church to be called "The First United African Church." Of course this is tentative and may not be adopted. The plan has to be submitted to the Annual and Quarterly Conferences of the two churches, and can not be finally settled until the meeting of the General Conference in 1888. The union of the two Methodisms will give the new church a membership of 600,000, and adherents to the number of 2,500,000.

Many reasons present themselves to us in favor of this proposition. If all the colored Methodists of the United States were in one great organization, assisted and encouraged by the Churches, North and South, a new era would dawn upon this land. And why not?

An Immersion Revision.

A correspondent sends us a note concerning a new version of the Bible to suit our brethren of "much water." It adopts the exact text of the revised version except the substitution of the word "immerse" for "baptize" wherever it appears in the New Testament. This is the title-page:

The New Testament of Our Lord Jesus Christ, translated out of the Greek; being the version set forth A. D. 1811, compared with the most ancient authorities and revised A. D. 1881 by English and American scholars; embodying in the text the readings and renderings preferred by the American members of the International Committee of Revision, together with important emendations, having regard to philology, usage, context and doctrinal import. Published for Samuel Williams, former pastor of First Baptist Church, Pittsburg, Pa., by Fords, Howard & Hurlbut, New York. Copyright, 1881.

Reading that explicit title, one would suppose that it was the genuine and authorized edition of the International Committee of Revision. And some good Baptists have thus been imposed upon. In the case our correspondent alludes to the brother was elated to discover that American biblical scholars had at last agreed that "immerse" was the proper and only legitimate rendering of "baptize." And he is a very intelligent Baptist minister. Yet he was so sadly deluded that in his exultation he was willing to rest the whole controversy upon the rendering in the revision. Imagine his confusion and humiliation when shown an authorized edition of the revised New Testament from the Oxford press, in which the old word remains. The edition is a fraud and will ensnare the uninformed. Our good Baptist brethren have nothing to gain by encouraging its circulation, because when the fraud is exposed the recoil of truth will be as terrible as "that strange missile the Australian throw."

But some thoughts suggested by this incident demand utterance: 1. Our Baptist brethren insist that all scholarship sustains their view of the ordinance; that baptizo has a necessary modal signification, as all lexicography invariably demonstrates. If so, why these repeated efforts to circulate a New Testament with a different translation? Surely if there is no doubt as to the proper rendering and ceremonial meaning of the word "baptize," the substitution of another word is very unnecessary.

2. Every such instance is a confession of weakness and an argument against the Baptist theory. If in face of their solemn and repeated assertions that the word can mean but one thing, they endeavor to secure another rendering, it evidences a lack of confidence in their position.

Plainness of Speech.

There are numbers of people who do not understand in what plainness of language consists. One class contends for the old Anglo-Saxon, as if nothing could fall to be plain if expressed in that language. Another thinks that short sentences can never be anything but lucid and impressive. Another would exclude all rhetorical figures. Many more think that plainness is not in style or language, but in matter, and, therefore, they would propose nothing but the simplest topics and treat them after the most commonplace fashion. Another class still regards nothing plain unless it is blunt and coarse. We frequently meet with people who want a "plain preacher" and a preacher "who is always plain," and too frequently people and preachers have defined plainness after one or the other of the above methods. The truth is, the term "plain preacher" needs explanation and the public mind needs to be educated to real plainness. Many of those who profess to be the plainest people in their lives and speech need the most copious glossaries appended to them. "Write down to people," wrote a friend to me some time since. "Don't go too deep," wrote another. "Don't be full of reasons and reasoning," a third. "Cut out all your long words and sentences—be plain," a fourth. "We use great plainness of speech," wrote St. Paul to the Corinthians. But was it in short words? Let us take some of his words as examples: Diakonia, katakrisis, dekolaziti, hyperballontes, katargoumenon, anakalyptomeron, anagnosketai. These are only a few of the words taken from the immediate context. Was it in short sentences? Let anyone read for himself the long parenthetical sentences and answer. Was it in avoiding "deep" subjects? No, for he "searched the deep things of God," grappled with the profoundest subjects known to human thought. Was it in the rejection of all rhetorical figures? No one ever used the figures of rhetoric more or to a better purpose. Was it because he neglected to furnish arguments or illustration? He was and is the great logician, the disciples of Aristotle to the contrary. And yet St. Paul was a "plain man" in person and a "plain preacher" and a "plain writer." If he used terms that did not seem plain to others, it was because he had thoughts that were so much beyond ordinary that people thought him foggy; just as the mountain rising into a much clearer atmosphere than that of the valley appears to be blue or mist-enveloped.

The plainness of the pulpit degenerates into dullness and platitudes through many of our "plain preachers." "Plain religion" becomes a desert waste in many of the "plain" professors of our day. Many of these people are so disgusted with the way the preachers "put on" nowadays that they refuse to attend preaching. They can't keep their religion if they go to church! And it might be plainly intimated to them that it is of a kind that will not do to keep? "Who made thee the judge of another man's servant?" Many do not go to church because the preacher is always discussing some doctrine of the creed, and they are tired of hearing so much of those arguments. Why don't preachers be "plain" and preach revival sermons, or something to build up or comfort believers? As if a revival sprung from any kind of preaching but doctrinal preaching, or if any believer was ever edified by anything but doctrine!

"Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine," is the apostle's direction to Titus. Now, a "sound doctrine" can not always be plain—i. e., thoroughly grasped by the intellect of even the preacher. He may, however, speak of things befitting the doctrine. For example, the doctrine of the incarnation is a "sound" doctrine—i. e., promotive of moral health, which is the meaning of "sound." But we can speak of things that become this doctrine without being able to explain it. Nearly every doctrine is difficult of explanation and even of comprehension; but we can state the doctrine dogmatically, and then illustrate, amplify, or even prove it as a fact, while we do not comprehend the mode or cause of its existence. If we do this, we shall often have to go into "deep water," we shall be forced to employ terms and sentences which are long and difficult, but which may nevertheless be plain. The trouble here is more in the advocates of "plainness," who use this subterfuge to avoid impeachment for mental indolence and moral hebetude. The plain preacher is a teacher;

but he is a very poor teacher who is so "plain" that he never goes beyond the "three R's"—reading, 'rithm' and 'rithmetic. I know some teachers who manage to be popular with their scholars, and yet never carry them beyond a point attainable by a thoughtful apprentice of a hen-wife. So, too, there are preachers who profess to be "plain," but are really lazy, that never advance their congregations beyond the crudest theology known to ante-Darwinian anthropomorphites. They are popular because they never impose upon their hearers any of the labor of thought nor press them to the solution of the difficult problems of Christian life. They forget that the great business of the teacher is to impel his pupils to the exertion of their own faculties, and that no one can enjoy the beauties of science until he has made science his own thorough study. Then science is plain, and the plainness of speech in the scientist is manifest. So, too, the science of religion is not enjoyed because people have not been brought through the labor necessary to make it their own. How will these "plain" preachers and people be prepared to enjoy the "lectures" of those professors who drill the advanced classes in heaven? St. Paul will be one of those, still "using great plainness," but ever and anon throwing out a synecdoche which will be all Greek to our "plain" people. Those, however, who have passed through tribulations until they have been "glorified together with him" will still agree that it is all "plain." We want plainness, but we want also plainness promotive of moral and mental exertion. T. A. S. A.

A Note from "Gilderoy."

We extract the following of general interest from a private letter to the editor:

"We had the most spiritual District Conference I ever attended. It was a blessed feast to all present. Many penitents were at the altar, and two or three were converted before Conference closed. The meeting was protracted. Mourners were called at every service. We had a sunrise prayer meeting every morning. The preaching was simple, plain, earnest gospel truth. No brother tried to air himself before the public—all tried to present Christ. Indeed, it has been more than two years since I heard any preacher of any church try to make a show in the pulpit. Simplicity, earnestness and fervor are the chief characteristics of our preaching now. The fruits of such preaching are manifest. Christians are growing in grace, congregations are larger and more attentive, sinners are convicted and mourners are converted by scores and by hundreds. This is as it should be. Even our young men do not attempt to send up sky rockets from their pulpits. They stick to the gospel—the only thing we are commanded to preach. I do not know of a single preacher now who makes a bulletin board of his pulpit to advertise the scientific nothings of Huxley, Darwin, Tyndall, et id omne genus, or some such words, as you scholarly fellows say. I have heard the sayings of scientists and indeed strongly stated in the pulpit, and then feebly answered or not answered at all. This is a great mistake, a folly and a sin. The simple gospel of Christ, coming from a warm heart full of love and wholly unadorned, is the best antidote in the world to infidelity of all kinds. It strikes at the heart, the seat of all the infidelity that is dangerous to the soul.

"Well, I have no news for you. We have good crops—the best we have had since the war. The health of the country is pretty good."

Two Churches in Meridian.

MR. EDITOR: Our projected second church in Meridian is now an accomplished fact. Our old church has been torn down, removed about a mile and erected on a very eligible lot on the street railroad, near its western terminus. I preached in it last night (July 19) to a very large congregation. This ecclesiastical infant bears the name of "West End Church." A Sunday-school will be organized soon under the superintendency of Dr. A. A. Dillehay. The walls of our new church are rising slowly.

W. C. BLAOK.

In a business note to the ADVOCATE the Rev. E. B. Ramsey, of Cuno, Miss., writes the editor a few cheering words as following:

We have had no special revival here this year; but our church is gradually growing. The whisky traffic is so nearly demolished in this region of country I am expecting to see a class of men reached by the gospel whose brains have not before been sufficiently cool to consider the question of salvation. I have been to two temperance picnics recently; one given by our colored friends. It is the popular side of the question up here to advocate prohibition.

The Wesleyans have 6,000 communicants and 20,000 adherents in Ceylon.

Rev. D. L. Rader, of the Denver Conference, has joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is stationed at Cheyenne.

The average Sunday plate collection in Rev. Newman Hall's Church, London, is $175, and in Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's congregation, in the great tabernacle, $345.

Prof. W. F. Tillett, of the Vanderbilt University, is traveling abroad. The last Nashville Advocate contains an interesting article from his pen written from Ireland. He makes good use of his eyes.

In China the first Sunday-school of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1848, with nine boys in attendance. There are now seventy-five schools connected with that church, containing 2,500 pupils.

Rev. J. C. Morris, late of the Louisville Conference, but for several years a member of the Denver Conference, was elected to represent that Conference in the next General Conference. Bro. Morris has done a capital work in Denver and will make an efficient representative.

The Brookhaven District Conference will meet at Adams Camp Ground, Thursday, August 13, at 10 A. M. Conveyance for delegates will be provided at Summit, both on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning. Bro. Hines suggests that all who can, will go by their own conveyance.

The Rev. John M. Bomfolt, of the German Mission Conference, stationed at Bellville, Tex., died on the twenty-sixth ultimo. He passed away at the early age of twenty-seven and in the midst of great usefulness. For several years he was stationed in this city and here he left a precious memory.

The Providence Camp Meeting, closed last week, was in many respects the most remarkable in the history of that annual feast of tabernacles. There were about fifty conversions and a very Pentecost took upon the church. Revs. J. G. Jones, J. A. B. Jones, H. P. Lewis, T. L. Holman, J. T. Nicolson, H. D. Howell and others were in attendance and gave the great congregations "food convenient."

The evening open-air meeting, conducted by Rev. Geo. A. Mandeville, in Carrollton, grew in interest. The congregations are large each evening and a good work seemingly is being done. Some come from curiosity, and others to ridicule, but the spirit of conviction is nevertheless manifest. On Sunday night there were twenty penitents at the altar and seven conversions. The meetings continue this week. Bro. Mandeville is assisted by all the city pastors.

Rev. George M. Wright, of the Virginia Conference, and pastor of Centenary Church, Portsmouth, Va., died at his home on the twenty-third ultimo. He was unusually successful as a pastor and universally popular. His death was a triumphant and his memory will be tenderly cherished by his Conference. Dr. Lafferty says "there could not be named a member whose death will be more sincerely regretted."

Bro. Henry A. Abrens, son of our neighbor, Rev. Dr. J. B. Abrens, was licensed to preach on Friday last at the Dryades Street Quarterly Conference. He has been for several years a student at Centenary College, and gives promise of large usefulness in the work of the ministry. We welcome our young brother into the ranks of blessed labor and sacrifice, and congratulate his father that he has been accounted worthy to train a prophet for the Lord.

Sir Moses Montefiore, the great Jewish philanthropist, died at his home in England last week. Less than a year ago the one-hundredth anniversary of his birth was celebrated with imposing ceremonies by the Jews of England and America. The Christians also joining in a tribute to eminent charity. His was a noble life of good deeds, and his large fortune was generously and wisely distributed. Among the world's benefactors the name of Moses Montefiore will have conspicuous place.

Rev. Dr. R. K. Brown, president of the Nashville district, and a man of better poise we know not in our Israel, makes a candid, manly showing for Methodism in his district. He has known Nashville for twenty-six years and says the church was never in a better spiritual condition, and no doubt justly claims that "the people called Methodists" in Nashville will compare favorably with any body of Christian people in any other town, or city or country, East or West." So much he has said in reply to some criticisms on the church in Nashville. His statement ought to be final.

has enjoyed every facility in preparing this volume. This is a good book for the average reader. It avoids techn

Sister Covart was an earnest Christian lady, raised by an affectionate mother. She professed conversion and joined the Baptist Church when quite young. She afterwards joined the Episcopal Church, South, in the year 1855, and remained until her death. She was called to her rest on the evening of the 3rd instant. She was resting peacefully in the arms of her dear Savior. Her kind friends and relatives were gathered around her bed, and she was surrounded by the love and affection of her friends and relatives.
She was a devoted wife and mother, and her death is a great loss to her family and the church. She was a member of the Episcopal Church, South, and her funeral services were held at the Episcopal Church, South, on the 5th instant. She was buried in the Catholic cemetery at Mobile, Ala.

CARRUTH-It becomes my painful duty to communicate to you and the many friends and relatives who read your estimable paper, the sad news that our friend, neighbor and Christian sister, Mrs. Victoria Huff Carruth, is no more. She was the daughter of the late Dr. Philip Huff, and was born on her father's plantation, in Wilkerson county, Miss., February 8, 1838. She was married to Dr. Ansel A. Carruth, of East Feliciana parish, La., in 1860, and immediately moved to her husband's Spring Hill plantation in the parish of East Feliciana, where she died Tuesday evening, July 21, 1885, at 11 o'clock P. M., at the age of forty-seven years, five months and six days. In her early life she made a public profession of faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The faith and principles which she adopted, she firmly believed and zealously practiced, and beautifully illustrated to the end of her life. She possessed in a large measure that meek and quiet spirit which, in the sight of God, is of great price, with those lovely qualities and graces which adorn the true and noble woman, ever holding forth and exhibiting most prominently the Christian characteristics of grace divine. As a Christian mother, she was all that children could desire. As a friend, she was ever true, never failing, and always dispensing the milk of genuine kindness to all. As a church member, her life was a continuous stream of good works; a tree bearing fragrant fruits to the honor and glory of God, and to the comfort and delight of the household of faith.
The family, the church and the community have all suffered a sad loss by her removal. A long consistent life and a triumphant death makes us confident that our loss is her gain.

MORGAN-SISTER A. M. MORGAN
was born in the State of Georgia, January 23, 1842, where she grew up to womanhood. She was married to J. W.
Morgan, and moved to Jackson parish, La., (now Lincoln) when very young. In early life she had a spell of typhoid fever, from which she never fully recovered, but resulted in consumption, which finally closed her earthly career. She was a devoted wife and mother, and her death is a great loss to her family and the church. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and her funeral services were held at the Methodist Church, South, on the 5th instant. She was buried in the Catholic cemetery at Mobile, Ala.

NOBLES-MARGARET COOKER was born June 15, 1829, in Green county, Miss. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1845, and was married to L. M. Nobles, November 15, 1858. She died after an illness of 41 days, July 10, 1885.
These dates, embracing a period of fifty-six years and more, make the commencement, progress and close of a life—a life which made the world better, brighter and happier for its existence.

Sister Nobles was a godly woman.
She was converted and joined the church of her choice, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early girlhood. When she was married, she carried her religion into her household management. Her life was regulated by the Word of God. Her home was the place of peace and contentment. She and her bereaved husband, were of one mind in regard to their purposes. To live Christians and to secure a home in heaven were their one aim. To this end the lovers of Jesus, and especially the promoters of the gospel, were well served. Whatever household care engaged her heart or hand, she was made to feel that a call or visit was unreasonable. Alas! that the general run of our people, and especially our ladies, and our constant Christian friends, should miss the warm hand-clasp and words of welcome.

The crowning of a good life is its ending. Sister Nobles was conscious that her departure was near, and murdering patience marked her last, long weary sickness. Though suffering intensely forty-one days, she was resolved to the will of the good One. As the end approached, she was buoyed up by the precious hopes of the gospel, and her faith grew stronger. Her Christian joy found expression in songs of praise. The old hymns about heaven were on her lips often. She told her loved ones not to weep for her, but to meet her "beyond the river."

By her death, the church loses one of its best and most faithful members; the community, a true friend; the authority, a ready sympathizer. The old saying, "these Methodists do well," is additional confirmation, and heaven gains another saint. "Her children rise up and call her blessed."

May the whole family meet at last in the great congregation above, in the prayer of her PANTON.

EVANS-Died at her residence in Kemper county, Miss., July 13, 1885,
Mrs. MARY E. EVANS, wife of J. S.
Evans. Our deceased sister was born December 22, 1845, joined the church in 1863, in her thirteenth year, and from that time until her death she lived a blameless life. I have known Sister Evans for fifteen years, and for the last three years I have been her pastor. In these years of intimate acquaintanceship
I never detected any spirit, temper, or set contrary to the law of the gospel. She was not boastful or demonstrative in her religious exercises, but held on the even tenor of her way, giving out a steady light. She loved the church and evinced it by her readiness to do what she could to promote its interests. She prized highly the visits of her pastor, and knew how to make him feel that his visits were appreciated. For more than ten years she has nursed with all the tenderness and care of a devoted wife, her afflicted husband, who has been, and is still, suffering under some sort of pulmonary complaint. O how much he would prize these kind attentions of the departed loved one. She was regular in attendance upon the services of the sanctuary, and when present, by her devout devotion and interested attention helped the preacher in the delivery of his message. He was sure of having, at least, one interested hearer, one that sym-pathized with him and prayed for the success of the word. My brethren in the ministry know what an inspiration
there is in such listeners.

Sister Evans was stricken down with bloody flux about two weeks before her death, and all that could be done by friends, relatives, and physician to arrest the disease, was done. From the first she had small hopes of recovery, but expressed a willingness to abide the decision of God's will. Some days before her death she spoke of "going home," and when reminded by her husband that she would not fall to understand these faint whispers.

She died with a sweet smile upon her face, as if she had caught glimpses of the "radiant shore," and these visions of heavenly bliss filled her soul with joy and gladness that wrenched her face in smiles.

Thus has passed from our midst one of our purest and best women. May God help us all to profit by this sad dispensation of his providence.
D. O. W. KILLIS.

MISCELLANEOUS.
LEMON ELIXIR.
An Old Citizen of Atlanta, Ga.,
By the recommendation of Rev. C. C. Davis, I used Dr. Holmes' Lemon Elixir for a severe chronic case of indigestion, palpitation and irregular action of the heart with constipation and biliousness. I also suffered greatly with gravel and great pain in the back and kidneys, much of the time unable to stand alone. I was treated by many physicians and used many remedies, but got no relief. Dr. Holmes' Lemon Elixir made me feel like a new man, and I am now able to do all my usual work. I am now a well man, my wife has for many years suffered greatly with constipation and headache from which she could get no relief.
The Lemon Elixir has permanently cured her.
Sold by Druggists, 50 cents and $1 per bottle.
Prepared by H. Holmes, N. D., Atlanta, Ga.

PATIENCE.

BY BENJ. H. TORRY.

Let me patient be, dear Christ!
Hath not thy great love sufficed?
Need I more of help below
Than the comfort thou dost know?
Every weakness seen of man,
Greater judging, thou dost scan;
And the earnest strife is known Unto thee, dear Lord, alone.
I underneath the wild sunset,
Faith, deep rooted in my breast,
Bids me onward calmly go,
Wise trusting "thou wilt know."
And if thou see'st aught of good,
Mutter not, none understood.

Change of Name.

MR. EDITOR: Steel and Lowrance, two of our boys that used to be perfectly reliable on doxies, so we all thought, have gone square back on us and "out-herod" all of us on heresies. My! listen at Lowrance, he want a change because our church name "is a misnomer." Misnamed, he! Who has a right to name a church or anything else? Answer: Those in closest vital relation to the church or thing. Who gave us our present church name? Answer: Our fathers, and of right, because they stood in closest relation to the church, and the name they gave to the church, after the baptism of fire, water and blood, was owned of God and man. Went to registry on his-story's page and in the book of life. There it stands to-day, thank God. While the church under this name, without a blot on her glorious escutcheon, glides with her glory the name of the one and rejoices that her name is written in the other. Change it! "May my hand forget cunning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth" before I can stoop below the profaneness of au-thority. Lowrance, would you change your name if one title of the glory belonged to it that attaches to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, unless you had either done or found out something low and mean enough to disgrace you and wished to escape notice and proper identification? What have we done, or what did our fathers, that we should change? Change! No; not for "misnomer." For all the rest that you mislay. Try your etymological hand on some other word or name. You have failed on this. We know our name well down here to be outwitted and cheated and defrauded. Now, say dear Dr. Steel, your open letter to a North-western pastor, alias a Kansas City preacher, alias "J. W.," or some other alias, and certain points of resemblance in your letters, as "auspicious—ruse, for instance, the suspicion that you and I have been juggling. Circumstances only, you know. No hanging, you see, however deserving the subject may be. You say: "My mind has long been made up in favor of a change," though you "have held yourself open to a different conviction," etc. Now that the word "long," as a modifying word, having the element of time connected with it, makes your words have the lightest possible weight and influence. Now you can not play old grand-papa on us that way. You are not to have your opinion on such a vital issue go unchallenged when in point of fact its chief merit seems to lie in its unsupported pretension to be as of the ancient of days. I suspect your opinion was formed and your "mind made up" on this point when you made your visits North and in their halls of mirth and revelry you saw the handwriting that was—and is to this day untaken away—against us. That fixed you, and it has had its influence on others "I wot of." You also speak of "the conditions under which we must carry on our work" as necessitating a change of name. Pray sir, what are those conditions, and in what do they differ from the conditions under which the church has worked since 1844; or, as for that, since 1744; yea, since the dawn of the Christian era? Eternal vigilance, eternal fidelity to the divinely imposed duties and obligations contained in the great command of our Lord are the conditions named; but not is it named that the church must yield up her name and surrender whatsoever more horrid ruffian may demand. Not so, not so.

"The mock heroic South!" Steel, ask the men of the North, who met the proud Southern on the field, in the forum, or elsewhere; yea, on all the planes, in all the fields where there was contest for the prize, go ask them if there is anything "mock heroic" in the true South. Get their answer, and be convinced if not converted.

You make several statements derogatory in the last degree to the South. Your thing at our poverty in the words, "short-lived enthusiasm," "local issues," etc., is the unkindest of all. When from the richest we were left the poorest people under the sun, with thousands of greedy ones to virtually confiscate what little was left in the way of stock and supplies after the war was said to be over, put into and kept in a state of military proscription. Insult added to injury, and then in turn, for variety, add daily injury to insult, and then millions of irresponsible negroes turned loose upon the people and a thousand other things as humiliating, as they were trying and oppressive. Then our general taxation—special taxation—cotton tax—revenue tax, and every other tax, then negro school tax, and when all this came out of the hands of the owner of the lands and does in a large measure to this day, making and keeping him poorer and poorer; and now, since we are hearing, as we have borne this burden, and can hardly pay the cost of making a crop with such labor. You taunt us with "mock heroic South," etc. Now, Steel, if nothing but change will do you, just change yourself please and let us alone down here; for I tell you now, you will never carry me over into Kansas or anywhere there about. Now, suppose you get your majority, and go away from the Church, South, and the local Boards of Trustees, for Crawford circuit, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, holding church and parsonage property under a deed of conveyance made by a certain party to them for the use of said church, and when no longer used as provided in that instrument of writing, the property reverts to the original owner, his heirs, etc. Now, what will you do? and what will you do in the case of the trustees holding on to the "South?" I shall stay "South." Go ye all who want to.

It has been predicted that the next secession would be northward. May-be so. There will not be any fighting over it. You object to the name "South" for strange reasons. You say the name will "attract notice." Just what we want. "A city on a hill," you know. "Challenge inquiry," exactly right. "Inquire for the old paths," "Give offense" —to whom—to the Yankees, then turn and say, "Get behind me, Satan, for thou art an offense unto me." Why, sir, you need not change the name. Your Frenchman's "Royal Tiger" case will not do, Steel. The church must never cater to the chameleonism of this world, and especially to the French part of it, and more especially to a French menagerie keeper. Why, sir, you had change on the brain, and brain on the change; no telling what sort of a change is going on in such a changing fellow.

"To sum up," you write. Well, I have followed you, and I have seen many a doughty knight of the "dialectic school" sum up his statements and unproved assertions with the same "go easy tune," and when veritas vci and veritas loci both had been suppressed. The conclusion reached was about this, What I know about this is the inverse ratio of what I thought I knew. Esse quam videri is a good motto. Doctor.

T. W. DYER.

Church Extension.

The Board of Church Extension at its recent meeting adopted the following:

Whereas, The Louisville, the Kentucky and the Western Virginia Annual Conferences have by an united effort secured in cash and solvent notes and subscriptions, which are being promptly paid, and nearly all of which will be collected during our present fiscal year, the sum of $15,000, being an average of $5,000 to each Conference, and have thus founded the Kavanagh Loan Fund, and demonstrated the practicability of similar efforts and success in other Conferences; therefore, be it

Resolved, That all the other Annual Conferences be and they are hereby invited and urged to make through their Conference Boards the effort to secure within their respective bounds between this time and March 31 next at least $5,000 each, to be constituted into a separate loan fund to be named by the Conference and to be turned over to this Board and held and administered by it.

Resolved, That whatever may have been paid by any Conference directly to our Board on the Centenary Loan Fund to the credit of such Conference as a nucleus for a separate loan fund whenever this Board is officially notified by the Conference of its acceptance of this offer.

The Missouri Conference, through the officers of its Conference Board, has already secured and paid in nearly enough to complete its $5,000. Others are at work. Let a few good-sized donations be secured in advance, and the matter be vigorously pressed at the approaching Conference session and success is certain.

DAVID MORTON, Sec.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 17, 1885.

Judge Gunby's Reply.

MR. EDITOR: A private letter to Judge Gunby will render anything like a lengthy rejoinder to his reply to my open letter unnecessary. It may be well enough, however, for me to state (1) that I was not anxious to engage in controversy with Mr. Gunby on the subject of his late baccalaureate, nor did I intend even to write a single line about it, until, perhaps, ten days had expired from the time of its deliverance. And I only concluded to do so after finding out that the general impression made by his address was that all vice and virtue received their complete and full return in this life without respect to any distinction, such as religious, social, moral or otherwise. This was the impression made on myself and from numerous miscellaneous comments by others, which I heard, I believed that they were so impressed. Hence my letter, no part of which, I trust, is a violation to any extent of the New Testament law of charity. (2) In said letter I fully conceded many things concerning the results of virtue and vice in this life, and which my respected friend clearly and impressively set forth to the young ladies of the graduating class. I was also careful to state what I conceived him to teach in addition to this, though not specifically and of set purpose inculcated, and it was with respect to this part, or thought, as I understood it, that I took issue with him. In my first letter it is assumed that I may have misunderstood the position of my honorable friend on this point. On the supposition that I had not, and that his position was correct, I saw very clearly (1) either that universalism was true, or (2) that materialism was; and that when the body died, the soul died with it. Neither of which theological tenets is believed by any considerable number of our citizens. If my surmise was incorrect, as it now appears to be from the judge's letter, I certainly am glad of it. He surely does not believe that all vice, including sin against God, receives its complete desert in this life. If he did not intend to make this impression on his auditors, when he addressed the graduating class, then we have indeed mistaken Mr. Gunby, and here make our public apology for having misrepresented him in the matter.

In conclusion, and in answer to the judge's question, "Whether it is a good Christian doctrine that justice is postponed to the next life?" I reply, The Christian doctrine of sin, i. e., the known and willful violation of moral law, is that it does not receive the full and complete desert in this life, but is postponed to that which is to come. Does Mr. Gunby believe this or not? Very truly,

JAS. J. BILLINGSLEY.

The Hidden Sorrow.

The open grief we all see; but there are sorrows that never show themselves. As keen and sore as any that pass under the public eye, they yet hide themselves away; eating their way more deeply into the hearts of those who endure them and hurrying on the end, that is the direction of them, all. Sometimes they are not even suspected. Externally all is peace, the school of life having taught the lesson of perfect self-control. Even often so deceives society by its smiles and laughs that it thinks of a perennial spring of joy where there is only a festering sore and rankling pain. Sometimes it is partly seen, but in the most imperfect manner. What is visible is only a suggestion. The real trial is out of sight. This hiddenness is often inevitable and unavoidable. There may not be friends to go to; or, if there are, the troubles are of such that they can not be explained. The secrecy of life is burdened with this kind of misfortune, though it is a privilege of all, and a happy one, too, to carry their troubles to the Lord. He is the burden bearer upon whom every one can lay his load. What is kept hidden from earth is made open to heaven. The sorrow never mentioned even to the nearest earthly associate is constantly told in the ear of the heavenly Father. That ear is ever open to the cry of distress. The suffering that no human hand is trying to alleviate, because the existence of it is not known, is receiving the healing touch of him who has the pity of a father, and if it does not entirely remove the sore it will so far mitigate its pain that the sufferer will not be tried with more than he can bear. There would be many a broken heart that now is only heavy and subdued if it were not that pains, which to human ears must remain unspoken, can be so confidently told to him who says to us all, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

SUNDAY NIGHT.

JULY 12, 1885.

"One of These Little Ones."

There are many ways of offending them. Often in avoiding one extreme we go to its opposite. The study of children is interesting and profitable; and if we would avoid offense, we must know them. We must also study the end of their being in life as connected with God and man. We must study things so that we can give them food convenient. Children must be pleased, but edified. They must be assisted, but they must also learn self-reliance. So on for a thousand things. But we may offend:

1. By neglect or contempt of them on account of size and age. How few of us, and how seldom that few, remember and act upon the truth that person is not dependent for its dignity upon bodily conditions! Person in the infant is as perfect as it was in Methuselah on his nine hundredth birthday. Then "take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones." The child is docile, and soon may learn from you that respect is paid to size and age rather than to the intrinsic dignity of the person which is essentially divine. Thus its mind is warped and prejudiced, perhaps, forever.

2. By taking too fond and over-weening note of all their sayings and doings or evincing too great anxiety for their bodily welfare as compared with that of mind and heart. Parents are often greater foes than their children; and many a boy and girl has had the misfortune of not loving their parents in infancy. The child is taught that there is nothing to be expected of it, and so it ceases to try to do anything.

3. By unduly stressing some quality or faculty to the prejudice of all the rest. The genius is too much affected and the "jack-at-all-trades" too little. This would be a miserable world if all its inhabitants were geniuses. I never could be comfortable where there was more than one at a time and then only when he had folded his wings and was like any other man. A genius is the most distressing company I ever suffered from, and especially if he was self-conscious.

4. By seeking merely to please them. This is a very poor practice. Entertainment is trifling next to sacrifice. What is a laugh or a groan, a smile or a tear, in itself? Very little; but the true mission of a spirit is above the dalliance which evokes either. There is nothing sublimer than a human soul standing in proper poise and attitude before God and the world; and nothing more pitiable than that same soul tickling itself with its own whimsicalities or making merchandise of those of others.

Some time since I heard a popular man address an audience of children. He told anecdotes or said quaint or ridiculous things to create a laugh. Then he undertook to interject a solemn moral lesson. He reminded me of the man who drove away the spirit of reverence in order to teach the fear of God. There was a little six-year-old who heard him and was shocked at the behavior of the people in the church. The little fellow had a better idea of the sanctity of a church than did the popular lecturer. Sad day to him, if henceforth he loses the delicious sense of the sacredness of the place! Brethren, heed the warning. There is something better than raising a laugh among boys. "The man of sorrows" made no funny speeches, yet the boy will linger at his blessed words and revere the sweet and holy charm of his divine dignity. A laugh at the expense of one boy's reverence for the sanctuary is bought too dear.

From Arcadia, La.

At Palmy's Chapel there seemed to be considerable spiritual interest, and when we left on Monday, after a delightful, melting time at the eleven o'clock service, we thought there was every indication of a good meeting. The pastor was expecting the help of Bro. Cornett, whose home is just two miles from the church. Bro. Stone is losing about in his mind and strongly hinting on all proper occasions to the people in that neighborhood the necessity of building very soon a Methodist Church in the saw-mill town of Simsboro. If he succeeds in doing so, it will be the third church finished on the Ruston circuit this year.

The report of the corresponding secretary of the Louisiana Woman's Missionary Society, published in your last number, is certainly very encouraging, showing, as it states, "that a decided advancement has been made." Eighteen new auxiliaries reported. Why can not as many more be organized by the pastors and sisters during the remainder of this year? The efficient corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. J. Foster, of Shreveport, well says: "We need the practical encouragement of pastors in this work in the way of organizing new societies and keeping alive those already in operation. This woman's work for woman begins to be felt as a power in the world. If the brethren endorse it, let their works prove their faith. 'Help those women' who would labor with you in advancing the gospel as did St. Paul. Hold up their hands and let them also bring their gifts of love and faith into the treasury." Dear brethren of the Homer district, and of the entire Conference, it does strike me that we ought to count it a blessed privilege to give our sympathy and all possible "practical encouragement" to our mothers, wives and sisters in their missionary work. It is a very difficult matter in some country places when the people live far apart and far from the church to organize and keep alive either a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society or a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Still the more the difficulties to be overcome the harder should we strive, and there will be found by every pastor, if he will insist and persist, in the most unexpected quarters, earnest, devoted women whose hearts are world loving, and who will enter upon and carry along this grand work. I have sometimes thought that there is real inspiration in the obstacles that rise as impassable mountains in the way of God's workers. It is in the order of things for impossibilities to go down before an all-conquering faith. The Methodist preacher, who is the genuine article, has it not in him to stand back because in the path of duty he finds difficulties hard to overcome. It is in our power, brethren, to give needed help to the women of our church in their missionary efforts and let us every one cheerfully do so.

The Particle De or Du.

Vanity will catch at most anything to sustain itself. A woman once married a man for the sake of the little particle de before his name. Families of French descent sometimes make themselves very offensive to their neighbors because of their little de or du which they vainly think justifies them in laying claim to ancient honors. The following, which I translate from a French periodical of excellent character, may help to undeceive some:

One of our readers, remembering that we had published an article on the value of the particle de or du as supporting pretensions to nobility, asks "whether this question has been the object of any special study." We can, among other authorities, point out to him that of the author of the book entitled: "Code of the French nobility; or, summary of the legislation on titles, the manner of acquiring and losing nobility on armories, liveries, the particle, etc., with notes." By an old magistrate.

Here is an extract from this rare book:

The particle de or du preceding a name is not in France a proof of nobility; it is at most only a proof of proprietorship.

Previous to 1789 the smallest bourgeois were as duly entitled sieurs of their farms, woodlands, meadows and moorlands as were the gentlemen lords of their noble fiefs.

The names most widely distributed among the people, Duval, Dubois, were in early times written du Val, du Bois. Those who pretend to be ennobled in amplifying their names should, said de la Roque, recollect that there are a great number of ancient names, as Bertrand, Paillet, Pellet, Damas, Chabert, Sanglier, Tournemine, Bissot, Foucault, Chasteignier, Bacou, Tessou, Gouffier, which have no particle. Real gentlemen do not seek these vain ornaments; often they are even offended at them. It was without doubt for this reason that Jacques Thezard, Lord of Kasaris, Baron of Tournebu, was once greatly offended that some one had added de to his ancient and illustrious name, of which he was the last legit. —Magasin Pittoresque.

O. D. PICKELS.

The funeral of Gen. Grant, on Saturday last, was the most imposing ever witnessed in this new world or, possibly, in any country or age. The President and his cabinet, distinguished citizens from every section of the republic, representatives of multitudinous organizations, military, civil, and charitable, and thousands of people followed in the procession. While these mourning multitudes were carrying the body of the dead general to his tomb in Riverside Park, memorial services were being held in all the cities and towns of the land, North and South. The spirit that prompted these public demonstrations in the South is worthy of all commendation. Not to encourage or countenance mere hero-worship, but to foster a stronger national sentiment, encourage among the young a purer patriotism and reaffirm allegiance to our common country. We are back "in our father's house" and expect to go out no more.

—Writing of the article in the Quarterly Review on Bishop Linus Parker, Dr. J. C. Simmons says, in the Pacific Methodist: "It reveals our last lost as one of the most lovable of men. There is a fascination about the character of this glorified Bishop, as portrayed by this writer, that makes one feel glad to claim him as our Bishop."

READING THE APPOINTMENTS.

Then a mist came over my vision as the Bishop still read on.
And the veil that hides the future for a moment was withdrawn.
For I saw the world's Redeemer far above the Bishop stand.
On his head a crown of glory and a long roll in his hand.
Round his throne a countless number of the ransomed, listening, pressed.
He was stationing his preachers in the city of the living.
Some whose names were most familiar, known and revered by all.
Went down to the smaller mansions back against the city wall.
One who took the poorest churches miles away from crowds and cars Went up to a throne of splendor with a crown above his head.
How the angels sang to greet him, how the Master cried, "Well done!"
While the preacher blushed and wondered where he had such glory won.
Some whose speech on earth was simple, with no arguments but tears.
Nothing novel in their sermons for fastidious, itching ears.
Coldly welcomed by the churches, counted burdensome by all.
Went up to the royal mansions and were neighbors to St. Paul.
Soon the Master called a woman, only known here in the strife.
By her quiet, gentle nature, though a famous preacher's wife.
Praised and blessed her for the harvest she had garnered in the sky.
But she meekly turned and answered, "I was my husband, Lord, not I."
"Yes," the Master said, "his talents were no stars that glow and shine;
But thy faith gave them their virtue, and thy glory, child, is thine!"
Then a lame girl—had known her—heard her name called with surprise.
There was trembling in her bosom, there was wonder in her eyes.
"I was nothing but a cripple, gleaned in no wide field, my King,
Only as a silent sufferer, 'neath the shadow of thy wing."
"Thou has been a mighty preacher, and the hearts of many stirred To devotion by thy patience without uttering a word."
Said the Master, and the maiden to his side with wonder pressed.
Christ was stationing his preachers in the city of the living.
And the harp-strings of the angels linked their names to sweetest praise.
Whom the world had passed unnoticed in the blindness of its ways.
I was still faintly gazing on that scene beyond the stars
When I saw the Conference leaving, and I started for the cars.
—Dr. Hough, in Zion's Herald.

Change of Name.

MR. EDITOR: I have been reading and carefully considering the arguments both for and against a change of name, and now I want to write a few lines, not for the purpose of entering the arena of controversy, but to say a few things in regard to some features of the case that astonish me. I am astonished at the zeal of some who favor a change of name. They seem to forget that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with the affix "South," has gained the greatest victories in the last few years of any church in existence. It astonishes me that the word "South," so offensive to a few Western bordermen, should have so little significance to anyone else. It astonishes me that men who are thoroughly converted to Christianity can retain in their hearts so much prejudice and animosity against a Christian church to which they would like to attach themselves that they make the very name of the church a question of wrangling—all on account, we are told, of the political significance of one little affix in the name.

I am astonished at the following utterance by one of our D. D.'s in high authority. Listen to him: "The gravity of the change of name, as we see it, is very great. To us it involves the question of autonomy that should the next General Conference close, leaving the word 'South' as an appendix to our name, it will leave the conviction that Providence does not intend our perpetuity as a separate church." I think God has shown by signs infallible that he does intend to perpetuate us as a "separate church." It would take an immense church to absorb us, with our thousands of ministers and millions of property.

But, sir, the thing that most astonishes me is that nearly all who write on the subject, favoring the change of name, seem to forget that there is any other church to which these objectors can attach themselves. If they dislike our church, surely they can have no objection to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Let them go join that church. To me it occurs that if these men quibble over so small a thing as the appendix "South," they will find some other equally as flimsy an excuse. They will probably laugh and ridicule us for having had a name of which we were ashamed, and tell us we have no record as a church. I think if we yield this question and change our name, the very means used to conciliate will become the greater snare, and we will find when too late that we have acted hastily—yes, foolishly.

One very sensible asks, "What is to become of our credentials and our church property?" My credentials bear the signatures of Bishops now in heaven. They are too sacred. I do not want them changed, neither do I want other ones under a different church name.

In all kindness, let these objectors become reconciled to our whole name or let them go to the Methodist Episcopal Church. They will be happier there anyhow. But let us keep the sacred name under which our fathers fought and won such glorious victories—the name under which we are moving on grandly to the conquest of the world.

"Be Not Entangled."

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of July 9, there appeared an article by "J. H. S.," in which he attempts to vindicate that class of preachers who are more noted for "trading and speculating" than for piety. The writer complains that "much has been said condemning the ministry for becoming entangled with secular matters, and but little in vindication." I am decidedly of the same opinion, and, furthermore, if the above statement had been placed at the end of his article instead of at the beginning, I would have as cheerfully concurred in it, for after reading over the article again and again I am still positively sure that but little has been said in vindication of ministerial secularism, and believe that that little had better be unsaid.

It ought to make a minister of the gospel blush with shame to find such irrelevant notions expressed in the columns of a paper, the organ of a church which has ever condemned secularism in her itinerant preachers. I shall assume, however, that "J. H. S." is not a preacher. Surely no traveling preacher of the Methodist Church could be so unmindful of his vows as to adopt such sentiments. Let me then inform "J. H. S." that one of the solemn questions propounded to a man before being admitted into the traveling connection is this—"Are you resolved to devote yourself wholly to God and his work?"

The writer has a very singular and unenviable way of replying to objections. Thus he raises the objection, "A preacher weakens his influence if he becomes a trader or speculator." This truism he answers as follows: "As to retaining the good opinion of all men, it is impossible," etc. Now, I beg to ask, is there not a wide difference between the man who voluntarily weakens his influence and the man of unblemished character who may nevertheless fail to retain the good opinion of all men? It may be no fault of the preacher that he does not hold the good opinion of all men; but can the same be said of the man who tramples his vows of consecration to the work under his feet and turns aside from his direct work to secular pursuits, thereby injuring his own character and influence? Is he guiltless? I submit, therefore, that this attempt to pervert "J. H. S." to bolster up an excuse for secularism in the ministry by referring to columnists which wicked men poured upon the head of the Son of God is hideously irrelevant.

"But it is answered," continues "J. H. S.," "he ought not to become a trader; . . . that to engage in secular matters is a distrust of Providence—a want of faith in God." Now, how is this position met by him? It is answered by a humorous anecdote, which for irrelevance could hardly be excelled by the notorious Chicago innkeeper and blasphemer. Such language is an indignity to the Most High. Is this the answer the writer gives to him who declares that if we seek first and above all things his kingdom and his righteousness, all these things shall be added unto us? Is this his answer to that God who points to the fowl of the air and the beast of the forest, fed from his unsparring bounty, and appeals to every drop of rain and every ray of light shed on an unthankful world as evidences of his supreme goodness and providence?

It is to be greatly regretted that the writer so far forgot himself as to treat so great a question in so irrelevant a manner, for reverence is the basis of all that is noble and tender in character. Sneering is not a proof of erudition. We want facts, not jokes. A "true saith the Lord" will carry with it far more weight than a thousand anecdotes.

The question which should most concern us is, Does God approve secularism in us? We believe that God calls men to the ministry. This call embraces all the time, all the energies and every talent of the man. Simon and Andrew, James and John must lay down their nets and leave their boats; Luke must leave the dispensary; Matthew, the receipt of customs. The Lord does not desire a divided service. The great principle he would infuse into us, "No man serves two masters," and this principle is true even where no hostility exists. Therefore when a preacher applies for admission into the traveling connection he is publicly asked before he is admitted, "Are you resolved to devote yourself wholly to God and his work?" No preacher could be received into the itinerant ranks who did not answer this question affirmatively. But why is he resolved to consecrate his life "wholly to God and his work?" Because he feels "inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost" to take upon him the office of the ministry in the church of Christ. He believes in a special call to this special work. And am I to believe that while God would have men thus wholly set apart to his work, he has made no provision for their temporal wants? Is there no Providence in human affairs? Nay, I can not so dishonor God as to believe that he commands me to put down my net only to drive me back to it again ere long by the force of untoward circumstances.

The writer says, "A man of very rare accomplishments, as Sumnerfield, Bascom, Moffett, Spurgeon, can afford to trust Providence?" Does he mean by this that unless a preacher has these extraordinary accomplishments he can not afford to trust Providence? How many a good preacher has been lost to the church of Christ by his lack of trust in God in this very direction! In an evil hour he turned aside from the regular work and entered into secular pursuits. I have heard the sad confession of more than one such brother; I have seen them weep bitter tears of penitence over their irreparable folly; I have been earnestly entreated by them to avoid the like fatal mistake, and would to God that every presbyter, young and old, might hear and heed their counsel and ever remain faithful to the solemn vow of consecration to the one work.

Allow me in conclusion to warn my brethren against any man who will dare to scoff at the doctrine of a Providence in human affairs. There will be times in our lives when we may see no possible chance for a financial support. "Blessed are they who have not seen and yet have believed." God has never forsaken such a man, and never will.

"In some way or other the Lord will provide.
It may not be my way,
It may not be thy way,
And yet in his own way
The Lord will provide."

Or, as another poet beautifully expresses it—

"Make you his service your delight;
He'll make your wants his care."

He who preaches the sermon on the mount has no right to contradict it in his practice. If he can not put his trust in the Lord—if after he has done his best in the work, to which he feels God has called him, he is afraid to commit himself into the hands of the Lord without corroding anxiety as to what he shall eat or drink or whereof he shall be clothed, there is a serious defect in his religious life or in his philosophy, or in both.

Vicksburg District Conference.

The session of the Vicksburg District Conference was held at Cane Ridge, on Fayette circuit, beginning July 23, 1885, and continued three days. The presiding elder, Rev. W. L. C. Hummel, presided. Upon calling the roll twenty-five members answered to their names. Subsequent arrivals somewhat increased the number in attendance.

The reports as to the spiritual condition of the church and as to Sunday-schools were generally favorable. Prominent among these were the report from Wesley Chapel, at Natchez, with ninety-eight conversions, seventy-eight accessions (forty being scholars in the Sunday-school) and forty-five baptisms; and Vicksburg station, which has had seventy-five accessions and a noteworthy interest in religious matters prevailing among the young people of the church. In the latter place a "Society of Religious Literature" has been organized, and a mission Sunday-school is in successful operation. The five Sunday-schools within the bounds of the Port Gibson charge have recently received $800—the interest from which may be used, though the principal must remain untouched. The Sunday-school of the Jefferson Street Church, at Natchez, contributes $100 annually to support a missionary in China.

The Conference passed a series of resolutions favoring active effort by the church to secure the suppression of intemperance.

Mr. G. L. Record, Maj. Thomas Reed, Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall and Mr. Thomas A. Holloman were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference—Messrs. G. J. Bayn and J. G. Guice, alternates.

Rolling Fork was unanimously selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

Among the visitors present may be mentioned Rev. Dr. H. F. Johnson, president Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Miss.; Rev. Dr. C. B. Galloway, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and Rev. T. C. Bradford, president of Port Gibson Female College. Respectfully, N. J. VICK, Secretary.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

Your committee, to whom was submitted the subject of temperance, beg leave to offer the following report:

First. We rejoice to find that in touching the public pulse there is a throbbing of a new life on this momentous subject—a life which we believe is of God, and is destined to permeate the heart of the nation and the world.

Secondly. We rejoice to note that all the Christian churches of the land are awake to the importance of the subject, and that the deliverances of almost all religious bodies, great and small, with marked unanimity, voice a fixed purpose and growing enthusiasm in favor of using all possible legitimate means to extirpate the traffic in ardent spirits and the evils of intemperance from our land.

Thirdly. We hail with delight what we believe to be the dawn of a new era in the history of temperance—the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and their hearty co-operation in the great prohibition movement.

We offer the following resolutions for the adoption of the District Conference:

Resolved, That we are fully in sympathy with the prohibition movement in the use of all proper measures to free our country from the curse of intemperance.

Resolved, That we are in hearty accord with the sentiments and policy expressed by the State Temperance Convention held in the city of Jackson on July 1.

Resolved, That we condemn as highly culpable in any church member the drinking of drams, the selling of spirituous liquors, the signing of petitions for the licensing of the sale of spirituous or vinous liquors, the renting of buildings for the purpose, or the use of whiskey in electioneering, or in any way giving aid or comfort to the enemy on this subject.

Resolved, That we indorse the proposition to introduce scientific education in our public schools, in physiology and hygiene, in which there is to be given prominence to the effect of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system.

H. S. WOODWARD, Chairman.

Letter from Bro. Pipes.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday and Monday I was with Bro. Cassity, preacher in charge of Caddo circuit, at Friendship Church. The congregations were comparatively good—not what they used to be, nor what they are in Texas and other places where there is a larger proportion of white population. Bro. Cassity is laborious and indefatigable, and is determined to do the best that can be done with the material which he has. But it is utterly impossible to do much or to have much in the way of society, schools or churches where the white population is very far in the minority. Any parish that votes 2,000 freedmen and only 1,100 whites is liable to have whiskey rule and a corrupt government. This is inevitable until the negro is elevated to a higher plane of civilization by education.

There were two accessions to the church up to the time I left, with much seriousness and a resolve on the part of the church to do better. One thing I met with there with which I was highly pleased. The Woman's Missionary Society, which I left near two years ago, is still living and working. They held their regular meeting on Sunday, at three P. M., and the writer had the pleasure of addressing them. The delegate to the Annual Conference meeting made an encouraging report, and was impressed that the institution is growing in favor with God and man. I was pleased with the report of Mrs. C. J. Foster, of Shreveport, corresponding secretary, as published in the ADVOCATE, and hope we will have the address of the president, Mrs. T. P. Fullilove, in our next. The society at Friendship requested the pastor to let them have the three o'clock hour at the camp meeting to hold a missionary meeting. Why not give any hour to the missionary cause? It breathes the spirit of our religion and of our Master! Why not let the missionary workers have full sway when it is estimated that there are ten souls converted as the result of missionary labors where there is one converted by home work. It is a benediction to the perishing heathen when the godly women of the church come to the front in their behalf, and we bid them God-speed.

From the Work.

CRAWFORD CIRCUIT.

We have just closed a glorious meeting at Shaefer's Chapel, Crawford circuit. The meeting continued with unabated interest from the third Sunday to the fourth Sunday night, when we closed with a communion service, in which many joined and ate and drank as discerning the Lord's body. Many were made happy in witnessing for their redeeming Lord. Some were converted and publicly testified to the power and comfort of the Holy Spirit, who while back were only nominally in the church. Backsliders were reclaimed. The church richly blest, and now is a live, witnessing church. This is a living church. Here we have a live Sunday-school, has doubled its membership in twelve months or less time. Everybody in the church goes and works when there. No dead weight. No drift wood. Capt. Foote is happy over the fact that Shaefer's made about, if not the best, report at the late Sunday-school convention for Lowndes county. Most of our people are poor; they are renters; yet you see what can be done—ten additions, ten children baptized, one adult baptized, all this after the order set forth in the commission in Matthew's gospel. Bro. John Gaines, a local preacher, began the meeting, and worked faithfully to the close. Bro. E. H. Cacey, of Brooksville, was with us a part of the time, and did good work. May God bless these brethren! We thank them for their faithful labors. The Master owned and blessed their work.

T. W. DYE.

M'COOL, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I have closed my second meeting, resulting in seventy or more conversions, fifty accessions to our church at different points and yet others to join. Time and space would fall me to tell of the many blessed results of this most wonderful revival of my life. The work of soul saving in the church, arousing a dead church to an active life, was as remarkable and important as the number of conversions. We ran two prayer meetings each day of the meeting in which the converts and others were trained to talk and work. These meetings will be kept up twice a week, thus perpetuating the revival work. We held this meeting under an arbor five miles from any Methodist Church, in a good community. Now we have organized a permanent church and are arranging to build at once a house of worship. Bro. W. A. Dollar, P. O., Attala circuit, having a church within five miles of this place, joined me in the meeting, six days of the twelve doing invaluable service and sharing in the harvest of converts and members. Bro. Worsham also and local brethren were with us doing good service. But to God be all the glory. The ADVOCATE will yet share in the results of this meeting.

H. C. PARROTT, P. O.

BENTON CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a very pleasant and profitable protracted meeting at Midway. The church was considerably quickened, and eleven accessions on profession of faith. A work has begun in that community from which I expect very great results in good. Bro. P. Howard was with us, and preached five most excellent sermons. Bro. M. J. Marble was also with us, and preached one sermon that was well received. He came in at the close of the meeting, so we did not get but one sermon from him. That effort indicated, unmistakably, considerable preaching talent. I do not hesitate to write him down a success.

Woman's Work for Women.

BY MRS. E. J. FULLILOVE.

Annual address before the Woman's Missionary Society, of the Louisiana Conference, in Minden, La., July 3, 1885.

My Dear Sisters of the W. M. S. of the La. Conf., and Friends—

In the merciful providence of our kind heavenly Father we have been permitted to meet together for the purpose of reviewing our labors past, and of viewing, with the prospective eye of faith, the battlefields stretching far into the future and reaching even beyond our vision to the borders of the promised land of rest and reward.

As a State Conference Society our peans of victory for the past must of necessity be tuned to a short meter. Our record can be quickly summed up by our worthy secretaries. A weak little band of devout women at the session of the Louisiana Conference, at Baton Rouge, in 1879, met in the parlor of Mrs. M. W. Reid, and aided by Rev. Joel T. Daves and Rev. John Hannon and W. H. Foster, Esq., they organized the first Woman's Missionary Society within the bounds of the Conference, electing the following officers: President, Mrs. M. W. Reid, Baton Rouge; vice-presidents, Mrs. W. H. Wise, Shreveport; Mrs. W. H. N. Magruder and Mrs. M. K. Knox, Baton Rouge; Mrs. E. T. Merrick and Mrs. J. H. Keller, New Orleans; Mrs. John Pipes, Mansfield; Mrs. J. N. Pharr, Morgan City; Mrs. Dr. J. W. E. Hamilton, Minden; Mrs. Maggie Hayes, Opelousas; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. H. Foster, New Orleans; recording secretary, Miss Carrie Robertson, Baton Rouge; treasurer, Mrs. R. M. Walmaley, and auditors, Mrs. Linus Parker, New Orleans.

As the pioneer officers in our State work, I have thought it proper to mention these honorable women. They worked faithfully and nobly in the cause and excited quite a missionary interest in the hearts and minds of the people. The corresponding secretary at our last meeting reported twenty-six auxiliary societies and money sent forward during the past five years of the society's existence, $2,126.90. This showing did not meet the desires and hopes of those engaged; but considering all the circumstances there was great cause for thanksgiving to God that the labors of these Christian women were blessed with such good results. We will soon learn from our present corresponding secretary what additional work has been accomplished during the past year.

True our harvest has as yet been small compared with the ingathering of some of our sister States; but our want of zeal and dearth of fruitage are more the result of error than heartlessness.

Our Louisiana Methodist women are as devout and capable as those of any State. We have felt, however, the need of wide-awake interest on this missionary question, and most of all we felt the need of that support from our ministers individually which inspires confidence and earnestness. It has been justly said that cheerful support and perfect trust will make a heroine of a very commonplace woman and, doubtless, we have every one felt some time or other that a loving, encouraging God-speed was all that we needed to urge us out of ourselves into some noble undertaking.

We hear of "ministerial support," and we read about "upholding the feeble hands and weak knees." Surely if the strong laborers feel this need, how much more do we, a struggling band of weak women! A glance from the reapers would cheer the gleaners. Ah! it would be like Boaz smiling backward on tilling Ruth. There are some noble, great souls, Pauline ministers who have given us aid and cheerful support as testified by the new auxiliaries which we find on our books, to such are due all honor and thanks.

I do not understand how any one can conscientiously throw stumbling blocks in the way of any laborers in the good cause which is to hasten the coming of our Lord. From the accident to the orient the great mass of living humanity is moving in blind obedience to the prince of darkness. A horror, as of Egyptian blackness, hovers over the heathen world and the eyes and ears of the animate man are morally as blind and deaf as those of the inanimate gods whom he worships. In all heathendom—might is right, and innocence and feebleness are subjects of cruelty—the red-hot arms of the dread Moloch from the cradle of infancy and the prowess of heathen braves displayed in the burying alive of the helpless aged by force of arms. Such in view of so much suffering and depravity every power should be at work to reveal the light of immortality to this dying race. The shackles of idolatry are well nigh clinched on the limbs of benighted heathendom, and they bug the chains which bind them but this generation is passing away and the hope of the world is in the children. Then let the children be saturated with the seasoning of Sunday-school lessons and sweet missionary songs, and when they in course of time become factors in the commonwealth they will prove to be the salt of the earth.

My dear sisters, our obligations in this line of duty, if once realized, will urge us on to renewed effort. There must be a thorough reconstruction in the popular heart concerning our field of labor. One great stumbling stone has been the impression that in the performance of any public duty we would necessarily transcend the bounds of womanly propriety. God forbid that our work should savor of woman's rights—politically, so called. This movement is not the outgrowth of an unholy ambition. During the late Civil War noble women worked for soldiers in public and private aid societies forborne them. Shall not Christian women work for Christian soldiers, their wives and little ones and dare any one say they may?

Women can perform in large assemblies, shine as prima donnas, read and recite in public and receive from the world the plaudits, "Well done," and yet if these same women are asked to do a simple "feast of love" to tell how they love the Savior who has redeemed them, or if in a prayer meeting they are asked to plead with God for sinners, souls they are transformed into abject, timid creatures with trembling voices, if indeed they can command any voice at all. And would you know the reason why?

They are not so much afraid of the world's sneers as the doubtful approval of the many Christians whose watchword is, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." Those prophets and apostles who are fond of quoting St. Paul's admonitions about "learning in silence," "usurping authority" and "asking of their husbands at home," but have never heard of "those women that labored in the gospel with us," tenderly referred to by the great benedict apostle to the Gentiles.

"Christian womanhood must modestly assert her right to be useful, but high and holy privilege to work for him who redeemed her from a condition worse than slavery and has elevated her to the heavenly prerogative of assisting in the glorious task of winning for the Savior his promised inheritance."

We are all influenced by our surroundings, but we must not be blown about by every wind. Our religious thermometer must be kept sheltered from the sun and the storm if we would preserve an even temperature.

Let us study our work and our duty. Every Christian worker in the missionary cause should convince her head and her heart of the duty assigned her in this work and remember that duties can not clash. The Woman's Missionary Society is beyond doubt the child of Providence. This work was brought to us in our homes and was not of our seeking. A wide door of usefulness has been opened unto us, and though we enter with shrinking feet, yet we must walk in the light of faith, step by step, performing our appointed task, feeling strong in the blessed assurance that "we have only the sanction of the church, but that our humble efforts bear the seal of approval from the Master's loving hand."

Our outlay of expenditures has been small indeed compared to the glorious results, and we need fear no destitution nor want in consequence of our sacrifices, for the Lord of all the universe has promised to the builders up his kingdom that they shall have everything needful in this life for interest, and life eternal in the end for principal. Our plain duty is to go and send. Those who go, sacrifice most, and the written contract with them, in plain language, "Ye that sow bountifully shall also reap bountifully." The Scriptures are full of blessings and promises of rich reward to those who lend to the Lord and lay up treasures in heaven, treasures of real estate, houses not made with hands in which to enjoy eternal life. "Those women that labored with us in the gospel," so beloved by St. Paul, which will not run out so long as there is faith in the earth.

Woman's work in the church is equal in age with the church itself. All Bible readers are familiar with the important part in Jewish history performed by stately Miriam who led the choir of Israel's hosts in their grand deum laudamus, and how many soldiers of the cross have sat under the shade of the trees and listened to the wisdom of sagacious Deborah whose inspiring words reached beyond the shadows of the palms and cedar, and warria on to victory, and cold, dead, leathen hearts with the patriotic devotion of queenly Esther, bravely risking her life for her own people, and even as a sword of strength and an avenging agent who does not remember Jezebel, the wife of Hober the Kallio

THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1885.

The ADVOCATE is only two dollars a year.

A Methodist without an ADVOCATE is an ecclesiastical "innocent abroad."

Resolving is good, but subscribing is better. We want the endorsement of the brethren both in kindly words and long subscription lists.

"A million for missions!" There is something inspiring in the alliteration, and our Northern brethren aspire to attain unto it. We bid them God-speed, and pray for a like heroic zeal in our Israel.

How cheering is the news from the churches! There is a revival spirit abroad in the land quite equal to the heroic and historic days of early Methodism. Hard, pleasure-loving towns like ancient Corinth and stubborn, supercilious Athens have felt the power of the gospel and turned unto the living God. The old message has been repeated and the old experiences have been witnessed.

After the revival the pastor has no rest. His most delicate and difficult work has just begun. The type of Christianity stamped upon young converts depends upon the pastor. They must be trained to work, and at once. There is a demand for members who will pray in the social meetings of the church. The old stock is nearly gone, and in some communities the prayer meetings consist of two prayers, three songs and a lecture—all led by the pastor.

As to-morrow, August 14, will be the one hundredth anniversary of John Fletcher's death, the English Wesleyans are to observe it with appropriate services. Sunday next special sermons are to be preached, and memorial addresses delivered on Monday. As the saintly vicar of Madely, Wesley's "designated successor," is the heritage of universal Methodism, the event should be celebrated on this side the sea. His life, by Tyerman, reads like the history of the "beloved disciple." To Fletcher we are indebted for our formulated system of theology. It was his polished polemic pen that defined and defended our form of doctrine which has been the life-blood of the Methodist movement.

The call of our missionary treasury is being heard. Times are hard, but they were never good. The world has never known prosperous times until they were past. Out of our small incomes we can give something to extend the Redeemer's kingdom and to redeem our pledges to missionaries in the field. If the assessments are raised this year we can close the quadrennium with a clean balance sheet and a largely increased force in the field. Others are ready to go at the call of the church. It is for each of us to say whether our lines of conquest shall be lengthened or shortened, for he assured we must move forward or beat a retreat. We earnestly exhort each pastor to see that the assessment of this year shall be the minimum offering of his congregation.

The spirit of the fathers yet stirs the heart of Methodism. When the times demand it there is as ready response to hard service and self-denial as when the early itinerants left all to follow Christ. The character of work to be done at that time needed such heroes who counted it all joy to make sacrifices for God. We do not believe there is less of that spirit to-day. A recent instance confirms this opinion. The Rev. Charles Champness, of London, just elected to the Legal Hundred by the Wesleyan Conference, not long since invited through the Joyful News any young unmarried men who were willing to give themselves entirely to Christian work to communicate with him. Nothing was promised but plain fare and hard work, but the offer was instantly accepted by nearly fifty young men. When the ages call heroes come. The real wants of Christ's kingdom have only to be known to secure a sufficient number of laborers for the harvest. However we may consider the advisability or scripturalness of his methods, the fact that so many missionaries were ready to accompany William Taylor on his perilous journeyings, with no treasury on which to draw, gives to faith a fresh impulse, and kindles in our hearts the glow of first love. So long as such a spirit abides apostolic blessings will glorify the history of the church.

"Morals in the South."

This is the title of a lengthy article in the New York Christian Advocate written by Rev. E. M. Wood, D. D., after "having just returned from a six months' residence in the South country." We believe in a merciless exposure of wrong with a view to reform. No people can prosper on the condoning of crime. And it may occur that the eye of a stranger or an enemy may aid to the discovery of evil that our own partiality would fail or refuse to see. Whatever their motives, such writers prove to be the most helpful friends of a community. We should never feel resentment, therefore, at any criticism upon our section. It should be candidly investigated and, if found true, lead to speedy and honest reform. In this spirit we have read the article alluded to above. While accepting and deploring the facts given, some objections and corrections we are constrained to make.

As to the logic in general this may be said:

1. It was written by a stranger. His was only "a six months' residence."

2. From the necessities of the case his opportunities for observation were limited. He remained at one place but a short while and associated mostly with a single class. A free and general intermingling in our Southern society would have modified his views and revised his statements.

3. His was evidently not an impartial point of view. We are apt to see what we desire. Romanists visit a city and learn one set of facts. Protestants mingle with those of their own faith and get different information. So our brethren from the North receive different impressions according to their associations and sources of information.

4. His generalizations are too sweeping and indiscriminate. He makes a few facts type a whole section—a few persons represent a third of the continent.

The author's condemnation of the Louisiana Lottery will be applauded by every Christian in this section. Against it every Protestant Church and pulpit has lifted a voice of thunder. That the festering iniquity crept into power, and secured statutory and constitutional protection, may be accounted for without an impeachment of the better moral sentiment of the State. It was spawned during those melancholy days when the intelligent citizenship of the commonwealth had no voice in legislation. The reins of government were in the hands of strangers. After a change of administration, the people protesting all the while against the outrage, it was found impossible to dislodge the monster from his constitutional defense. It was not only authorized by statute, but was protected by a clause in the new Constitution. Such are the facts in the case, and do not warrant Dr. Wood's philosophizing on that point. He is not justified, therefore, when referring to the influence of the lottery, in saying of our people, "To gain a competence by patient and painstaking perseverance is not their plan, as a rule, for getting on in the world." We affirm that such is their "rule," and that a large per cent. of the lottery patronage comes from the North. As the capital prizes are generally won by ticket holders in the upper parallels, we might with equal fairness retort the same charge. This is an iniquity that must be stamped out. It is evil and only evil. We make no apology for its existence; but in deducing testimony therefrom we should be just.

As to social evils in our large cities, they are doubtless great and certainly humiliating, but not so excessive as to mark them with special condemnation. A study of the daily metropolitan press and the records of police courts would probably reveal a condition of things altogether favorable to this section. Dr. Wood says the Creoles are "infamous in this regard," and then adds, "But the social evil is by no means confined to them, or even to the city," but is alarmingly prevalent throughout the South." Just how the pure-minded, reverend gentleman obtained that information we do not know; but he certainly must have been rather industrious to have learned so much in six months. That is a severe indictment, and should have the facts in detail to sustain it. No one should dare make such a charge without the amplest knowledge. The Doctor has fallen among swift witnesses and been led, innocently, we hope, into slandering a good people.

The references to Sabbath desecration in this city are too true; but the taste of this paragraph we question: "With one or two exceptions, the Protestant Churches are episcopally attended, the churches are antiquated, and so are the sermons." If by that he means the subjects discussed were old, he is doubtless correct. Repentance, faith and regeneration are good old scriptural doctrines and are popular themes for pulpit discourse in this latitude. Railroad accidents, steamboat disasters, elections, State and national, are not usually presented to a worshiping congregation on the Sabbath. The cross may be antiquated; but we are divinely commissioned to preach it. And until the terms of the apostolic commission are revised, or abolished we will have to repeat the old, old story. As to the ability of the pulpit, there need be no invidious sectional distinction.

As to the temperance habits and convictions, we make positive denial. While admitting that temperance reform has made some progress in the rural districts, little or nothing has been done in the large cities or towns, he adds, "Here, as a rule, everybody drinks—men, women and children." From a life residence in the South we have seen no such thing. Gov. St. John, Dr. Hopkins, Miss Willard, and others, have visited us and made an altogether different report. They have readily acknowledged the fact that the temperance sentiment in the South is in advance of the North. Gov. St. John gathered the statistics which revealed the fact that Mississippi has less than a thousand saloons, while Minnesota, with about the same population, has nearly three thousand. And a like comparison may be made between other States. Our churches have pronounced boldly on the question, our preachers almost to a man practice total abstinence, and wine is rarely seen on the table of any church member. In all our acquaintance throughout Louisiana and Mississippi we know of no family that uses wine.

This much we have felt called upon to say in defense of our people.

Prohibition and Peaches.

We do not propose to consider the great moral reform in relation to the peach crop, though the triumph of prohibition would stop the distillation of this royal fruit into brandy. The title above only means that we attended a great prohibition barbecue one day last week at the headquarters of the peach industry in Mississippi. It was at Terry, a village on the Illinois Central, about fifteen miles south of Jackson. The day was pleasant, the heavens were propitious, the Committee of Arrangements had discharged their duties with commendable activity and ability, and the occasion was most enjoyable. An elaborate dinner was appetizingly prepared and spread, and the vast crowd of a thousand, or more, persons complimented it to their full capacity. And the fragments remaining were greater than the five thousand left of the multiplied loaves and fishes. Seats were provided under the magnificent oaks of a beautiful grove, a platform was erected for the speakers, and the volume of prohibition eloquence was immense and various. Every phase of the question was discussed, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The axe of reform is laid at the root of that pestilential upas tree, and great will be the fall of it. The advocates of prohibition are no longer a feeble folk, but an exceeding great army. Nor do they any longer apologize for their course, but rather speak as those having authority. Some legislative candidates were present, and in response to calls expressed themselves as favoring a local option law by counties—such a measure as the State Prohibition Convention demanded. Hons. T. Dabney Marshall and J. H. Martin, this editor and Rev. C. L. Harris (colored) spoke in the order named, and at least one of the number at considerable length. After these quite a number of five-minute speeches were made much to the enjoyment and profit of the vast audience. Not a single occurrence marred the pleasure of the day, and all went home praising the hospitality tendered and pledging earnest efforts to secure the triumph of moral reform.

In the afternoon we had opportunity of inquiring into the peach industry of that section. Terry and Crystal Springs, ten miles farther South, exceed any other points in the State for shipments of fruit, and the greater of these is Terry. Crystal Springs, however, stands first in her vegetable business. The soil in that section is admirably adapted to peach culture. They are of every variety of size, season and texture, and in flavor they are unrivalled. There is a daily average shipment of about 700 boxes, or 5,000 a week, each box containing a third of a bushel. They are shipped in about equal amounts to the New Orleans and Chicago markets, and bring from fifty cents to $1.50 a box. Those sent North are shipped in refrigerator cars, which preserve the fruit in excellent marketable condition. In using these cars for fruits and vegetables the Illinois Central has given timely and praiseworthy encouragement to a valuable Southern enterprise. The fruit is consigned to certain merchants in Chicago and New Orleans, whose soliciting agents are on the ground, and who have money on deposit with the local merchants. As soon as the account of sales is returned, which is the second day after shipment to New Orleans, the shipper calls on the merchant and draws his money. This puts much cash in circulation and stimulates local trade. It comes to the farmer in the cotton belt at a season when sorely needed. If the fruit crop was more regular and reliable, it would be a perpetual blessing to a people who have too long felt the tyranny and poverty of King Cotton.

While in Terry we shared the delightful hospitality of Bro. R. J. Barbour. We hope to take shelter under that happy roof-tree on some other good occasion.

After the Revival.

As a church we Methodists have done more in the way of evangelization—getting men and women converted—than we have in indoctrinating them and in teaching them how to work after they are in the church. The first work and the main work of every preacher is to get men converted from the ways of sin and death to the ways of life and righteousness; but it is none the less important to teach them how to stay converted after they are in the church.

As soon as a man or woman, either young or old, boy or girl, is converted and received into the church they ought to be trained to do honest and faithful work for God. Constant religious employment is absolutely essential to religious vitality and power. In many places our churches are filled up with "drones" and "deadheads" who do nothing but hang around and hang on until Zion is hindered in her progress by a heavy burden of dead weight. This ought not to be and would not be so if we trained our members to work after we get them into the church. Every new convert, if converted to do any good, would try to do something for the general good of the church if put to work while warm in his first love. If only partially converted, the effort to put him to work somewhere or in some way would send him speedily where he ought to be. Year after year we get in more and more of this useless material—useless because not utilized at the proper time—till the wheels of Zion become clogged with cold and formal professors of religion.

In this way we go on from year to year converting over again the converts of the last meeting held. If it were clearly understood among us that those who "did not work should not eat," the real power of the church as an evangelizing force in the world would be increased fully one hundred per cent. In some places it is a sort of death struggle for the church to maintain life instead of being a life giver to others, as the church should be. A great revival and a large gathering is always a matter of congratulation to any church, and if the fruits were husbanded and utilized as they should be, it would prove a perpetual and constantly increasing blessing; but I have known the death-knell of some churches to be sounded when the number of additions was announced. The whole thing stopped right there and then as if the end had been reached.

The fact is, the most important, delicate, critical work begins when the properly evangelistic services close. In some instances—far too many, I fear—our pastors are in too great a hurry in receiving the candidates for membership into full connection in the church. A period of probation filled with prayerful training would save us from surplussage and it would, I believe, greatly increase the working power of those we take in. To get into the church—simply inside—is the "to be all" and "end all" of too many thousands among us. They stop stock still right where they began and start back from that point and finally "forget that they were purged from their old sins." In many instances the number of converts and additions, without regard to their character, is made the sole test of ministerial success and fidelity. This begets in weak men an unholy ambition for numbers and leads them to count as converts many who are in the bonds of iniquity." It leads weak preachers to neglect every other interest of the church, and allow things to go at loose ends, just so hundreds of conversions and additions can be reported at the end of the year. Every other item of the report goes to disprove this item. Men of this kind gather a quantity of material, but build nothing, strengthen nothing. The church is not edified, is not unified. It is nebulous, chaotic, without form and void, and utterly wanting in that coherency essential to power. A large increase means, or ought to mean, diligent and thorough training. In this we, as a people, have been deficient.

GILDENROY.

Envy.

BY REV. J. B. A. AHRNS, D. D.

Of all sins envy is the most idiotic. Every sin roots in folly. Sin is the seed of woe. Sin brings inevitably a harvest of misery. What poison is to the body sin is to the soul. But of all soul-poison envy operates quickest and is most deadly. Those who suffer envy to have dominion in the soul soon die to all noble and commendable traits of character and become the abject tools of Satan.

Almost every other sin offers some slight compensation for the injury it works, as in the fable of the man who sold his soul to the devil for a stipulated sum of money. He got his sum of money. Thus the drunkard has his drink; the voluptuary, his sensual pleasure; the miser, his bags full of gold; the liar and slanderer, the satanic satisfaction of having led others astray; the cheater, his fraudulent gain; the thief, his stolen goods; but the envious man secures no compensation whatsoever. His envy affects not injuriously the envious, but the envious retain their wealth; the envious honored, their honor; the envious erudite, their learning; the envious officer, his office; the envious sensible, respected and refined, their good sense, respect and refinement. I have already wished that in one case the envious good might be transferable. It was when a man envied a friend his manifest piety. But no; the envious good is not transferred by envy. The envious are doubly wretched: wretched because of others' possessions—wretched because they possess not.

More than any other sin is envy a sword in man's bones, a rust which is surely destroying what is noble within us, a cancer which will bring about bodily and spiritual, temporal and eternal misery. It will not be long until the envious person will be so devilish as to entitle him to full partnership in the firm, Satan & Co. Malevolence is inseparably connected with envy. Envy begrudges others a supposed good, morbidly longing for it itself. It is a species of psychological robbery. What others are and possess the envious crave to be and to have; but this being impossible, the envious are hated. But whoever hateth his brother is a murderer. The envious would like to remove out of their way the envious in order that they themselves might acquire the office, honor, respect, love, wealth which the "slaughtered" possess. I can not conceive of a greater wretchedness than that of a fellow-mortal being in the way of our fortune—when our misery is caused by the prosperity of others. The weal of others gives to the envious woe, their day gives them night, their heaven gives them hell. The happiness of others make the envious unhappy.

Not only the really needy envy the favored few their favorable circumstances. Envy is at home in the highest walks of society, in the highest stations of honor and wealth. I have seen dogs, nauseated with over-much food, growl and get ready for fight because a lean, haggard and homeless cur, approached with hungry greed, attempting to gnaw on the scattered bones. Avault! 'Tis true, 'tis pity; 'tis pity, 'tis true, that many in high places envy their colleagues their supposed superiority; wealthy envy others their riches. Even of preachers I have heard—mirabile dictu!—who are devotees to envy, deeming it individual disparagement when a more gifted brother is praised, considering it their own impoverishment when a brother is enriched, supposing it to tend to their own degradation when a brother is exalted.

No doubt envy is an aboriginal of hell. Satan transplants it into the hearts of men. Otherwise I could not conceive a dullhead to be so dull, a fool so foolish, as to yield to envy, the most foolish of all sins. No man will put his hand in fire except for beneficent purposes; but envy benefits nobody and hurts more than fire hurts the body. The envious kindle the fire in which their own souls burn, prepare the cup whose poison brings death and damnation.

Flee from envy as from a serpent. When the mind which was in Christ characterizes us envy will find no standing-place in the heart, much less a room fitted up with cupboard and lounge. When we are born again envy is enjoined, immediately and once for all, to close the door behind itself at the outside. But it behooves us to guard against its readmission.

Deem it not an affliction when you are envied. Rather commiserate the benighted who envy you. You will continue to be what you are and retain what you possess; but he who envies you is unhappy.

Persecutions in Mexico.

In a letter to Dr. Kelley the Rev. Joseph Norwood, of our Central Mexican Mission, with headquarters at Toluca, tells of the trials through which he and his collaborators are now passing. Romish fanaticism is its veteran and will resort to any means, however wicked and cruel, to arrest the progress of free thought and evangelical religion. But for the favor of the central government every missionary would be in constant bodily peril night and day. But our work prospers, and the heralds of the cross move forward trusting in God. A few more years of conquest, and these things can not be. May our Lord shield these honored brethren who have gone out without scrip or purse to scatter the seeds of life in that sin-cursed priest-ridden empire! And when we read of such thrilling adventures and narrow escapes as those recorded in this brief extract from Bro. Norwood's letter, our zeal ought to kindle afresh for the redemption of the benighted land.

"The terrible persecutions in Villa Guerrero, Tenango circuit, have made the cost of supplying that work quite heavy during the past month, and there is no prospect of any improvement very soon. The fixed intention of the fanatics seems to be to ambush and kill every Protestant who attempts to enter or leave that place. Several of us have been shot at several times, and once Bro. Guerrero and I held three men at bay—with a pistol and a knife in hand, just out of gun-shot—while riding a distance of nearly a mile until we met reinforcements. Hence we dare not go in that section with less than four or five in a group. One house has been wounded, one house burnt and another partially burnt. We earnestly ask your prayers and the prayers of the church at large."

Who Wants the Change?

MR. EDITOR: One might suppose there is a reason for a change of the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from the number and length of the articles on the subject in the Advocate. But I have seen no sufficient reason yet, nor do I expect to after so much writing. Who is dissatisfied with our name? It is? We have more than 940,000 members. If one of them is dissatisfied with the name we bear, let him speak. None of the many writers favoring a change, so far as I have seen, wants a change for himself. For whom then? For someone in the great North-west, or some where else, they say, who wants to enter our fold, but can not stand the suffix. His is a bad fix. Let him adhere North. They have a sound gospel for him, thank God! We can not afford to ask 940,000 members to part with a sweet name endeared by a thousand precious memories, to please a squad who may laugh at and our new name. Those favoring a new name are by no means agreeable that it shall be, and the great body of the church would not trust any committee to forge the new name. Mr. Alvis did not think his patronymic short enough or euphonious as good taste required. Legislative authority was invoked, and "Alvis" was henceforth "Hog."

Is there anything covert in all this? Is it to remove a barrier to union with the Methodist Episcopal Church? If so, brethren, give us that question on its merits. It would be more popular than a change of name. But we will have no change. We are for the "South" now and forever.

W. P. HARTON.

Note from a Missionary Presiding Elder.

MR. EDITOR: We are having "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" in the Columbia district. From almost every church the good news comes. Not only are we having spiritual, but material prosperity as well. There have been two new churches dedicated, and a third is ready for dedication. I dedicated a beautiful new church on the Louisville circuit last Sunday, which I think, will be an inspiration to that whole country. The presiding elder with commendable prudence the fine as he said, we are going to have the first Quarterly meeting here next year. That church is proof of what pluck and push can do. And what has been done there has been done elsewhere, if not everywhere. How much the church and Sunday-school lose on account of comfortable church houses, no one can tell. And then there was a debt to be paid off by a collection. When I asked the preacher if there was to be a collection, he answered, "Yes, for missions." I want you to raise fifty dollars for missions to-day." How pleasant it was to obey that order. And how promptly and promptly that congregation responded to that call.

municipality or supervisor's district, and that the petition must lie over one month for counter petitions, and be published three weeks in some county newspaper. This law has many good features, but is largely inoperative. Saloon-keepers make personal solicitations for signatures, and often threaten a withdrawal of business if a merchant, professional or laboring man refuses. Thus from considerations of personal friendship or fear of business injury they secure their petitions. Then again, if one person or a number get up a counter petition, he and his friends raise the cry of persecution and personal injury. This deters many who are with us in principle. We want a law that will eliminate the personal feature and put the issue before the people on its merits. It will then not be a question against Jones or Smith, but simply whether the greatest evil of the age shall be ended by anybody.

Rep.—What progress is this movement making in Mississippi?

Dr. G.—The cause is prospering beyond the most sanguine expectations. Our recent State convention in Jackson was composed of about 300 delegates from 54 counties, representing every calling, vocation, profession and creed. Quite a number of colored delegates were present and participated in the proceedings of the convention. The enthusiasm was great, but the most conservative counsels prevailed, and the conclusions were entirely harmonious and practically unanimous. It was remarked by many distinguished politicians and citizens that a more intelligent, able, representative convention was never held at the State capital. The newspapers of the State have approved our declaration of principles and applauded the spirit of the movement. There was no disposition to antagonize any party or seek any party alliances. It was declared in unmistakable language that the cause must be disentangled from party politics. No candidates will be nominated and no patronage sought. Candidates for the Legislature are only asked to favor a local option law by counties. They are not interrogated as to their party fealty on any question, but only requested to give the people this means of protection.

Rep.—Are you likely to secure this passage of such a law?

Dr. G.—There is not a doubt of it. It is doubted if a single candidate for a State office or for the Legislature would oppose it. The measure will pass with very little opposition. We had a majority in the last Legislature, but for lack of thorough organization and leadership this bill did not become a law. But in these two years we have seen our largest and most rapid growth. This cause is sufficiently strong today to demand what it wants, and with no prospect of denial.

Rep.—Have you not certain territory in the State already covered by prohibitory laws?

Dr. G.—Oh, yes. There are eleven entire counties, nineteen supervisors' districts and thirty-three towns and neighborhoods thus protected by special statutes. In addition to these other towns and counties have driven the traffic out by means of counter-petitions. The battle is now raging in Jackson, Canton, Meridian, Columbus, Brookhaven and other communities with prospects of success in each place. Rest and have enlisted for the war. One defeat is of no consequence. They only gather up their forces and energies for another struggle. When our law is secured from the next Legislature we expect to carry four-fifths of the counties in the State for prohibition in less than twelve months.

Rep.—How do the negroes stand on the question?

Dr. G.—I believe the majority of them are with us. Most of the negroes belong to the Methodist and Baptist Churches. These church councils have spoken out on the subject in the most emphatic terms. The colored Methodist Conferences and the Baptist Conventions have declared in favor of temperance and the suppression of the liquor traffic by law. I know one colored Baptist pastor who will arraign for trial any member of his church who signs a liquor petition. The church influence is the strongest with the colored people, and that will be wielded for the triumph of temperance and prohibition.

Rep.—What is the sentiment of the people in prohibition communities and counties? Is there a desire to repeal the law and return to license?

Dr. G.—Of course a few in these communities from motives you can well understand, prefer the traffic, but the vast majority of the people are delighted. The leading merchants and business men of Wilcox published recently a card expressing their great satisfaction at the volume of business, the moral tone and general betterment of the town under a prohibitory law. And the court records in each town and county show a decrease of crime. But all these and other facts will be given in a "Prohibition Hand-Book" I am preparing, and will be published in a few weeks.

Rep.—What do you know of the movement in Louisiana?

Dr. G.—My correspondence with friends in the State, besides personal observations in the northern parishes, bade me to think that Louisiana will soon advance to the front. Under your present law some parishes have voted the traffic beyond their borders, as have also a number of wards in other parishes. A State Prohibition Convention has been called to meet in the city of Shreveport on the nineteenth instant, and promises to be quite well attended. For much of the interest awakened in Louisiana we are indebted to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Judge Merrick, president of the State Union, has labored with commendable zeal in the good cause, ably assisted by a number of our first and most intelligent ladies. Mrs. W. H. Goodale, of Baton Rouge, has traveled extensively through the State, organizing unions and addressing the people on the great reform. I met her in Claiborne parish last summer, and can testify to her efficient work. She is now on a second tour through the northern parishes. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Mississippi is also well organized and zealously enlisted in the struggle. Mrs. Dr. Ervin, of Columbus, the accomplished president, was present at the State Convention and addressed a mass meeting of citizens in the evening.

Rep.—Please accept thanks for your kindness in furnishing our readers these facts.

Dr. G.—It only gives me pleasure to contribute anything, however meagre, to the information of the people on this subject. Our cause lives on circulating facts. If we can only get the people to read, prohibitionists will multiply like stars in the heavens. Had I access to the memoranda I have gathered, your readers would have much more to provoke reflection and relieve this tedium of the dog-days.

"Rights and Privileges of Laymen."

BY REV. THOS. J. UPTON.

MR. EDITOR: I am highly pleased at the courtesy of Bro. Sullivan in his reply to my article with the above caption, and will endeavor to be equally so in my communications. We differ, and I doubt not, honestly; but then we should always in the discussion of these differences demean ourselves as Christian gentlemen. Bro. Sullivan thinks "that to carry out my suggestion would require a radical change in the fundamental law of our episcopacy." This, however, is simply his opinion which might be dissented from were the matter carried to the ecclesiastical courts. But, suppose the change in the "fundamental law" were required in order to admit laymen into the cabinet, it would not necessarily follow that damages were done either to the cause of God or to Methodism.

I am willing to concede the fact that laymen have all the "rights and privileges" which he claims that they have; but claim that they are entitled to more than he is willing to accord to them. I think their piety and devotion to the church, together with their faithfulness in the discharge of duties under the "rights and privileges" accorded them in 1868, entitle them to positions in the cabinet and are a guarantee that they will not hinder, but greatly facilitate the aggressive usefulness of the church.

I am aware that "under our economy" the layman can not claim any "right" to suggest anything with regard to the appointments. It is only accorded them by courtesy of the Bishops and presiding elders; but am of the opinion that "the good of the church" and the interests of the preachers require that this right should be accorded them by law. My plan, therefore, proposes that they be made members of the cabinet by law and that the appointments be made "by and with their advice and consent."

The need of all the aid the laymen can give is admitted by Bro. Sullivan, though he opposes the calling into requisition of this aid exactly where I think it would be of great advantage. If the Bishop is aided and enlightened by the suggestion of the presiding elders who are but seldom on the work and rarely ever hear the suggestions of one who is constantly on the ground, and knows both the ability of the preacher and the requirements of the people, would increase the degree of enlightenment.

But says Bro. Sullivan: "The presiding elders, preachers and laymen may and do differ widely in reference to where man shall be sent; but when they have given their views, the decision is left to one godly man," etc. Under our economy the layman is not there to express his opinion on the subject, but my suggestion proposes that he be there under authority of law and that his suggestion be heard as a matter of "right" and not simply of courtesy. As to the godliness of the man I have no doubt but many laymen are equal in that respect to any of our Bishops, and think the appointments would be as judiciously made, if made according to their suggestion, as if by a Bishop who knows but little about the preachers, and absolutely nothing about the congregation, even though it be at the suggestion of his presiding elders. My good brother thinks the Bishop makes the appointments "with freedom from those local and personal influences which would inevitably play so large and injurious a part in the deliberation and conclusion of the cabinet."

Will my dear brother contend that the sources, the presiding elders, from whence the Bishop derives his information relative to the preachers, are as free from those local and personal influences as he claims the Bishop to be? If the laymen are in the cabinet, it seems to me that the information derived from the two sources would enable him to make the appointments more judiciously than if only the presiding elders are consulted. The interests of the church and preacher would both be subserved by this change, therefore let us have it.

Red Sea Passage.

BY REV. ANSON DOWLING.

THREE days' journey brought the people of Israel to the Red Sea—a distance of about thirty-five miles. The way through the raags of hills or mountains near the sea is called Pibahirath—Mouth. Entering through this open space they found a place of sufficient breadth for comfortable camping. But when the army of Pharaoh was heard approaching, the situation was calculated to add to their distress and horror. In front lay the Red Sea, right and left the mountains, and in the rear the advancing hosts of Pharaoh. Confusion and dismay reigned supreme in all the camps of Israel. Amid this wild horror Moses betook himself to earnest prayer. It was the only available arm of protection and defence. In obedience to answered prayer Moses took his stand on the edge of the sea with the wonder-working rod in hand. The scepter of sheep becomes the scepter of men and the sign of wisdom and power. It wakes the winds, divides the waters, dries the ground and makes an easy and safe passage for old men and women, fathers and mothers, with all their children, including the babies.

At the point of passage the Red Sea was about twelve miles wide and eighty feet deep. The waters were piled up in heights right and left, forming "walls." These walls, therefore, must have been over one hundred feet high. These walls were "congealed in the heart of the sea." Dr. Clark says, "The strong east wind employed to dry the bottom of the sea is here represented as the blast of God's nostrils that had congealed or frozen the waters so that they stood in heaps like a wall on the right hand and on the left hand." Then these walls, on the right hand and left hand, were solid. What a change was wrought by the scepter of power! These walls were far enough apart to afford ample room for the entrance and passage of all Israel in the course of a few hours. The scene of the passage must have been brilliant indeed. The glory of God from the "pillar of fire" must have blazed on the walls the whole distance of the passage, so that the pathway of darkness and doubt became the pathway of brightness and hope. Into this brightness and glory the people entered with bounding joy and quickened step. In the passage they were confirmed in the bright hope of the future, and ascend the other shore shouting glory to their all victorious Lord. As the "pillar of fire" gave light and glory to the people of Israel, and blackness and darkness to the people of Egypt, so the Red Sea became the scene of life and salvation to Israel, and of death and destruction to the hosts of Pharaoh. Pharaoh, who had decreed to destroy all the male children born at the time Moses was born by having them "cast into the river," now realized his measure meted to himself. He who decreed death by water died by water. He that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword.

The heart of Moses was so filled by the presence of the Lord God that his lips were tuned to sing his loudest praise. In this song of loudest praise he uttered the purpose to prepare his God a habitation. Hence in the passage of the Red Sea, and the salvation and glory thereof, Moses realized in the highest sense the propriety and utility of preparing a house or home for the God of his fathers. Here is the beginning of church conception which evolved the tabernacle at Mt. Sinai and goes on through the ages till John, in the isle of Patmos, heard the song of triumph in the upper and eternal temple as they sang the song of Moses and of the lamb. Why this connection in the final song of conquest and salvation in heaven if Moses did not introduce the grand enterprise?

In this light alone can St. Paul be understood when, writing to the church at Corinth, he says: "I would not have you ignorant, brethren, in regard to the work of Moses, how all our fathers were baptized unto him in the doctrines and obligations of revealed truth and duty; and that in realizing their meaning in practical living they 'did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed them: and that rock was Christ.'" Why should the inspired Paul refer the church at Corinth to these points under the administration of Moses if they did not constitute a base line of warning and instruction? These points were pertinent to the gospel church at Corinth. Therefore there was analogy, likeness, oneness. Then we draw a few inferences: 1. The church at Corinth was baptized by pouring—as under Moses they were baptized by pouring. 2. At Corinth they had their babies baptized—as under Moses all the babies were baptized in passing through the Red Sea. 3. At Corinth the church held to free or open communion—as under Moses they all did eat and drink of Christ. In heaven above all the saved will realize the oneness of salvation from all the ages and unite in the triumphal and eternal shout of victory.

For the Master's Sake.

God loves a cheerful giver. So the Bible teaches. I have sometimes thought that there is a considerable amount of giving that can scarcely be called cheerful giving. Men often give because the Conference assesses, because the preacher asks and because their not giving will discredit them in ecclesiastical circles. Yet while there is more or less of this perfunctory, spiritless giving, there is much giving of a different type. There are claims which appeal not to ecclesiastical pride, but to piety and philanthropy, and these claims are cheerfully met. I desire through the columns of the ADVOCATE to present a claim of this sort. I refer to the Ministerial Educational Association. This organization is extra judicial. Its existence among us is due not to disciplinary requirement, but to voluntary beneficence. Its object is to provide funds for educating young preachers who are unable to educate themselves. The praiseworthiness of the object is unchallenged. To give a young man that training which will fit him for the noblest of all callings is an achievement which merits universal approbation. This association has been in existence for several years, and has aided a number of young men who are now doing royal service in our itinerant ranks. The object of this paper is to make an appeal to the church for additional help. Last session we had at Centenary College two beneficiaries. Next session we will probably have three and two others. To sustain these four not less than four hundred dollars will be needed. Our available resources do not reach that sum. As president of the association, I therefore appeal to the church for aid. Brethren, will you not respond to this call. Send any amount, large or small, to the treasurer, Dr. C. G. Andrews, Jackson, Miss. Remember the words of our Savior: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." W. C. BLACK.

From Arcadia, La.

The church at Autioch, where we were to have held our Quarterly Conference for Summerfield circuit, was burned down a few nights before. It is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. On arriving on the ground Saturday we found that our people had put up a capacious arbor, and so we were enabled to hold service with probably more comfort than is possible indoors during these intensely warm days. Bro. Davies has been having some good meetings at Alabama and Harmony, and at Autioch we had a good time. The pastor's report discovered a good work going on among the young, there being a flourishing young men's prayer meeting at our church and thriving class meetings at several points on his circuit. Our young brother is working hard, but his avoirdupois seemingly does not suffer. The Conference appointed a committee to raise this fund and to build at once a Methodist Church to replace the Union one that was burned. It is not likely that the Autioch community will find much difficulty in putting up a creditable structure.

We are glad to see that Col. A. C. Mitchell and Judge L. E. Carter, of Shreveport, have issued the call for a State Prohibition Convention to meet in that city on Wednesday, August 19. There is in all the parishes of our district a very strong and constantly growing prohibition sentiment, and it is confidently expected that throughout North Louisiana there will be held at once meetings of the temperance people to elect delegates to this convention. Every parish in the State should be represented, and let there be a rally all along the line. Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi and other Southern States have held their prohibition conventions, and it is matter of rejoicing that our own beloved Louisiana, at whose throat, and gnawing at whose vitals is this whiskey devil, is about to have her first State Prohibition Convention. I want to attend, and I want to meet the best people of the State there—the men who do not believe in being ruled by whiskey, lotteries and other of the devil's machinations, but who are for prohibition, for sober men and women, for happy homes and a glorious future. I shall do my best to squeeze out a day or two from my pressing engagements to be in Shreveport, God willing, on August 19. Brethren, ministerial and lay, let us work and make this convention a success.

August 4, 1885.

It will doubtless be of interest to many readers to know where our Presidents are buried. All of them have been buried in the States of which they were citizens at the time of their death, and most of them on their own homesteads:

Washington at Mount Vernon; Jefferson at Monticello; the Adamses at their old home at Quincy, Mass.; Madison on his own farm in Virginia; Monroe in Hollywood, at Richmond; Jackson at his home in Tennessee; Van Buren at Kinderhook, N. Y.; Harrison at North Bend, Ind.; Tyler in Virginia; Polk in Tennessee; Fillmore at Buffalo; Pierce in New Hampshire; Buchanan in Pennsylvania; Lincoln at Springfield, Ill.; Johnson in Tennessee; Garfield in Ohio, and Grant in New York.

A STEAMBOAT BISHOP.—Commodore Vanderbilt and the members of his family were present when Bishop McTear preached one of his most eloquent sermons, the occasion being the anniversary of the presentation of the "Church of the Strangers" by the Commodore to the Rev. Chas. F. Deems, D. D. Vanderbilt listened with rapt attention, and when the celebrated divine took his seat, George Osgood, the broker, observed, "That preacher is a game cock, Commodore!" "No sir, he's a steamboat man! a steamboat!" was the emphatic response. This was the Commodore's type of this acme of greatness.—Register.

HIS FOOTSTEP.

BY INVAD.

He is coming! he is coming! for I hear his footsteps fall
As he enters now the gateway, as he passes thro' the hall,
"Tis his 'dear, familiar' footstep, and I know it
From all others,
And no matter where I'd hear it I would know it Was my brother's.

Ah! how often I have listened thro' the weary hours long,
Waiting, watching for his coming, with my heart
Bereft of song!
But my heart grows calm and restful when his well-known step I hear,
For 'tis sweeter than soft music as it falls upon my ear.

'Tis not swift, 'tis not slow measured, 'tis not stealthy, Cautious tread;
Yet I think its very magic would awake me were I dead!
'Tis a step both firm and steady—just the same by day and night—
And his feet are brave and steady, for he plods the path of right.

Ah! you smile when I express it—yet "how beautiful his feet!"
For they walk the path of duty, bearing tidings glad and sweet,
To the house of grief and mourning, to the sufferer's bedside,
He has gone to cheer and comfort and to watch o'er those who died.

There is music, there is magic in his footsteps—aye, a sound
That methinks would wake my slumbers were I sleeping 'neath the ground.
Surely I would "wake with gladness" from my dreamless slumbers sweet
When I hear among the daisies the glad echo of his feet.

I love to think when I am gone, and he is left alone,
While waiting for his coming, as I stand before the throne,
That in the midst of all that throng, with music everywhere,
That I shall hear and know his step upon "the golden stair."

Ah! yes, methinks that even there will fall no sweeter sound Upon my ears from angel harps, from those white robes and crowned,
Than the glad music of his step—to me an angel's here—
And I shall have to "welcome home" and greet my brother dear.

How Far Is the Church Responsible for the Whisky Curse?

BY HON. W. H. GOODALE.

I was reading over the other day to "my little girl" the nursery tale of "Puss in Boots." It will be remembered that the remarkable cat who is the hero of this somewhat improbable story, among other advantages which she had planned to secure for her doll of a master, had set her mind upon a valuable estate which belonged to a magician who was so far the terror of all honest folk as to render his spoliation and even his destruction a matter greatly to be desired, if not a positive duty. So this knowing cat dared him to make a display of his powers of magic, whereupon, to her great consternation, he turned himself into a lion. But the crafty puss evaded the destruction which threatened her by jumping up on to the mantelpiece, where she gave utterance to the reckless proposition—"Anyone can turn into a lion. I just dare you now to turn into a mouse." The foolish magician could not endure this taunt, and on appearing as a mouse was at once pounced upon and devoured by his cunning foe.

This tale brought back to me a thought of my early boyhood when told the story of Satan assuming the form of the serpent in the Garden of Eden: "If Eve instead of eating that apple—if apple it was, who knows?—had munched that snake's head with a stone, would there have been any devil left to tempt mankind?" I am not desirous of raising any new theological issues to divide the church. There are too many now. Eve, doubtless, in some way lost the chance of her lifetime in her interview with the serpent, as most of her posterity have done, I had almost said, "time and again" ever since. But it seems to me that most of us must have felt at times a longing to get at evil in a concrete form—"reduced to its lowest terms," as it were, the devil in the form of a mouse, on which we could avenge humanity and gratify our personal resentment by a crushing tread of the heel. Such an opportunity is presented by the whisky curse. It is the concrete devil, iniquity concentrated, hollid down, the double-distilled quintessence of sin.

"Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine!"

And remember this was wine. Since that was written this producer of woe, of sorrow, of contentions, of babbling, of wounds, of physical degeneracy, has been distilled and drugged and boiled over in the death-producing chaldron of hell until it holds in its foul embrace the incitements to every form of lust, of vice, of crime, that all the powers of darkness through all their long infernal orgies have been able, with all their combined capacities for evil, to devise. Here is its terrible arraignment: It costs more in dollars than every function of government, national, State, city, county and municipal, including our army and navy, our Congress, our State Legislatures, the river and harbor and pension bills, all national, State, county and local debts and all the schools in the country. This is the weakest count in the whole indictment. It is the destroyer of the home, the chief cause of pauperism, of crime, of insanity; its annual death-roll is twelve and one-half times greater than that of war; it is the ever active foe to Sunday observance, to religion, to education, to health.

Said Gladstone, in the House of Commons: "We suffer more each year and every year by intemperance than from war, pestilence and famine—those three great scourges of the human family." Stop its ravages, and you open the prison doors and the steady flow of the red tide of crime is staid. Check at its source its turgid stream, and you throttle in infancy nine-tenths of all the evils that afflict humanity. It is the concrete devil—Satan in the form of the serpent, the magician in the form of the mouse.

Now, what is the duty of the church? Plainly to put its foot upon this evil. What is the responsibility of the church? We shall see.

We announce these three propositions:

1. The church is not, or should not be, the mere passive exemplar of moral principles, the custodian, as it were, of certain ethical postulates. It is, or should be, an army organized for aggressive warfare upon evil in every form and wherever found. The warfare is, or should be, a l'outrance, the conflict immediate, unrelenting and as inevitable as chemical action or the attraction of gravitation.

2. Moral responsibility, whether in the church or out of it, includes not merely the harm one does, but also the good he might, but does not do.

3. The whisky curse could not exist against the determined opposition of the Christian church. Its death-knell will be sounded the moment that membership in the church of Christ means active opposition to this evil.

These are the three propositions, short, incisive and indisputable, that fix upon the church—of to-day the responsibility for this giant among evils, this "sum of all villainies." May the great Head of the church, not with the "scourge of small cords," but by the gentler influences of that love which is infinite purify the church in its members that this sin be not laid upon us!

BATON ROUGE, LA., Aug. 10, 1885.

Retrospective.

TWENTY-FIFTH PAPER.

During a year Mr. McDowell traveled a circuit in Alabama. There were those in the Methodist Episcopal Church who opposed its policy so far as the episcopacy was concerned. They contended that our Bishops were invested with too much power—especially in assigning the itinerant preachers to their fields of labor, with other objectionable features, and urged with more heated vehemence than solid argument that a more liberal form of church government should be adopted. Among the leaders and abettors of this departure from the established polity of our church since the days of Coke and Ashury were seven local preachers within the bounds of Mr. McDowell's circuit who were busy in making proselytes, and succeeded in making many believe that it was only a question of time when there would be no Bishops in the Methodist Church. These dissatisfied preachers organized a branch of the Methodist Protestant Church, or, as designated by some, Reformers (?). Among the number was a dignified old gentleman who was highly respected for his piety and talents. He was popular with the people. Before moving to Alabama he had been honored with a seat in the Georgia Legislature, where he learned to be calm in debate.

Previous to entering the ministry Mr. McDowell had studied and practiced law, so that he was no novice in debate. Six of the disaffected local preachers who had challenged Mr. McDowell to discuss the questions at issue had met him at his appointments. In his lawyer-like way he had quizzed them off of their ministerial balance until they ceased to trouble him. The seventh was Mr. W. (the old gentleman alluded to above), whom he regarded more formidable than all the rest on account of his high standing in the community, urbanity in manners and tact in debate. He was very much in hopes that he would let him prosecute his work unmolested; but not so. He had notified the people at one of the most prominent appointments that at a regular appointment he would be present and discuss the question of church government with their circuit rider.

As no previous notice had been given Mr. McDowell, he knew nothing of the affair until he reached his appointment on Sabbath morning, where he found a much larger audience than usual in waiting to hear the discussion. Said he: "I took my text and preached as though nothing out of the common order of things was to transpire." At the close of the sermon Mr. W. rose and asked permission to speak, which was granted. Just at this juncture a fat old colored woman started from one of the back seats, proceeded down the aisle with a heavy and noisy tread, Mr. W. and the congregation watching her strange movement until she stopped in front of the pulpit. Addressing Mr. McDowell, she said: "I want you to tell me what I ought to do. In Georgia I belonged to Master W.'s church (looking at him as he stood speechless)—the regular old Methodist Church, sir; but since we come to Alabama I told that he is a deformer, and now please tell me what I ought to do." Mr. McDowell replied: "Aunt, I presume you can do as you please. If you prefer to remain with us, you can do so." Whereupon Mr. W. stamped his foot, ordering her back to her seat to his discomfort. After a brief pause, taking a second sober thought, the good man said: "It is possible I ought not to have intruded on this occasion. I take the interruption which has occurred as a rebuke, and have nothing to say at present." The old colored woman (in church status) gained local option. Mr. McDowell gained the day without debate, while there was nothing left for Mr. W. to gain but mortification and defeat for his gratuitous interference. The interesting (?) services closed with the benediction.

On the same circuit there lived a pious Dutchman who was well to do in the world. He had built a neat, commodious church and deeded it to the Methodists. He was thoroughly indoctrinated and fixed in his faith and religious principles. Like many other of our old-time members, he loved the Methodist Church, her polity, doctrines and her prudential usages, and was grieved when he heard of members deserting her ranks. He had acquired a habit of expressing a hearty approval during the delivery of the sermon, whenever the preacher uttered pious sentiments in accord with his views, by clapping his hands and saying, "A-men."

The sad news reached him that a favorite young preacher had united with the Protestant Methodist Church. He was anxious to see him and interview him on the subject; sent him a pressing invitation to fill an appointment at his church. The young preacher accepted the invitation; the day was fixed. When the preacher arrived the congregation was seated in the church. The preacher entered the pulpit before having an opportunity of speaking to his old friend. He had not proceeded far in his discourse before our old brother warmed up and seemed to forget the young man's estrangement. He commenced a pious sentiment which touched a vibrating chord in the Dutchman's heart; but before closing the well-begun paragraph he cast a reflection upon the government of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Not anticipating this, with uplifted hand, looking him full in the face, ready to give his hearty approval, he said, "A-a—" Then, with a sudden shake of the head and indignant frown, he rounded off by saying, "Mfne vriend, dot alters the case."

Mr. McDowell afterward took a position among the local preachers, while he remained a fast friend to the itinerant, giving them a cordial welcome to his house and board. Few excelled him in companionable entertainment. The writer is unadvised as to when, where and how he departed this life, but entertains a hope of meeting him distant from earth's cloudy skies.

The Prohibition Campaign.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed I send you a communication clipped from the Amite City Independent, which I hope you will reproduce in the ADVOCATE. It speaks for itself. The people of this ward at the last election voted "no license," and there probably will be another vote on the question next fall, as the liquor dealers may hope to reopen the saloons. There has been a marked improvement in the community since they were closed, though drug stores have multiplied. We want an organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in this place. With such an association we feel confident of permanent success in closing the grog shops, and by the execution of the law to keep doctors and drug stores within legitimate limits. Last fall I secured the names of quite a number of ladies for the organization of an union, and have been corresponding with the view of getting someone of the order to visit us and organize a working union. We want a lady who can face an audience and talk on the subject of temperance to come and lead in the work. If such an one can not be obtained, we will proceed to organize and report to the proper authority. It behooves the friends of temperance and humanity to be at work at this auspicious moment. One blow at this time will be of more service to the cause than two in the future. In your peregrinations stop and favor us with a talk on prohibition, or any kindred subject, and we will give you an attentive audience.

Fraternally, J. M. PUGH.

THE VICTIM'S PLEADING.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT: I believe I am one of the oldest residents in this town, and have been at different times and frequently addicted to sprees of the most degrading character; have reformed several times and noted the change in my business and family affairs—always pleasant and prosperous. But, alas! I have been tempted, enticed and treated to drink when I really had no desire to drink by my so-called friends until I have fallen many, many times a victim to drunkenness. But I can solemnly say I have never bought a drop of liquor since the prohibition law has been under the influence of it, and I appeal to the ladies to help me to do all in their power to suppress the license for ever. Never permit the accursed stuff to be sold in our beautiful little town again. Ah! yes, all the ladies can do a great deal toward helping to save their husbands, fathers, sons and even fathers. I tell you of my own experience in this town for the past twenty-five years. I mean the ups and downs caused by whisky. During this time I have bought from and seen buried eleven barkeepers, saw three men murdered in the streets while intoxicated, and witnessed a most horrible death from delirium tremens in the back room of a saloon. All these are facts; and is it not enough to the minds of all sane people to the sad reality of the destruction of our people? Just think of it! Right here in our corporation, in sight of churches of almost every denomination, the horrible work of drunkenness, gambling, horse racing and every conceivable work of infamy has been perpetrated previous to the prohibition enactment. Compare the difference since then. Notwithstanding some have been lucky or, rather, unlucky in procuring prescriptions—he that as it may—we are benefited, even if it remains just as it is. If only a few do make more money, what is that compared to the heart-rending sight of our sons being murdered, disgraced and going to perdition for the sake of whisky. Vote it out entirely. Then we have done our duty as men, and drive temptation from our homes.

I am a reformer and advocate the temperance cause, and earnestly beg and work all on against the sale of liquor in our midst, and plead with everyone to help me suppress the license. Look at our young men and young ladies of late; how much more the young men seek their company and escort them to church and places of entertainment, and can promenade our streets right by where the bar-rooms used to be in perfect peace and assurance of not being made to blush. These are only a few circumstances I have given. Were I to write all the misery, sorrow and even crimes I have witnessed caused from whisky it would fill several columns; but these are positive facts I have stated, and I hope and pray henceforth no man will ask me to take a drink.

Meridian District Conference.

The Meridian District Conference convened at Lauderdale, July 30. The presiding elder, Rev. James A. Godfrey, presided. Although feeble in body, his mind still sparkles and he sandwiched the occasion with many spicy remarks. He made a careful inquiry into the condition of each charge, especially as to its spiritual state. Much was said upon the subject of our members holding morning and evening prayers, searching the Scriptures daily, reading our theological standard works and taking our religious papers, especially the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It was a source of deep regret to a number of the pastors that so few of their members read our standard works and religious papers.

A rigid investigation was made into the financial system of the Sunday-schools, and the revival of class meetings was strenuously urged. Indeed some of the brethren reported that the star of the class meeting was again to be seen shining in the spiritual heavens. Oh! that its luster may increase and brighten until the path of the entire church shall again be made plain by its light! Prof. A. D. McVoy was with us on Friday and Saturday. He made a strong speech in regard to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, urging upon all Methodists to support it because it is Methodist property. The building is ours, every brick in it is a Methodist brick, the type is ours, every letter is a Methodist letter, the editor is ours, every thought he has is a Methodist thought, the whole is ours and we ought to support it. Well did our genial president represent the East Meridian Female College, and reported the outlook for the coming year flattering.

The resolutions passed by the Conference in regard to the death of Bro. S. Hawkins show how he was esteemed. A glowing eulogy was passed upon his life by Prof. McVoy which brought the tears to all eyes.

As the time limit necessitates the removal of the presiding elder, Rev. James A. Godfrey, the Conference passed resolutions thanking him for his labors in the district and for his aid to pastors and people.

After the adjournment of the Conference at eleven o'clock Saturday morning, Miss Jemmie Petty, of Meridian, made a stirring appeal to the ladies of Lauderdale in behalf of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. She was followed by our silver-tongued orator, Rev. J. M. Weems, who entertained the audience with an enthusiastic speech upon foreign missions. Miss Petty organized a society with a membership of fifteen. By a contribution of twenty dollars Bro. D. C. Langford was made a life member. On Sunday we had a refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

Your Committee on Temperance beg leave to report the following:

We regard the cause of temperance as one of almost unparalleled importance. Whether viewed from the standpoint of the State or from that of the church it demands and elicits thoughtful attention. If we consult the material interests of the country at large, we find intemperance to be the cause of a financial drain that is equalled by nothing else. It creates crime that must be prosecuted; it creates pauperism, idleness and insanity that must be supported. If we consult the spiritual or religious interests of the country, we find no greater obstacle in our way. We blame the whisky traffic for these unnecessary financial expenditures and these hindrances to morality and religion growing out of intemperance. Stop the sale of whisky and intemperance, with its frightful array of evil consequences, must cease. We are glad to know that light, from reliable sources, is being shed upon this subject to such an extent that there is an awakening of interest among all classes that arouses investigation and leads to wise and courageous action. We are also glad to know that while moral suasion is allowed to do its legitimate work, there is a disposition on the part of the most intelligent and respectable citizens of our State to prohibit, by law, the traffic in intoxicating liquors. Prohibition does not purpose to interfere with any rights or liberties properly belonging to any one. We favor the prohibition of the whisky traffic for the same reason we would oppose the licensing of highway robbery. We claim that we have liberties, the exercise of which is not detrimental to others, and these the whisky business would take from us. Between liberties damaging and ousting to society and liberties elevating and refining we can not hesitate to choose. We propose to enlarge the one and restrain the other. That the whisky traffic brings into the public school treasury of Mississippi a considerable sum of money is a poor argument in its favor when we remember that it is supporting vice at the expense of virtue. It is to be hoped the time is now at hand when the moral sense of the people will condemn, with unrelenting condemnation, the unchristian idea that it is right to use the price of blood to educate our sons and daughters. The success of this movement is our ardent desire. We desire it not because we would precipitate financial damage upon any one engaged in the traffic, but because we would protect our own material interests and stimulate and encourage our educational and religious advancement. We are glad to report prohibition as a growing sentiment. It meets with encouragement everywhere and among all classes. We have not a doubt of its final triumph.

We offer for adoption the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we will endeavor, to our utmost ability, to banish intemperance wherever it exists from the membership of our church.

Resolved, That we recommend the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as an organization worthy of the confidence and hearty co-operation of the women of our church.

Resolved, That as individual members of this District Conference we pledge ourselves to pray and work unceasingly for the success of prohibition.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CHURCH PERIODICALS.

Your committee, to whom was referred the duty of reporting upon our church literature, beg leave to report as follows:

That after canvassing the matter as fully as possible we are compelled to say that in most of our pastoral charges to take the ADVOCATE and read them forms the exception and not the rule among our people. That a comparatively limited number of our church papers are taken by the members of our church, their places having been substituted by cheap secular papers containing stories of a light and trashy character which have a tendency to vitiate the tastes of our youth, and yet we find these same people objecting to and refusing to subscribe to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE because it contains an occasional story though of a much less objectionable character. In fact the excuse offered by our people are light and frivolous in the extreme. While we think it eminently proper and instructive to read good secular papers we do deprecate the idea that that should form the basis of an excuse for not having our religious papers in their families. We recognize fully the fact that circulation of good, sound religious literature is the most effective means of educating the rising generation in morals, and yet we regret to say that but few family libraries contain our standard works on theology, and consequently our people are not informed on this subject as they should be. It is a serious question with us how to accomplish this much desired end, for until our people are better instructed the church must suffer loss at this point. We would recommend a more earnest effort on the part of our ministry for the circulation of our church literature. We think it would be advisable that our preachers deliver a sermon or sermons to each of their congregations on this subject. We do most earnestly endorse the editorial management of the Nashville and NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATES and commend them to our people as pure and clean, furnishing such matter as will tend to elevate the morals and stimulate their religious zeal.

E. F. EDGAR,

A Protracted Meeting Under Difficulties.

The congregation met in a grove where the singing and fluttering of birds, the grazing and movement of animals and the passing of persons along the public highway, attracted the audience and divided its attention with the preacher and thus weakened the force of the word preached. It was showery weather. Sometimes these showers came up just as the people were assembling for worship, or commenced to fall towards the close just as the preacher was enforcing a faithful argument by a most earnest appeal. The congregation had suddenly to break up and seek shelter in the neighboring houses: thus the force of a sermon was lost on that people forever. It was in a country where game was abundant, and many lived thereabouts who loved to hunt and went for the game from within hailing distance of the place of preaching. In the midst of an earnest exhortation the report of the gun that killed the deer is heard and every man, woman and child knows the meaning of it. For a time their attention is arrested when the power of the word is lost upon the summer air. Then the arrangement of the seats was such as to place the speaker in a sinking hole, where an uncomely preacher must stand in such a disadvantageous position to deliver his message, sensibly feeling the disadvantage at which he is put. The congregation meanwhile wondering why he does not preach better or why he does not stand up in a more manly way before them and not cower under their gaze.

To some extent sentiment prevails that if the word is preached right it must have its course and its glorification. The word faithfully dispensed "will accomplish the thing whereto" God "bath sent;" but instead of proving a "savor of life unto life" for the want of upholding the hands of the ministry in prayer and in the removing of these circumstances which serve so to impede and embarrass the truth it, will prove a "savor of death unto death." This when almost any successful farmer could afford to build a comfortable chapel on the sheep plan of the present day.

Perhaps there are few preachers of long and varied experience who have not known successful meetings held under great disadvantageous circumstances, but every such preacher knows that those thoughts that breathe and the words that burn lose their untold force and fiery import from any and all of these detracting and distracting circumstances. Let the church be built on a spot most convenient for the accommodation of the community. The house should be adjusted to the size of the congregation, the seats constructed so that the laboring man can be comfortably seated and the height of the pulpit carefully graduated to the size of the house.

Progress.

BY MRS. J. M. BRUNNEN.

This is an age of progress. Time is unfolding and developing new ideas and improvements in almost every profession and calling known to man. While the world with its varied vocations is reaching out and grasping higher attainments in the works of art, science, agriculture and commercial activity, the church is keeping pace with it. In the last century great improvements have been achieved. Over the wires flash the current news of the day, bringing the world into close proximity. Through our once depopulated forest moves the steam engine with great velocity. Men have erected churches, established Sunday-schools, colleges and given to the world sound literature and sent the gospel into heathen lands. Women, with her multiplied cares, comes upon the scene in behalf of her brethren sisters, and she, too, is accomplishing a noble work. Her power and influence is of no little moment.

The church is advancing with its protecting care and open arms reaching out to the islands of the sea. This great movement in each department is advancing by patient and energetic work. It requires diligence, perseverance and thought to accomplish any grand scheme either mental or physical. The greatest minds the world has ever produced, those that have reached the highest step on the ladder of fame, have been attained by close application and hard study. Their theme has been upward and onward while burning the midnight lamp to attain their purpose.

One hundred years ago a small branch of Methodism was planted on American soil. It has been cultivated by prayers, watered by tears and protected by tender and faithful hands, and God has given abundant increase. From this branch has grown a tree of great magnitude, spreading its beautiful branches over thousands and inviting thousands more to come and rest beneath its shade. The church reaching down through the last century has been broken in many places by the icy touch of death. God in his wisdom and mercy has filled the broken places with other great and good men while the missing links are waiting and watching at the beautiful gate. The laborers are called away one by one to their sweet rest, the work moves on, increasing in power and strength. All these achievements have been accomplished by work and the sustaining power of God.

One hundred years ago was it even conjectured that the women of the nineteenth century would become a strong arm to the church by their missionary zeal and labors. Hitherto the church has failed to employ her greatest element of power. Save in a few instances, woman's influence has been considered out of its sphere when exercised for the conversion of the world. But times are changing, a new idea has been spoken into existence and woman has been chosen as a medium to tell the blessed tidings of a risen Savior.

She puts her armor on her trust in God, bids a long farewell to her native land and sails out on the old ocean rocked by its rolling waves and billows to tell the heathen of Jesus. While she is suffering self-denial and laboring for and with the heathen, her sisters on this side of the great deep are faithfully and successfully laboring for the cause of missions. It has been conceded in all ages that woman is dependent leaning on the strong arm and intellect of man. In this great work she does not depend on man alone, her trust and prayers center around her Savior who is ever interceding for a sinful world. Her last

THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1885.

A steward too stingy to take a church paper is like the trustee of a poor-house—his sympathy becomes a driving force, and he regards his pastor as only a respectable pauper.

Rev. T. W. Dye, writing from Crawford, Miss., says: "We have had a gracious revival at Crawford. The church much revived and many conversions. Twenty-one additions. I go to Trinity to-morrow. Bros. Malone, Gaines and Boon assisted me."

The Methodist who subscribes for a county paper, but hasn't money enough to take an ADVOCATE, puts Caesar before Christ. He prefers politics to piety. He can talk glibly of candidates and campaigns, but is as innocent as an infant of the mighty movements of the Lord Christ in the earth.

In Paris, where the law of the Sabbath is decreed, one in every eighteen of the population receives pauper relief. Just so. The Sabbath rest is as necessary to physical health as to moral and spiritual well being. It is only a question of a short time when Sunday laborers become paupers.

There is a distinction with a difference in the following from the Sunday-School Times: "There is a good deal of difference in letting one's light shine and letting one's self show, and either of the two processes may go on independently of the other." And the peril is that in letting one's self show he imagines that his light is shining. To hide self and exalt the true light is the genius of faith.

The Rev. Mr. Oliver, a distinguished English Wesleyan preacher, puts it in this way: "Wesleyan Methodists may be politicians, but Methodism must not be political." Well said. It is the duty of every Methodist, in a sense, to be a politician. He has public duties that he can not neglect. But Methodism must not be political. The church has no politics. All shades of political opinion may be embraced in her membership; but she has no party policy.

Charles Dudley Warner contributes to the September number of Harper's Magazine a dispassionate, thoughtful article entitled "Impressions of the South." During the Exposition, last winter, Mr. Warner spent some weeks in this city and was an interested student of our institutions and condition. He had ample opportunities for observation and diligently improved them. In the homes of our influential citizens he was a guest, and among the poor he visited with open eyes and eager ears. He concludes, after careful study, that the feeling of nationality has nowhere developed so rapidly of late as at the South, and he is "convinced that this is a genuine development of attachment to the Union and of pride in the nation, and not in any way a political movement for unworthy purposes." Mr. Warner is a literary man and came South not as a politician, but as a searcher after truth.

Discussing the negro problem in the South, he says: "In looking at this question from a Northern point of view we have to keep in mind two things: first, the Federal government imposed colored suffrage without any educational qualification—a hazardous experiment; in the second place, it has handed over the control of the colored people in each State to the State, under the Constitution, as completely in Louisiana as in New York. The responsibility is on Louisiana. The North can not relieve her of it, and it can not interfere, except by ways provided in the Constitution. In the South, where fear of a legislative domination has gone, the feeling between the two races is that of amity and mutual help. This is, I think, especially true in Louisiana. The Southerners never have forgotten the loyalty of the slaves during the war, the security with which the white families dwelt in the midst of a black population while all the white men were absent in the field; they often refer to this. It touches with tenderness the new relation of the races. I think there is generally in the South a feeling of good-will toward the negroes, a desire that they should develop into true manhood and womanhood."

Editorial Correspondence.

Two District Conferences in four days was the task assigned this editor last week, and then he had to decline an invitation to another. But this age annihilates distance and measures the spaces from one point to another not by miles and leagues, but by minutes and hours. A journey that required days in the heroic period of the church can now be made in a few hours, and with comparatively little weariness of body.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Reaching Summit on the early morning of Thursday, in company with quite a delegation en route to the Brookhaven District Conference, we were soon provided with conveyance to Adams' Camp Ground, a distance of nine miles. Pleasant companions and a good road made one forget the passage of time. Nothing disturbed the evenness of that journey except a quiet, dignified college professor, driving a lazy mule, getting into a nest of yellow jackets. No harm was done save a little skillful flying of Nebuchadnezzar's heels and his quickened pace for a rod or two. At halfpast ten o'clock Adams was reached, in good time to hear the opening sermon by Rev. H. Walter Featherston, president of Kavanagh College. The sermon was an elaborate, thoughtful discourse, with passages of real beauty and suggestive force. As we concluded the service, a coincidence was suggested: Fourteen years before that day we first met our young brother, and at a District Conference; he preached, and this editor, then a boy-preacher, offered the concluding prayer. After an excellent, much enjoyed dinner-on-the-ground the Conference was called to order by the presiding elder, Rev. John A. B. Jones. Our sub-Bishop was somewhat jaded from excessive camp meeting labors; but there was no abatement of cordiality and general good humor. Prof. R. S. Ricketts was elected secretary, a position he has adorned for several years, and Rev. B. F. Lewis was made assistant secretary. A few committees were appointed, and in a little while business was well under way. There was no cold formality, no painful reserve; but with admirable courtesy questions were asked and answered, and all material facts connected with the history of each charge were elicited.

Adams is the largest country church we have anywhere seen, and is well kept. The broom and dusting-brush had been freely used. It will seat comfortably nearly six hundred persons, and is provided with pews that rest the body. How many souls have been lost because of heathenish, straight-backed, narrow seats in church! There was a strange, unaccountable lack of an altar, however. A Methodist Church without a chancel is an anomaly. We need the "penitent form," as the Wesleyans call it, for our revival meetings and for our solemn method of administering the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. When the altar is built the pulpit can be lowered. Adams has a large membership, sustains a fine Sunday-school through the entire year, and has been a sort of Jericho—a veritable school of the prophets. Our pastor there and the Conference host, Rev. W. B. Hines, preaches to large congregations every Sabbath and serves a most excellent people.

There were several animated discussions in the Conference that enlivened the routine of business and quickened thought on some new lines. The subject of domestic missions was considered at length, and a special committee ordered to report thereon. In that connection a little pleasant breeze was created by a reference to the local ministry. If the suggestion will only lead to larger activity on the part of those brethren who were once the right arm of the itinerancy, the history of the fathers will repeat itself.

The report on books and periodicals was prepared by Rev. W. B. Lewis, and was a model of good taste. The cordial endorsement of this ADVOCATE in its business and editorial management encourages us to better service. Our purpose both in the counting-room and editor's office is to give the church a sound, helpful, valuable religious paper. The Conference heard us kindly in advocacy of this great cause and adopted the report with a hearty volume of voice. Rev. H. P. Lewis, a former pastor, and much beloved, was present and laid us under special obligations by securing on the ground a good list of subscribers.

So much of the report as refers to this ADVOCATE we quote:

"The energy and devotion of the publishers, Bros. Carver & Jamieson, have given to the church a paper which, in its business department and mechanical execution, will compare favorably with any similar publication within our knowledge. In the editor, Rev. Dr. C. B. Galloway, we recognize the right man in the right place. In his editorial hands the ADVOCATE has fully met the expectations of the church. Conservative without dullness, progressive without being rash, we believe him to be eminently qualified for this responsible position to which the church has called him."

To Bro. Enoch Carruth we are indebted for many courtesies and kind hospitality, and to his brother for a pleasant drive behind a swift trotter to Summit on Friday afternoon.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Leaving Summit about the time the angel of the morning was opening his golden gates, a pleasant run of thirty miles brought us to Tangipahoa. After breaking the fast with Sister Cochran, a devout mother in Israel, a vehicle arrived to convey this editor to Greensburg, a distance of ten miles, where the Woodville District Conference had been in session since Thursday morning. We arrived in time to hear an able and admirable sermon by Rev. D. A. Givens, which produced a profound impression. Bro. Hopper exhorted, and there was an occasion of Pentecostal power.

We found the business of the Conference nearly concluded under the presidency of Rev. D. A. Little, the enterprising and much beloved presiding elder. Bro. Little is closing his quadrennium on the district most successfully, and is highly esteemed by preachers and people. Prof. Wiley, of Centenary College, sat at the secretary's table. We learned that the reports of pastors were generally encouraging, and that a marked advance movement is felt all over the district. Dr. T. A. S. Adams, president of Centenary College, had delighted the brethren with two sermons and a speech, and hastened on to the Jackson District Conference. Among the welcome visitors was Rev. D. P. Bradford. Near Greensburg is the home of his boyhood, and that place was his first pastorate which he served for five successive years. The well-written report on religious literature was presented in the afternoon by Rev. W. W. Hopper, and adopted unanimously and with real cordiality. We are greatly obliged to the brethren for their kind words, their patient attention to an ADVOCATE exhortation and a good list of cash subscribers. The spiritual tone of the Conference was pronounced. Immense congregations filled the church at each service, penitents crowded the altar, and saints rejoiced with an exceeding great joy. It was a refreshing season with the preachers. We have not known so many of the pastors to remain for the Sabbath service. Our home was at the parsonage with Rev. J. W. Ellison and family. Bro. Ellison has had great affliction, and been much interrupted in pastoral work; but he has a warm place in the hearts of his people, and will report at Conference a year of gratifying prosperity. Many pleasant acquaintances were formed at Greensburg which we hope to renew.

In the afternoon we were driven with Rev. J. M. Pugh, the pastor, to Amite City, and at night preached to a large and most attentive congregation. The next morning at six o'clock we started southward, and at nine reported for desk duty at 112 Camp street.

Colleges and Missions.

Our views on the proper work of denominational colleges are well known to the readers of the ADVOCATE. They ought to provide a positively religious and Methodist education or else change their charters. And in conserving the spirit of true religion they ought to develop missionaries for the home and foreign fields. In an able editorial, advocating an increase of our missionary forces abroad, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate says:

It is a fact of no small significance that the old universities of England and many of the colleges of the United States have recently been stirred to their very depths by the missionary spirit which has pervaded them. Let not our Southern colleges be left behind in this movement. Emory College and Wesleyan Female College and Wofford College have a few noble men and women in our foreign work; but there is not so far as we know, in any Southern college such a strong missionary sentiment as will justify the hope of their answering this unusual call. Do our college professors in their morning and evening prayers mention our foreign work?

That last interrogatory is an argumentum ad hominem. We would like to receive and classify the answers for the honor of Methodism. Not long ago an account was published in this and other Advocates of a revival in Shanghai, China, conducted by young men who went out from the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. A more cheering item of news has not been given to the public in years. They caught the missionary spirit at college and at once obeyed the Master's call. When our institutions of learning become so thoroughly religious and Methodist in spirit that souls are converted during the term and students offer themselves for mission work in heathen lands great grace will rest upon the church in all her departments of service. The history of missions and the current movements of the church of God in all lands ought to be a part of every college curriculum. A knowledge of the Lord's needs in extending his kingdom will awaken interest therein and open young hearts to the Master's call. An alma mater that produces missionaries has caught the spirit of Wesley's grand motto, "The world is my parish." Her motherly heart throbs in sympathy with the benighted of far-away lands, and she sends to their relief her noblest and best-beloved sons and daughters. Emory College has an enviable record in this regard. And what is specially worthy of mention, most of her missionaries consecrated themselves to the work while students within her halls.

The Home Altar.

An altar of daily spiritual sacrifice in each home is a necessary family equipment. From the earliest ages of the church it has been enjoined, and parenthood has been crowned with the triple office of prophet, priest and king. The responsibilities of that divinely honored relation can not be adequately discharged without a sacredly guarded home altar. The daily sacrifices of prayer and thanksgiving should be offered thereon, and the fires beneath never allowed to go out. Its importance is enjoined by every consideration of domestic, social, and spiritual well being. No home is complete without an altar around which parents and children meet for invocation and Divine thanksgiving.

It cements the family bond. In praying for common blessings their interests and purposes become more identified. We have a tenderer affection for those who are oftenest in our thoughts when communing with God. And, then, all feel happier when together they have prayed and committed their common interests into the Father's hand. They will be more careful to avoid occasions of contention and more watchful over their words and tempers.

It is valuable in family discipline. The praying parent, if consistent, commands the profoundest reverence of his household. His solemn tones in daily family worship echo in the hearts of the little ones and give sacred authority to every request or command. It was the habit of a saintly itinerant preacher of the early days in the South-west to mention each child by name in family prayer, and invoke Divine blessing upon each new experience, purpose or enterprise in their domestic history. The reader need not be surprised, therefore, that every child became a devout Christian, and nearly all have been gathered to their heavenly home. On the other hand, a professing Christian and church member loses right influence in his own home by neglect of this duty. His children will mark a divergence between profession and practice, and so far discount his sanctity and sincerity. He may advise them in matters of business and in plans for worldly prosperity; but his counsel will not be sought or respected in spiritual and eternal needs and experiences. A young man, the son of a steward in the church, passing into eternity, thus addressed his heart-broken parent, "Father, I have never heard you pray." This was his dying testimony against parental neglect.

Other reasons for the constant faithful discharge of this duty will occur. In each mind let them be elaborated. But, however necessary the service and imminent the responsibility, many plead exemption for lack of fitness. They appreciate its importance, but from excessive modesty or morbid timidity shrink from the duty. To all such we offer one or two practical suggestions:

1. Purchase some manual of family worship, and read a prayer every day. It is far better to do that than neglect a duty altogether. We recommended this to a friend some years ago, not a church member, and his family have not been without daily worship since. "The Golden Censer," prepared by Dr. Summers, is very good for this purpose, as is also "The Home Altar," by Dr. Deems. If the father of the family is absent, the mother can gather the children together and read a morning or evening prayer.

2. If the father insists that he can not pray, and has no manual of worship, let the children be assembled and all read a Scripture lesson, alternately or in concert. And if this is concluded with the Lord's prayer, the day is well begun.

"The Accuser of Our Brethren."

BY REV. J. B. A. ABBRENS, D. D.

The superscription is the title which the inhabitants of heaven gave to Satan. "It would be heinously impious to suppose that God allowed Satan to approach him with malicious insinuations and foul slander. Even a follower of Christ lends no ear to the backbiter and slanderer. Someone has said that the willing ear of him who listens to slander is as gully as the lying tongue of the slanderer. When the latter is hanging the former should be hung. No, Satan can not deceive God; he can not lead the Omniscient by the nose with distorted truth, with lies and calumny. With men, benighted, and who gladly believe the bad and even the worse of their associates, this is easy. A wayfaring man and fool may succeed. All that is necessary to insure success in slandering and backbiting is thoroughly to imbibe the Satanic disposition.

Satan is the accuser of our brethren in that he accuses the brother against his brother, accuses the brethren among themselves, sows discord, plants acrimony, kindles enmity, cherishes old grudges, begets slander, backbiting, calumny, nourishes contention, opposition, rancor, creates a spirit of bitterness, wrath, revenge. On the principle that Jesus is the Prince of Peace, Satan is the creator and sovereign protector of war—war in the family, the church and the country.

As soldiers of King Jesus, we have our appropriate banner. It is the cross of Christ. In hoc signo vinces. This is the standard around which we gather. But I have never read of a special ensign of Satan. I am not impertinent; but I would respectfully suggest to King Diabolus an expressive design for a suitable insignia: Give in a smoky field of lava his own hideous portraiture, encouragingly clapping with his hands, while near by a human being charges the ear of another with vilest slander. For borders and fringe of this flag the embers and fire of hell will do. It is not necessary that the two human beings in the hellish ensign should be wicked female tattlers and slanderers. Old-womanish men will do as well.

Soon after coming to the United States a friend assured me that the Americans, as a rule, were not so much given to backbiting as many of another nationality. I wot of. Perhaps he was right. At least many mind their own business and are uniformly respectful to all others, neither backbiting nor tolerating it in others. This trait of character was very prominent in Bishop Parker. I remember how at one time a preacher was very roughly handled in his presence. A sermon preached by said preacher had been a miserable failure; the central truth of the text not comprehended, the exposition, delivery and language, erroneous and faulty. This seemed to pain the Bishop. He quietly asked what the text had been. The words being quoted, he added: "Well, at any rate, a very good text."

Would you, dear reader, venture to say in the presence of others what you have said or tolerated to be said behind their back. I fear not. But to speak behind the back of others disparagingly and injuriously, without being willing and ready to repeat it freely in their presence, is slander. To tolerate it in others is equally damnable. I fear that the sin of slandering and backbiting is fearfully general among the children of men. Are you guiltless?

Last winter I read the correspondence from the seat of an Annual Conference session, in which the writer remarked that the preachers in open Conference criticized each other's character and work thoroughly, and oftentimes even severely; but that subsequently in contact with the church and the world they would stand up for each other and not suffer that the character of any of their comrades was defiled with the snaky slime of slander. The former I can attest; but have misgivings about the latter.

The injury resulting to the cause of Christ from backbiting and slandering is incalculably great. Suspicion, distrust and fear of man invariably ensue. Hypocrisy, too, will be present. He who curses us behind our back will bless us to our face. Much complimenting and extolling in their presence those behind whose back we tolerated or practiced vile slander! No wonder that such a state of things grieves the Holy Spirit, so that the work of God lies prostrate, revival and conversions are impossible, the preacher's strength is paralyzed and the spiritual life of the church disastrously impaired. No one can be guilty of backbiting and slandering and, at the same time, enjoy the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. As well might light and darkness dwell together.

When anyone approaches me with backbiting I give him answer as Jesus did his tempter in the wilderness: "Get thee behind me, Satan." Backbiters and slanderers are the handy tools of Satan.

Prohibition in Sabine.

The taunt that "prohibition does not prohibit" is a question of fact. It can only be settled by the testimony of credible witnesses. The friends of the legal and constitutional suppression of the liquor traffic claim that such legislation with impartial administration will ensure a decrease of crime and the elevation of public morals in all communities. To ascertain, therefore, the results of a prohibitory statute we have only to examine the records of criminal courts and observe the trend of public thought in a parish or municipality. We have read the positive affirmations of criminal judges and mayors of cities in the State of Maine, and there is perfect harmony of statement. But we have an explicit and reliable testimony nearer home. Those accustomed to deny or doubt the efficiency of repressive laws against the greatest evil of the age are invited to candidly consider the report of the recent grand jury in the parish of Sabine. After a patient, searching inquiry into the affairs of the parish they reported to the court as follows:

"We find no crime of note to engage our attention. We find our parish in a peaceful and quiet condition. We have found several bills for misdemeanors and a few felonies. We found no bills for homicide, nor have we found a single bill for any single encounter among citizens, which we attribute to the beneficial effects of the local option law which has been in operation for the last six months. And we beg to assure all that the benefits arising from this law, which restrains the indiscriminate sale of intoxicating liquors, has been and is one of the greatest blessings a civilized people can enjoy, and has gone far toward putting an end to crime in our parish. We note with pleasure the commendable manner in which our people observe it."

Bastrop Thirty Years Ago.

The recent notices in the ADVOCATE of a new church dedication at Bastrop, La., recalls some history. By the conjoint labors of Rev. J. T. Sawyer, pastor last year, and Rev. J. A. Parker, the present pastor, a handsome brick structure of Gothic architecture has been erected and dedicated, thus evidencing the continued vitality of our Methodism in that charming town. Thirty years ago there was another church dedication in Bastrop, and shortly after the Louisiana Conference was in session there. An account of it we find in a letter to this ADVOCATE from the Rev. Linus Parker, a young member of the Conference, whose name has since been a household word in the whole South-west. Bishop Kavanagh presided, having traveled through the swamp from Providence accompanied by a number of young men transferred from the Memphis Conference. We make a few choice extracts:

"It rained on Saturday night, and the missionary meeting was held on Sunday night. Dr. Walker made one of his best and telling speeches, and Bishop Kavanagh followed with a wealth of argument, anecdote, humor and pathos which seldom fails to the lot of an audience to bear all at once. No hat collection was taken—nothing but subscriptions, life memberships and cotton-bales. Bastrop deserves the banner, and we willingly award it to her. Compared with previous anniversaries, eight hundred dollars was a liberal contribution to the cause of missions. Those of us who had never visited the Ouachita were agreeably disappointed in our estimate of this country. We were more than ever impressed with the vast resources of this part of the State, and with the adaptation and progress of Methodism.

"Of Bastrop and its citizens we can only speak in terms of commendation. But few sections of the State are as highly favored with so many generous and liberal-minded citizens—men whose hearts and purses are in the right place. At Bastrop we worshiped in a new church just from the builder's hands, and an earnest of the public spirit and religious sentiment of the community. The old church is standing, more commodious than some places of the size can boast; but they would have a larger and better, and so they built it, albeit the times were hard, and the rivers were low, and the crops were nearly a failure. The religious services were profitable. Several professed religion and twenty-seven were added to the church. A few minutes before the appointment were read out, on Monday night, the doors of the church were opened,

"THE BURDEN"

BY MARIANNE FAIRBANKHAM.
To every one on earth
God gives a burden to be carried
The load that lies between the cross and crown,
No lot is wholly free,
He giveth one to thee.
Some carry it aloft,
Open and visible to all eyes;
And all may see its form and weight and size,
Some hide it in their breast,
And deem it thus unguessed.
The burden is God's gift,
And it will make the bearer calm and strong,
Till, left it press too heavily and long,
He says, Cast it on me,
And it shall easy be.
And those who heed his voice,
And seek to give it back in truthful prayer,
Have quiet hearts that never can despair;
And hope lights up the way
Upon the darkest day.
Take thou thy burden thus
Into thy hands, and lay it at his feet,
And whether it be sorrow or defeat,
Or pain, or sin, or care,
Upon the darkest day.
It is the lonely load
That crushes out the life and light of heaven,
It comes with him, the soul restored, forgiven,
Since out through all the day,
Her joy, and God's high praise.

Foreknowledge of God.

BY REV. ANSON DOWLING.

The perfection of God's character involves the necessity of the attribute of foreknowledge. Without this power of foreseeing all events God would limit himself deeply involved in awful mistakes. He would look back over his administration of the affairs of the universe and see where he could have done better. His government would be a vast experiment. He would be incompetent to provide for moral beings, and the "Deum" of heaven would jar with a bass of deep discord. Destroy this shining trait in the divine character and the light of the universe grows dim and dark, and the angels of heaven and men on earth will break their allegiance to God, and treason, fraud and foul will usurp the thrones of chaos.
God himself appeals to his knowledge of events before they come to pass as proof to the people that he is God above and beyond all comparison with other gods. Hear him: "Produce your cause, saith the Lord: bring forth your strong reasons, saith the king of Jacob. Let them bring them forth and show us what shall happen: let them show the former things, what they be, that we may consider them; and show the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come. Show the things that are to come hereafter that we may know that ye are gods." Christ says: "I tell you before it come, that when it is come ye may believe that I am he." Thus God the Father and God the Son alike appeal to the power of foreseeing and foretelling events or things before they come to pass as the highest proof—the "strong reasons"—of their Godhood. This power of testimony, supporting the claims of divinity in the Father and Son, becomes, when confirmed by the fulfillment thereof, the strongest foundation of faith unto salvation.
Can God see an event before it comes to pass? It is so declared in the Bible. Can God see a contingent event before it comes to pass without foreseeing it? Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who would betray him. Did it become a necessity for these persons to reject Christ because he knew from the beginning that they would not believe? What says Bro. Sam White? Did it become a necessity for Judas to betray Christ because the deed was foreseen and foretold? What says Bro. Sam White? Was Judas performing his part of the wondrous plan of human salvation? Was his conduct ordained to be because foreseen? How amazingly strange that Judas should commit sin in obeying the unalterable decree of the almighty God! Yet after doing the deed he went to the Sanhedrim and hurled the money in at the feet of the judges and exclaimed: "I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood." How intensely that individual "I" felt the personality of that rash and dire deed! If God ordained and thereby caused the deed, why does Judas feel all the blame and curse thereof attaching to himself? Although foreseen and foretold, yet Judas was so free in the commission of the act that the burning sense of self-condemnation stung him into self-murder.

The knowledge of an event, natural or moral, can not be the cause thereof. What Elijah told King Ahab should befall him because of his conduct in obtaining the vineyard of Naboth came to pass so exactly and circumstantially that the record says so, except that part which was postponed because Ahab humbled himself before the Lord. If a part could be remitted, why not all, if his conduct had justified it? In the case of Jezebel, Jehu said: "This is the word of the Lord which he spake by his servant Elijah the Tishbite, saying, 'In the portion of Jezebel shall dogs eat the flesh of Jezebel.' The full penalty fell upon Jezebel because she continued in her bold and defiant wickedness before God.

When King Hezekiah was sick unto death the prophet Isaiah was sent to him and commanded to say, "Thus saith the Lord, Set thy house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live." The announcement of the certainty of death so deeply wrought upon the king that he once began to weep and pray. What was the result? Before the prophet had entirely left the residence of the king the word of the Lord came, saying to the prophet, "Go, and say to Hezekiah, thus saith the Lord: 'I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold, I will add unto thy days fifteen years.' The time had come for the king to die—as foreseen and foretold. By turning fully unto the Lord the event did not come to pass, and God added fifteen years to his days. In this case a natural event was prevented by moral conduct.

When Christ was come near the city of Jerusalem he beheld it, and wept over it, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes." The things which God had provided for the peace of Jerusalem were conditioned upon the free agency and hearty acceptance of its inhabitants. These things were in sight—could have been seen and received. Such was the deep earnestness upon the part of Christ to bestow them that the rejection thereof filled his eyes with tears. As his eyes filled with tears, their eyes filled with blindness, until all these proffered benefits were forever "hid from their eyes." That which was in sight never came into possession.

"By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Believing in God and praying unto him, Noah saw things which were not—he saw these things at least one hundred and twenty years before they came to pass. Among these things which were not as yet was the death of himself and family. Being warned, he went to work and saved himself, and family from death by drowning. He not only saved himself under Divine foreknowledge and direction, but he foreknew the world. Why? Because the world could have been warned and saved. Says Solomon,

"A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on and are punished."

In order to settle the question referred to the first Conference in Jerusalem, the presiding officer, himself an apostle, appealed to the foreknowledge of God as uttered by the Prophet Amos. The revised version gives this rendering: "After these things I will return * * * saith the Lord, who maketh these things known from the beginning of the world." This settled the matter in dispute. This shows the value of the word of God in settling the foundations of belief and practice. Whatever can not be proved out of the Holy Scriptures can not be received as a rule of life or doctrine, however much supported by human reason.

Church Extension.

The constitution of the Louisiana Board of Church Extension, Article I, orders that "This Board shall hold a meeting at each session of the Annual Conference, at which regular meeting provision shall be made for anniversary exercises." At the last session of our Annual Conference no such provision was made and no church extension anniversary exercises were held. The Centenary jubilee demanded special attention, and received it. And, as the Centenary services had in their "thank-offerings" included church extension as one of the three interests to which these collections were to be applied, and, as special Centenary exercises were to be held during the session of Conference, it was decided by the Board to omit the church extension anniversary. As to whether we acted wisely in this omission is very questionable.

The minutes of January, 1884, show, by the report of the treasurer, that during the year 1883 the first year of our existence, $1,279.55 was collected for church extension from the churches in the Louisiana Conference. The minutes of January, 1885, show that during the last year only $504.70 was collected for this purpose. Sixty per cent. less than the previous year! Even with the amounts raised for church extension embraced in the Centenary collections we fell far short of the amount raised in 1883. My object in writing this is to call the attention of the brethren to this deficiency. They know the remedy, and, I trust, will apply it.

Last year the Parent Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church authorized the expenditure of $1,500 for church extension in the State of Louisiana. Can we afford to do less in our own State?

That the preachers raise their full assessments for this important church enterprise is all the more necessary because at present we have but a few dollars in the treasury. It will be noticed in the printed minutes that our treasurer's report shows that there were $404.70 left in his hands at Conference; but it must not be forgotten that of the funds collected for church extension and put into the hands of the Conference Boards fifty per cent. is turned over to the General Board to be expended under its direction. The report is therefore incomplete, owing to the fact that the treasurer was called home from Conference before he had completed it.

In the report of the Parent Board for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1885, we find the Louisiana Conference credited with $265.50. This amount forwarded by our treasurer since the adjournment of Conference, being deducted from the balance reported in the hands of the treasurer, we have then only $139.20 left in the treasury. This amount was supplemented by the Centenary offerings for church extension turned over to our Board—less the amounts to which donors had given specific directions.

Since Conference our Board has added two churches to the amount of $300—making during the present year three churches helped within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference to which has been donated $400. Our funds are now almost entirely exhausted. We have almost no application for aid on hand, but no further means to carry on the good work.

Brother pastor, present this worthy cause at once to your people and try to secure at least the amount assessed your charge.

Sermons and Sayings by Rev. Sam P. Jones.

MR. EDITOR: I sent to the Publishing House at Nashville and got a copy of this book as soon as I knew it was through the press. I had read a good deal about our evangelist in the periodicals of the day, but I wanted something more authentic, authorized by himself and here I have it. I have read every sentence in the book, and just such a book I never read before in my life. It kept me laughing and crying alternately until I got through. I would be reading soberly along when an unexpected explosion of wit or sarcasm would slit through the mind and compel a convulsive fit of laughter. Well, laughing is a very wholesome exercise if a man has something worth laughing about. Sometimes I would scarcely get back to the center of gravity after a paroxysm of laughter before here would come a number of tender points that would evoke a profusion of tears so that I would have to raise my specs and wipe them away before I could read the next sentence. I have enjoyed the reading of this book in a superlative degree. I am glad to see in the title page that this is styled the "First Series." Yes, let us have more of the same sort. Carefully edited and published, like the "Pilgrim's Progress," they will be read with pleasure and profit for centuries to come. You ask what I think of our evangelist. I will tell you. In the first place he started with a well-marked conversion. To use an expression of his own when he obtained a knowledge of sins forgiven "it broke out all over him like the measles." He was made a new creature in Christ Jesus. A true evangelical conversion is a far better qualification for a man to start with in preaching the gospel than all the theological trumpery in the world without it. He soon heard the call of the Master, "Go thou and preach the gospel." Being a chosen vessel of the Lord, he obeyed the heavenly mandate and soon threw himself into his God-appointed work, the extraordinary results of which are now before the country. I do not know that I ought to say that he is a man of extraordinary faith; such faith as few can have. He only seems to have the sort of faith Paul had when he said: "The gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," and he feels that he has that same gospel with all its inherent power which, if properly and faithfully preached, will produce similar effects. But what of his style and manner of preaching? I think it is very much like the style and manner of the Old Testament prophets and New Testament preachers. They never seem to trammel themselves with texts, formal introductions or systematic perorations, but just pitched right into the subject of their message from God and delivered it "without fear or favor" in bold and appropriate language to the king on his throne and peasant in his cottage. They expressed sin in all its forms and degrees; they did no covering up or white-washing for fear of hurting somebody's feelings, but called things by their appropriate names. This is Bro. Jones' course. He calls a drunkard a drunkard; a gambler a gambler, and so of every other sin, and this he does so plainly as to make all who are guilty feel he means me. He does not hesitate to show sinners of every grade the awful doom of the finally impenitent, but he is ever ready to offer the great atonement to every one who feels a desire to turn and live.

My main object in writing this article is to call the attention of all your readers to the publication of his "Sermons and Sayings." I think all who can, especially all our preachers, both itinerant and local, ought to procure a copy and study it well. The work of God under this extraordinary evangelist is unusually extensive and permanent in every gradation of society. Tell your pastor to get you a copy right away. One edition in good print, but plain binding, without the likeness of the author, is only fifty cents; the other edition, in better binding, with an excellent likeness of the evangelist, is one dollar.

J. G. JONES.

HAZLEBUNT, Mississippi.

Change of Name.

BY REV. D. F. WHITE.

Doubtless the commission to the church of God is "Go ye into all the world," etc.; and, while "the world is my parish" is true, still no one church organization or individual person has ever preached the gospel to every creature. The Methodist Episcopal Church—South, (for this is its proper arrangement) does not by this agenda intimate thereby either directly or indirectly that it does not intend (as all other Christian organizations) to preach the gospel as far as providential means and opportunities are given. Now the line of separation agreed upon between the separating church did limit the Church, South, in its aggressions northward beyond that line in the United States, but not more so than it limited the Methodist Episcopal Church in its aggressions southward of that line. We had the independence and courage to give the locality of our part while our brethren North did not. The elimination of "South" as an affix will not change our locality nor can it interfere with our aggressiveness East, West, North or South to retain it. The sister Methodist (which we love) violated the contract of division of field, rendering it null and void, so that we are not all intruders when in God's providence we go into the regions beyond the line. Now if the line had been observed, then recognizing the separation as providential and all its conditions, we would have felt that no providential door opened to us north of that line and the Methodist Episcopal Church should have felt that no providential door opened to them south of that line. The two sisters would have lovingly cultivated each her especial field in this great country and searched for means and providential openings in other lands. There is, however, a better way in our humble opinion, i. e., Methodism in the United States an unit; then a trinity in the unity, not of powers to abrogate doctrine or change creed, but powers to adopt modes and means by which these doctrines may be best promulgated in their several fields with an ecumenical, decennial Conference to decide as to whether these means be in keeping with the letter and spirit of the doctrines. Let their unity be in all mission work, and probably it would be well to have our publishing enterprises unified. Our representation in our General Conferences ought to be reduced say to one in fifty, then these very important bodies would not be so unwieldy in their operations or so burdensome to the communities in which they are held. I think there is a growing disposition in both branches of Methodism for a closer union in fact as well as in spirit.

NEW ORLEANS, Louisiana.

Woodville District, Mississippi Conference.

The Woodville District Conference was held in Greensburg, August 13-16, 1885. Rev. D. A. Little, presiding elder of the district, presided. All the pastors were present except one or two, who were kept away by family affliction and sickness. About half of the lay delegates were in attendance. Dr. C. B. Galloway, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and Rev. D. P. Bradford, of Port Gibson, attended as visitors. The spiritual condition of the district was reported as generally hopeful, the influences backward and the Sunday-schools numerous and tolerably well sustained. The religious exercises during the session of the Conference were of marked interest. Preaching, prayer, exhortation and song were not without visible fruits. Sinners were convicted, God's people revived, and, with faces aglow with his love, shouted his praises in good old Methodist style. Rev. T. A. S. Adams, president of Centenary College, and Rev. T. W. Brown, president of Woodville Female Seminary, addressed the Conference, and the claims of their respective institutions were ably presented by these brethren. Dr. C. B. Galloway made an earnest and forcible appeal for a more extended circulation of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Jackson, La., was unanimously selected as the place for the next session of the District Conference. The delegates elected to the Annual Conference are as follows: H. C. Newsom, N. J. Roberts, G. D. Anders and P. A. Richardson. Alternates: Dr. W. F. Roberts, G. T. McGehee, F. D. Brame and W. M. James.

JACKSON, AUG. 20, 1885.

Jackson District Conference.

The session of the Jackson District Conference was held at Sonie Chapel, Camden circuit, and continued three days. Ten out of thirteen pastoral charges were well represented. Three preachers were absent. The spiritual condition of the district is hopeful, and the pastors are praying for a revival. Prominence was given to religious services, and the preaching was in the demonstration of the spirit. This Sunday-school work, on the whole, is increasing. Benton was unanimously selected as the place for holding the next District Conference. George Harvey, W. L. Nugent, H. W. Bushman and E. C. Postell were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Alternates: J. L. Vincent, G. W. Galloway. A committee was appointed to purchase a district parsonage for the Jackson district. I. W. Cooper, A. G. Moore, R. G. Kemp, T. L. Mellen and W. L. King were appointed on the committee. Dr. T. A. S. Adams, president of Centenary College, was present, and favorably represented Centenary College. The venerable Rev. G. T. Wade, of the North Mississippi Conference, was also present. The Conference was delightfully entertained. The Presbyterians and Baptists vied with the Methodists in hospitality and Christian courtesy.

Church Extension Notice.

Brethren of North Mississippi Conference, please take up your collections as soon as possible, and forward the money to the treasurer of our Conference Board. Dr. Morton writes that he has immediate use for a considerable sum, and will be very much embarrassed if he does not get it soon. Besides, we have a pressing need for money in our own Conference. Buildings are needed at several points which are delayed for the want of a little assistance from the Board. It is an important interest and has already done much in our own bounds in building churches which could not have been built without assistance.

If you can raise as much as five dollars, send it forward.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The

stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, on Thursday, August 6, 1885, Henry Dickinson, Esq., in the chair. The religious services were conducted by Rev. W. W. Atterbury. Among the matters passed in review by the Board were letters of thanks from the Bible Society of France, the Waldensian Committee of Evangelization and the German mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church; the annual letter of the Eastern Turkey mission, by Rev. R. M. Cole, of Erzurum; letters from Rev. E. M. Bliss, announcing his safe return from a three month's tour; from Mr. C. T. O. King, of Monrovia, Rev. F. W. Damon, of Honolulu, and from numerous other correspondents in foreign lands. Numerous grants of books were made for benevolent distribution in this and in other lands, the aggregate value of which was about $1,650.

One society was recognized as auxiliary in Nebraska. The total receipts for July were $55,962.53. The total issues of the Scriptures from the Bible House during the same month were 56,290 volumes.

READING THE APPOINTMENTS.

BY REV. C. J. MOORE.

I was sitting in a wing-gallery, close beside the altar rail. When the Bishop came in softly, with a face serene, but pale. And a silence indescribably pathetic in its power. Such as might have reigned in heaven through that "space of half an hour." Heated on the whole assembly as the Bishop rose and said: "All the business being finished, the appointments will be read."

Not as one who handles lightly merchandise of little value. But as dealing with the richest, most important things of earth. In the fellowship of Jesus, with the fallings of a man. The good Bishop asked forbearance—he had done his best to plan. For the glory of his Master, trusting him to guide his pen. Without prejudice or favor; and the preachers cried, "Amen!"

"Blessed Mountains—Heavenly Sings"—happy people, heavy grief. On the dauntless of the gospel through the changing year to feast; Not a church trial ever vexed them, all their preachers stay three years. And depart amidst a tempest of the purest kind of tears.

"Troubled Waters—Nathan's Peaceful"—how that saintly face grew red! How the tears streamed through his fingers as he held his swimming head! But his wife stooped down and whispered—what sweet message did she bear? For he turned with face transfigured as upon some mount of prayer. Swift as thought in highest action, sorrow passed and gladness came. At some wondrous strain of music breaking forth from Jesus' name.

"Holy Rapture," said the Bishop, "I have left to be supplied. And I thought—You couldn't fill it, Mr. Bishop, if you tried. For an angel duly transferred to this Conference below. Wouldn't know one-half the wonders that those blessed people know. They would note some strain of discord though he sang as heaven sings. And discover some shortcomings in the feathers of his wings."

"Grand Edgemoor—James Laggard." Blessed be the Lord! thought I. They have put that Bro. Laggard where he has to work of old. For the church at Grand Edgemoor, with its energy and prayer. Will transform him to a hero or just drive him to despair. If his trumpet lacks the vigor of the gospel's charming sound. They will start a his revival, and forget that he's around.

"Union Furnace—Solon Trimmer"—what a Bishop that must be! They have got the kind of preacher that will suit them to a T. Metho-Congo-Baptist—Unit—in one nature, lithe and bland. Fire or water, hell or heaven, always ready on demand.

"Consecration—Jacob Faithful"—hand in hand the two will go. Through the years before them bringing heavenly life to earth below. "Greenland Corners—Peter Wholesome"—but he lost his self-control. Battered up his coat as if he felt a cold wind strike his soul. Saw the dreary path before him, drew a deep breath, knelt his brow. Then concluded to be faithful to his ordination vows.

In the front pews sat the fathers, hair as white as driven snow. As the Bishop read the appointments they had filed long years ago. Tender memories rushed upon them, life revived in heart and brain. Till it seemed that they could travel their old circuits o'er again.

"Happy Haven—Joseph Restful"—how the joy shone in his face. At the thought of being pastor for three years in such a place! "Hard as Granite—Ephraim Smasher"—there the stewards sat in row. And they didn't want that Smasher, and he didn't want to go.

"Drowsy Hollow—Israel Wakim"—he is sent to sow and reap. Where the congregations gather in the interests of sleep. As they all on Sabbath morning in their softly cushioned pews. They begin to make arrangements for their regular weekly snooze. Through the prayer a dimness gathers over every mortal eye. Through the reading of the Scriptures they begin to droop and sigh. In the hymn before the sermon, with its music grand and sweet. They put forth one mighty effort to be seen upon their feet. Then avoid the sermon, throbbing with the gospel's sweetest sound. They sink down in deepest slumber and are nodding all around.

But I guess that Bro. Wakim, on the first bright Sabbath day. When he preaches to that people, and is heard a mile away. Will defy both saint and sinner on a breast to lay a chin. Till he strikes the strain of "lastly," and I'll warrant him to win. For by all who ever heard him it is confidently said. If 'twere possible to mortal, he would wake the very dead.

There's a mist came o'er my vision as the Bishop still read on. And the veil that hides the future for a moment was withdrawn. For I saw the world's Redeemer far above the Bishop stand. On his head a crown of glory, and a long roll in his hand. Round his throne a countless number of the ransomed, listening, praising. He was stationing his preachers in the city of the living.

Some whose names were most familiar, known and revered by all. Went down to the smaller mansions back against the city wall. One who took the poorest churches miles away from crowds and cars. Went up to a throne of glory with a crown ablaze with stars.

How the angels sang to greet him! how the Master cried, "Well done!" While the preacher blushed and wondered where he had such glory won. Some whose speech on earth was simple, with no arguments but tears. Nothing novel in their sermons for fastidious, riching ears. Coldly welcomed by the churches, counted burdensome by all. Went up to the royal mansions and were neighbors to St. Paul.

Soon the Master called a woman, only known here in the strife. By her quiet, gentle nature, though a famous preacher's wife. Praised and blessed her for the harvest she had garnered in the sky.

But she meekly turned, and answered, "Twas my husband, Lord, not I."

"Yes," the Master said, "his talents were as stars that glow and shine? But thy faith gave them their virtue, and the glory, child, is thine!"

Then a lame girl—I had known her—heard her name called with surprise. There was trembling in her bosom, there was wonder in her eyes.

"I was nothing but a cripple; gleaned in no wide field, my King; Only an silent sufferer 'neath the shadow of thy wing!"

"Thou hast been a mighty preacher, and the hearts of many stirred To devotion by thy patience without uttering a word."

Said the Master, and the maiden to his side with wonder pressed—

Christ was stationing his preachers in the city of the living. And the harp-strings of the angels linked their names to sweetest praise. Whom the world had passed unnoticed in the blindness of its ways.

I was still intently gazing on the scene beyond the stars. When I saw the Conference leaving, and I started for the cars.

As a sufficient and suggestive exposition, we reproduce this week, from the Sunday-School Magazine, President J. H. Carlisle's "Practical Application of the Lesson."

Elijah seems to serve as a strange connecting link between heaven and earth through several memorable years of Jewish history. He held no office conferred by man. He had no family ties. He had no fixed residence. A lonely man—not cheerful, perhaps, as we would say, yet not an unhappy man—he lived much in solitude. He communed much with his own heart, and with his Maker and Lord, while he watched the dreadful current of daily history as it rushed by. As a patriot, he had a heavy burden on his heart always. As a prophet, he had, we may well suppose, much of that mourning and hungering and thirsting to which a great blessing is promised. In every age a great deal of true worth and grandeur of spirit may be found apart from the crowds and thoroughfares. We love to think that to-day in our own greatly favored land there are true patriots and sincere Christians whose names are not found in the daily papers. Their aspirations and prayers for Church and State are known only to him who reads the heart.

Elijah was a fit messenger held in reserve for the great occasions which called for a special message from Jehovah to Israel. The Lord sent "the angel," and "the angel" sent Elijah to the messengers of Ahaziah. They may be any number of links between the first great cause and effect. It is useless, and even foolish, to ask why the Lord did not appear at once to the messengers or to Elijah rather than to the angel, or why the angel did not appear in person to the messengers. It is equally unwise to lay down our positive maxims about miracles, or to say very positively when they ought to be granted, or especially to make a logical argument to prove that miracles are in the very nature of things impossible.

There is something startling in the last public appearance of Elijah. Captains and their fearless men of war fell dead before him. Idolatrous and blasphemous Israel must know that he is a holy and a protected man. If nothing less will teach this truth, the swift lightnings from heaven will leap forth to proclaim it. The third captain came up humbly and prayerfully to the fatal spot, and the terrible prophet "arose and went down, with him unto the king."

There was a quiet lull between this scene and the prophet's triumphant ascension. Instructions seem to have been given not only to Elijah, but to his companion, Elisha, as well as to the schools of the prophets, that the hour of his departure was at hand. At Gilgal, Bethel and Jericho there were schools of the prophets, and to these, rather than to the palaces of kings or to the shops of trade, the venerable prophet turns his steps. Perhaps more was said and done by Elijah on his last visit to these schools than is given us in the brief record. It was impossible for him to give the young students his experience, his retrospect or his outlook, his backward or his forward glance at earth and heaven; but he could give them some "mystical lore," such as the sunset of a wonderful life and the approaching sunrise of an immortal life opened up to him. There is something striking in the combination—youth sons of the prophets and the greatest of the old prophets. It is sometimes educating for a group of young men to see an old man. "Seen, though silent," he gives counsel. Might not some good he done if our retiring old ministers would give short, fatherly counsels to the young in our modern schools of the prophets? The ripe, full appeal of John the aged, "Little children, love one another," has come down through the ages. There is much of hope and fear, of desire and dread, in our schools, seminaries and colleges. Whether able to visit them personally or not, let every Christian patriot remember them in their prayers and benefactions. "Tis not a work of small import" that rests on those in charge of the young all around us.

The brief colloquy between the old Elijah and the young Elisha, repeated verbally at each school, is striking. There must have been a general expectation all through the sacred prophetic circles that something unusual was to happen. The strange, wandering old prophet was to be honored with a strange departure. He was not to see death! One of the very few who were exempt from death, he was to leave the earth openly in the eyes of men. His upward departure was to be a public spectacle. No wonder, as he came near the spot and the moment, that even the conversation of the earthen and loyal Elisha was becoming turgid to Elijah. "Yea, I know it. Hold ye your peace." There are times when silence is golden. Much of the prattle and gossip in and about a death-chamber must sound very childish to the "illuminated dying estimator."

Jordan before this had stopped its waters in recognition of some great power controlling its course. No royal robe of earthly monarch would have had the effect which the prophet's plain mantle had. The weary old pilgrim is now very near the promised land, and he is allowed to go over dry-shod. His feet now stand on his native hills of the region beyond Jordan. No doubt all nature around him was silent. The hills and clouds were as quiet as usual. The law of gravity held Elijah and Elisha alike down to the soil they were treading. It has been often remarked how solemn is the abort moment of silence just before any great display of power. Yet most probably there was nothing to mark the last few steps that Elijah took, the last few words he spoke, or the last few glances he threw around and above. "As they still went on and talked." What were his last words? How anxiously we long for a report of this conversational! There is a solemn emphasis attending the last words spoken by a friend. Elijah was to know no deathbed agonies or raptures. He passed through no special ecstatic experiences. He had no dying scene. He began, perhaps, a sentence on earth for the ear of Elisha, and finished it in the presence of the angels. "Parted them both asunder." So does the hand of death, either in a moment or by slow decline, part asunder those walking together on earth. Two were walking up the hill; one was taken and the other left. No angel was visible to others in the cloud or the whirlwind. When sent to take Elijah home a whirlwind was as an angel, and a fiery cloud was but the minister of Jehovah. Elisha called, but Elijah did not answer. Elijah left no dying message. He had spoken enough by his words, his acts and his life. How undramatic, how unselfish, how reticent, how commonplace, sometimes the death of a Christian may be! A modern cyclone may be the agent to bear away from earth some Christian of to-day.

"My father, my father! the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!" This touching exclamation has often since then burst from the lips of those who saw some prophet, or father in Israel, or mighty man, taken away. Elijah's mantle fell on Elisha. This striking little incident the world will never let die. It is often quoted on the lips of men in sacred and secular conversation. Elisha coveted a large share—two-thirds, perhaps—of his great teacher's spirit. The mantle which the unloathed prophet no longer needed was the symbol of this. How natural the wish, even now, that the good influence of the dead may still enliven the church below in the person of some of the living! The influence and power of an ascending Elijah, or of the departed Bishop Pierce, do not die. They still remain somewhere to bless some fields of service. But even beyond this, we naturally long for this influence to abide with us here. We do not wish to think of our whole Southern Methodist Church, for example, to be so much poorer and weaker by all the gathered wealth, natural and acquired, that made up George F. Pierce.

Elisha "saw him no more." And yet centuries after James, John and Peter saw him on a neighboring hill and heard him talk with Moses, and with a greater than Moses and Elisha.

Thus ended the grand career of the greatest of the prophets since Moses. Yet his work remained; though he had entered on his glory, for from his life dates that reaction which kindled the zeal of his brethren in succeeding generations, and prepared the way for him in whom all prophecy was fulfilled.

The Work God Gives Us, and Our Willingness to Do It.

BY MISS M. D. MOORE.

(Read before the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, at Ainsworth, Ia.)

God has given us, each and everyone, something to do; some one or more talents to use to his honor and glory, or leave in idleness to rust. But if thus left, what fearful witness will be against us on the last great day! To each one God has given his or her work, and blessings or curses follow in accordance with the manner in which that work is done. Adam and Eve were put in the garden to dress and take care of it, and to abstain from eating the fruit of one tree, and how was their work done? So that a curse has ever since rested on the earth. Had there been an anxious desire to do just as God bade them, sin would never have stained the earth.

Lot's wife had her work before her, but did it in such a way that her name has been handed down through the ages as one who disobeyed God. King Saul knew what the Lord would have him do; yet he was unwilling to obey, and set up his covetous judgment in opposition to God's commands, and by so doing lost his kingdom and his life. Nor were his children permitted to stand in his place.

In Jonah we find an example of one shirking the work given him to do. (And that is just what a great many who call themselves God's children are doing at the present time.) But God was very merciful to Jonah, and brought him back to the path of obedience. And still we see him lacking in faith and trust in God as to the results. God had sent him as a missionary to preach his word to the Ninevites, and when they believed his preaching and repented, so that the Lord delayed the threatened scourge, Jonah became angry. He seemed to lose sight of the fact that God had spared him when he was willfully disobedient; seemed to forget that God had heard his prayer and brought him up, as it were, from the depths of the grave and given him a fresh opportunity to do the work appointed him. How many of us are Jonahs, fleeing from the work God gives us!

How many of us are saying, like Saul of Tarsus, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do," and then do willingly, rejoicingly, the work he has given us? Some make a mistake in looking over and beyond their real work, and want to do something greater—like Naaman, the leper, who was not satisfied with the simple bathing in the river Jordan. Like Naaman, we must do as God bids us if we would receive the blessing.

I received a letter from a friend who was lying on a bed of suffering, and had been for some years; but she could write, and she loved Jesus. For awhile she was impatient to be gone. She felt that she was a burden; thought it would be better for her family were they relieved of the burden. I wrote back that she was wrong; that she ought to be willing to live as long as the Lord wanted her to, for as long as she lived he had something for her to do. It might be only to show patience and resignation to his will; that she was not altogether useless, for she could help me in my work by praying for me—praying that I might be the means of some good. Three years have passed. She still lives, enduring constant suffering; yet I can sit at her feet and of her learn lessons in patience, resignation, faith and mission work. A few weeks ago I discovered that she had no writing material. A few of us made up a package of paper and envelopes and sent it to her. Her reply showed that one morning she was very desirous of writing, hoping thereby to benefit some weary or burdened one; but she had no material and no money to buy, so she just "cast the burden on the Lord," and left it all with him, and that afternoon the package was forwarded to her address was put in her hands. Oh, how her heart overflowed with gratitude to God! Long after all others were asleep tears were rolling down her cheeks—tears of gratitude and love. But there are other lessons we should learn from her. She calls herself "a prisoner of the Lord" and "God's pensioner," and says:

"Mine is the calm which comes only at his bidding. 'Peace be still!'—the patience given with the command, 'Be still and know that I am God!' My shortcomings and inability to work for the Master often grieve me; yet 'my times are in his hands,' and he gives strength for the work he sends me, for I can not go out into his vineyard to labor. Then, what is it if I only 'stand and wait,' if by this means I serve him best?"

Are we, my dear sisters, all ready to do the work God sends us? Are we willing to do anything that "serves him best," or are we "standing all the day idle" because we can not do some great thing? Because we can not go out into "the field" as missionaries, are we neglecting "the little things" we could do to help support and encourage those who can go?

I will make one more extract from "Invalid's" letter, who says: "I have a 'mission box' in which I keep any little article that I can make of scraps—'odds and ends'—which I either sell and give the money to missions, home or foreign, or else give the article, if it is something useful, to any needy ones I hear of who have nothing of the kind. Sometimes it is a little dress—only a tiny garment, as my scraps are always small. I started with one spoon of thread, with which I made crochets, some scraps—not a nickel in cash."

Are we, according to our ability, doing as much for the cause of missions as this poor "Invalid," who for eight years has lain on a bed of suffering? Are we looking around us for opportunities to serve the Master? To give the gospel to those who know not God? Are we so living and working that the Master can say of each one of us, "She hath done what she could"? Or are we "shirking" our work? How many of our friends know by our conversation that we love Jesus? How many of those who have passed away, at whose funerals you have worn your blackest dress, would, if they could return for a moment, point their finger at you, and say, "You never told me of Jesus!" O, my dear sisters, the time is short in which we can work for Jesus! Let us do all we can to lead souls to the Savior, and to aid those who are making it their life-work.

From the Work.

PROVIDENCE CIRCUIT, MISS.

It will be remembered that our church at Georgetown, this circuit, was destroyed by a tornado the first Sabbath in April, 1883. On the third Sabbath in May, 1883, we dedicated a beautiful house of worship erected on the same spot by the people of Georgetown with some help from abroad. Rev. J. A. B. Jones, our presiding elder, and Rev. J. L. Forsythe, were present, participating with the pastor in the service. Our people at this point have reason to be thankful. May they dedicate themselves anew to the service of God and labor together to build a spiritual temple acceptable to God through Jesus Christ! For 'ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices.' This is the more important of the two.

Our camp meeting at Providence closed on July 30. About forty families tented on the ground. We had ten ministers, including the pastor: Rev. J. A. B. Jones, our presiding elder, his venerable father, Rev. J. G. Jones; Rev. J. W. Harmon, of Summit circuit; Rev. T. B. Holloman, of Yazoo City; Rev. H. D. Howell, of Hazlehurst; Rev. J. T. Nicholson, of McComb City; Rev. J. N. Tucker, of Terry circuit; Rev. J. L. Forsythe, of Scotland circuit; and Rev. W. W. Cammack, of Lake circuit. These brethren labored together in harmony and zeal, and God owned and blessed their labors. The best of order prevailed without the aid of officers of the law. The singing was splendid, the preaching was plain, practical, pointed, earnest and powerful. There were signal displays of Divine power in the large congregation from first to last. We can not tell just how many were converted, but the fruits of the meeting are by no means inconsiderable. Many of the members of the church, old and young, were greatly blessed.

We can safely report the Providence circuit in a good condition. We thank God and take courage. God is blessing his people spiritually and temporally. The health of the country is good, crops are fine, and on the whole we have reason to be happy in the service of him who doeth all things well.

VOSSBURG AND HEIDELBERG, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Through the liberality and persevering zeal of Bros. W. I. Heidelberg and W. W. Abney the old church known as Philadelphia, one mile from Heidelberg, was taken down and rebuilt as a new church on an eligible lot near what will probably be, in the near future, the center of the town. It is now a beautiful structure and an ornament to the place. It has a good bell, an excellent organ and will soon be supplied with a nice pulpit Bible and hymn books. A meeting was commenced there last Friday night and closed on Wednesday night, resulting in twenty-three accessions to the church—eight by letter and fifteen on profession. Others are likely to join soon. Among those joining on profession were a number of boys. For their special benefit a meeting was held one evening at which six, ranging from eleven to about eighteen years of age, took up the cross and led in prayer. Not one called on refused to pray. They expect to keep up a boys' prayer meeting in the future. The outlook at Heidelberg is decidedly encouraging. Bro. N. B. Harmon, from Paulding circuit, was with me from Monday to the close of the meeting. His valuable services in the pulpit and on the altar will be long remembered by pastor and people.

L. OARLEY.

MARION CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We closed a protracted meeting at Pleasant Hill, on the Marion circuit, on July 29, 1885, with signal success. The meeting continued five days with increased interest every day until God bowed the gentle heavens in a gospel-sweeping shower of his divine grace upon the people throughout the entire community. The church was shaken from center to circumference. I do not suppose that there was a Christian man or woman who attended the service that did not feel the power and influence of God's love upon his or her heart. We had a good time. God met with us and gave to the people their sons and daughters to go with them to the kingdom. This revival resulted in twenty-two conversions and fifteen accessions to the Methodist Church.

ANNING, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Some of your readers, as well as yourself, will doubtless be glad to learn that the good Lord has given us another good meeting at Mt. Olivet. We closed an eight days' meeting here on Sunday, the second instant, resulting in several conversions, seventeen accessions, a general toning up of the membership and an impression for good upon the community. After giving all the glory to the good Lord I wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to our young brother, M. A. Bell, of Silver City, and our old standbys, Revs. G. W. Alexander and R. S. Gale, who labored faithfully, earnestly and effectively through the meeting. Bro. Bell did most of the preaching, greatly to the delight and edification of many old and young friends of his childhood. He is one of the six itinerants that Mt. Olivet and Wesley Chapel—only seven miles apart—have given to the church in twelve years, viz.: D. C. Langford, T. B. Holloman, C. A. Powell, M. A. Bell, H. S. Schabrough, of the Mississippi Conference, and Bro. Hutton, of Colorado. Besides these, two local preachers have been made, viz.: R. S. Gale and F. M. Keene, who expect to enter the ranks soon. Did you or your readers ever think of the fact that five per cent. of the present Mississippi Conference sprang from two churches now in one pastoral charge and only seven miles apart? Would you not call this maternal vigor?

We commence another meeting next Sabbath at Shiloh, and one at Wesley the third Sabbath. Can you not come up and help us? You have many readers up here and should have many more. More anon. P. H. HOWARD.

RICHLAND CIRCUIT, LA.

MR. EDITOR: This is my second year on this work. I do not write just to see my name in the paper of the church, but to let you know that I am a part of the whole that forms the great body known as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. My lot for the last two years has been by the providence of God thrown with as clever and whole-souled people as there is in our Conference, and many of them as spiritual. They have been oppressed by overflows and gnats for a series of years until their money was well nigh gone and spirits crushed. Notwithstanding they have stood by the preacher, and up to date we have been provided for, and I believe we shall be as long as it is written, "I will be with thee."

We are organizing throughout the work the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and hope to be able to report Richland parish in the fall among the number of prohibition parishes. We had Sister Goodale with us to give us the impetus which I hope will not stop as long as the whips of the curse is in our land. Some of our ladies have imbibed her spirit, and that you know means something.

Crops are fine; cotton in some places is needing rain; corn is abundant, and according to one of our Alabama preachers there will be plenty of marrying this fall, and that you know pleases the preachers. Health is good up to date, but little sickness. I hope the time is not far distant when people will learn that the swamp country is healthier than the hills.

We have been having some of the revival kindlings of 1885 on this work. Up to date we have had twenty-seven accessions to the church, and some bright conversions as I ever saw. I wish to say that here in the swamp I have heard the shout of new born souls. The young converted are praying in public; several families already have been erected and enemies are made friends. One weekly prayer meeting has been organized and one large Sabbath-school, all well attended. Allow me, before closing, to give you one illustration showing the thoroughness of some of the work:

One gentleman, a member of the Roman Church, came to the altar several times an earnest seeker, but failed to find pardon. He had resolved to give it up; but, coming back to church that night and hearing the preacher say, that repentance meant restitution also, he came forward, setting in his heart and mind a debt, that he had fraudulently wronged a man belonging to the Roman Church. God, for Christ's sake, forgave his sins, and next morning, true to his vow, he went to the man's house, notwithstanding he was an avowed enemy to him, and gave him his horse to settle the debt he owed him. The man, though a bigoted Roman Catholic, was forced to confess he had now confidence in his religion. Is it too much to say we love our people? May the Lord continue to pour out his spirit? Remember us at a throne of grace.

C. T. MUNIOLLANO.

AUGUST 13, 1885.

CYPRUS CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: Being invited by Bro. Cassidy, my guardian friend before he was ever a member of the church, I attended his camp meeting at Cypress Spring, in DeSoto parish, beginning on the seventh instant. I found him full of zeal and good works and much beloved by the people he serves, and if he could conduct a Conference as well as he does a camp meeting, he would make a Bishop. But he had a splendid set of ministerial brethren to preach for him to a clever set of people who they did it in a whole-souled way. Bros. Alexander, Harp, Randall, Wimberly, Dr. Grace, president of Mansfield College, and that blessed old father in Israel, Bro. Pipes, all preached. And although the attendance was not as large as it has been before, yet a pleasant state of feeling prevailed among the membership, and when I left on Monday there had been one or more conversions and four or five accessions to the church.

I was delighted to find that Bro. Harp and Alexander, whom we used to love so much to hear preach down here long ago, still preach with the same and even apparently with more zeal and unflinching and spiritual power. Sister Fullerton made an excellent missionary address Sunday afternoon which was listened to with marked attention. D. W. POSTER.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1885.

The cholera epidemic in Spain and France is spreading and becoming more fatal. The death-rate has increased and the stamped in neighboring sections is alarming. It is all-important for national and state authorities to adopt the most stringent precautionary measures, or the scourge will sweep over our country.

Our excellent confrere of the Alabama Advocate thinks our characterization of Dr. E. M. Wood's article, on "Morals in the South," was put "too mildly," and then proceeds to pound him with words more vigorous than elegant. He charges him with having kept company with "dirty old scalawags and unwashed carpet-baggers," and such a man as "could hardly be expected to tell the truth." We deprecate passionate statements on either side. A plain, firm assertion of fact is all that is necessary. Let others indulge in rhetorical hard names; but with the Master's boldness we must preserve the mind that was in Christ. Dr. Wood is better answered by calm statement than by returning railing for railing.

The Woodville District Conference, in recent session at Greensburg, La., passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That we hereby express a desire that the members of the Cotton Exposition, soon to open in New Orleans, shall close their gates on the Lord's day.

This is a timely action, and we hope will be respectfully heeded. Last year all the Christian Churches of the land memorialized the Board of Management in like manner and for the same purpose, but without avail. In defiance of the moral sentiment of the country, and in the face of statutory laws in every State in the Union except one, the gates were thrown open on the Sabbath and the public invited to its shameful desecration. This year we hope and believe better counsels will prevail. The experiment of last winter, even as a business proposition, suggests a different policy to the new management.

Senator Coke, of Texas, is reported in the press dispatches to have publicly declared himself an anti-prohibitionist, and announced his purpose to resist the spirit of temperance reform by legal methods. The senator is an able and eloquent man. On the floor of the upper chamber at Washington he stands the peer of the greatest. But if any Methodist preacher in the State of Texas is not more than a match for the statesman on this issue, he ought to be unfrocked and sent to a school of the prophets. There is no argument on the other side—only a drink. The senator has assumed this position as a politician, and not on his convictions as a citizen. He fears the results of the agitation on his party, and in his fright has spoken much foolishness. If the party will stay its hands, prohibitionists will do it no harm, but much good. But if it is dominated by liquor—if political "slates" are fixed up in bar rooms or dictated by the rum power—it had as well go into liquidation. The senator has made a mistake for which he will have to repent.

Spiritual maternity is the test of a church's life. If she is not bearing children for the Lord Jesus Christ, her barrenness will soon become a reproach. Children are her only crown of glory. An unfruitful church is in an abnormal, dangerous condition—either fatally diseased or "well stricken in years." On our second page this week will be found a letter from Rev. P. Howard that deserves special mention. He states the interesting fact that two congregations on one circuit have given to the church in twelve years six itinerant and two local preachers. A church that raises prophets for the Lord is specially honored. There must be a high and healthy spirituality in the heart of the "Lamb's wife" when her sons are counted worthy to minister at God's holy altars. And this leads to the inquiry, How many churches have we that have never produced a preacher?—that have never answered affirmatively the question, "Are there any applications for license to preach or exhort?" An investigation of the question may send some congregations to prayer that their reproach may be removed. The yearning motherhood of Zion needs development. Just now the Lord of the harvest is calling for laborers.

Reflections at a Political Convention.

Returning homeward from Meridian, we were compelled to spend some hours in Jackson last Thursday. The little city was crowded with people attending the Democratic State Convention. Candidates and their friends were as busy and restless as a hive of bees. Being aloof from party politics, but desiring the nomination of good men for the several State offices, we looked on with a disinterested interest—disinterested so far as selfish aims were concerned, but interested in the selection of the best and worthiest representatives. In civil as well as ecclesiastical affairs the old maxim is true—"Like priest, like people." The country is typified by its public officers. In a government like ours, constructed, as Mr. Lincoln said, "of the people, for the people and by the people," its moral tone and integrity are illustrated in its official representatives. It is well, therefore, for communities and commonwealths to elevate only those to places of public trust who have capacity and unimpeachable integrity.

The large number of candidates for each office we do not regard with disfavor. It does not necessarily indicate, as we heard remarked, a selfish greed for a coveted salary. Men aspire to official positions in which pecuniary reward is a minor consideration. Such aspirations are wholesome in republican governments. They make the contests for place so sharp that selection depends largely upon exceptional merit. Every act of a public servant is scrutinized, his private walk is studied and his life is under a perpetual, sleepless espionage. If incompetent or unworthy, the fact will transpire and be wielded in the interest of an aspiring competitor. An ambition to honorably represent a great commonwealth in a high position is most laudable. It is much moralized upon and decried against; but it is the life-blood of the republic. Nor have we ever known one of these political homilists to refuse a call to serve "the dear people," nor to think the country unsafe in his hands. Other aspirations should be encouraged; but this is not to be despised.

The methods often employed in the attainment of political ambitions are not to be commended or condoned. They are pernicious and demand universal condemnation. There is but one correct standard of morals. By it all our acts, political, social, domestic and religious, are to be judged. We must carry the same conscience into every department of life and into the discharge of every duty. Wrong doing in political conventions or caucuses is just as wrong as in a congregation of Christians or a conference of elders. But there is a current casuistry that justifies the politician and condemns the Christian for the same offense. Indeed, it is asserted that good men can not preserve their integrity when they become active politicians. The charge is untrue and the intimation is to be deprecated; but the existence of such a false philosophy can not be denied.

The enthusiasm of the convention was intense. At times the uproar was tremendous and beyond control. The dignified presiding officer rapped in vain while the clamor raged and a hundred were struggling for the floor. There were motions and counter-motions, applaudings and yellings, until the wildest confusion reigned. And when a nomination was made, after much balloting, every delegate seemed to exercise his lungs to their utmost volume. As we looked and listened this thought occurred: Those very gentlemen would condemn a far less modest expression of enthusiasm in a religious meeting. They can shout aloud when their candidate is nominated—when their patriotism is stirred; but they disapprove any utterance of joy when the soul is redeemed or the church receives a Pentecostal baptism. A shouting patriotism is becoming; but a shouting religion is shocking. We can applaud when someone's ambition is gratified, but be very orderly and decent when his sins are pardoned and his heart is filled with the Holy Ghost. Just why this difference has not transpired.

Another observation was made: Church members of the various denominations displayed a zeal in that convention in behalf of certain friends they never dreamed of as Christians. There was an intense earnestness and anxiety on their faces that seemed almost an agony. They held short confidential conversations, watched eagerly every movement of the other side, and were always as alert as a soldier on picket duty in the presence of an enemy. And we wondered what would be the result if those good brethren would transfer some of that zeal into the church of God. If such vigilance, solicitude and activity characterized their connection with the congregation of the saints, we might soon welcome a redeemed world and the millennial reign of the Lord of Glory. But why this difference? Why so intense in a political convention and so cold in the house of God? Should we be less zealous in winning men to Christ than in securing their doubtful nomination to public office? Surely we ought not to be less loyal to our religious than to our political faith. Cesar has no greater claims upon us than Christ. Our Lord exhorts us to "render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." Both duties are imperative; neither should be neglected, and the same zeal should characterize the discharge of each.

A Corner-Stone Laying.

In response to generous invitation we spent Wednesday, of last week, in the city of Meridian, the growing young metropolis of East Mississippi. Leaving New Orleans on Tuesday by the North-eastern, a run of about seven hours brought us to our destination, a distance of nearly two hundred miles. No passenger by this route thinks of composing himself to sleep, however weary, until the long bridge has been crossed. Sweeping for miles along the lake shore, and then across, at one point quite out of sight of land, with the restless waves surging against the sturdy, steady timbers of the bridge, and the balmy breezes fanning the brow, makes a ride over that splendid structure a rich experience. On Tuesday night the moon shone out in all her queenly glory, and, as she leaved her silvery tresses in the agitated waters, every wavelet sparkled with a thousand gems. And we thought, What a beautiful illustration of a sanctified soul holding and mirroring in its bosom the Spirit's blessed beams of light! Flashing with a glory not its own, it attracts and inspires other hearts to secure similar adornment. On through the great pine forests our train thundered at the rate of thirty miles an hour, its sighing solitudes shimmering in the silvery moonlight. At two A. M. we reached Meridian and found Bro. Black, the indefatigable, gifted pastor, at the depot to extend a cordial welcome to his comfortable parsonage home.

The sun rose clear and cloudless on Wednesday morning, promising a pleasant day for the interesting ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of our handsome new church. In a few hours, however, the clouds gathered and waved their black banners with threatened thunder. A fine audience quite filled the spacious court-house at ten o'clock, though many were kept away. The singing was superb, the lesson was read by Bro. Black in the absence of Rev. J. M. Weems, who was on the programme, and the writer delivered an address. Then the audience repaired to the new church and stood under umbrellas during the formal ceremonies of laying the corner-stone. The stone was placed, a number of articles deposited therein, the invocation offered, and the exercises concluded with a benediction by the presiding elder of the district, Rev. James A. Godfrey. The stone is a rectangular block of Alabama marble. The end fronting the street bears this inscription: "M. E. Church, South, erected 1885, Rev. O. P. Thomas, pastor. Rebuilt 1885, Rev. W. C. Black, pastor." The side next the door contains the names of the Building Committee, while the side fronting Garland street has the names of the architect and builder.

This new church enterprise recalls some facts concerning Methodism in Meridian that will be of general interest. The first house of worship erected in the (then) small village was a plain frame structure, not large, but fully able to accommodate the congregation. In 1866 it was removed to the lot on which the new church is being built. In 1879 the growing congregation made it necessary to enlarge the building by an addition of fifteen feet to the front. The pastors since 1866 have been as follows: 1866, O. P. Thomas; 1867-68, J. J. Mabry; 1869-70, J. Barker; 1871-73, J. A. Ellis; 1874-75, J. T. Heard; 1876-78, R. J. Jones; 1879-80, E. H. Moulter; 1881-84, R. D. Norsworthy; 1885, W. C. Black. The church is quite prosperous—more than keeping pace with the rapid growth of the city. There have been seventy accessions the present year, making an aggregate membership of 343.

The old church was taken down and removed to West End, where Bro. Black preaches on Sunday nights to large congregations. That part of the city is building up rapidly on account of the location there of the Queen and Crescent railroad shops. The new church will be Gothic in style of architecture, two stories, with a center tower one hundred and fifty feet high, and with all modern conveniences. It will be an ornament to the town and a monument to the zeal and devotion of the able pastor and his loyal, generous congregation. The lecture-room of the building will be completed and in readiness for the Annual Conference in December.

At night an impromptu prohibition mass meeting was held at the court-house to hear an address from the writer. The audience crowded the room and listened patiently to an elaborate discussion of the live question of the day. Our friends in Meridian have made a gallant fight against the rum power and intend to win. Their flag has not been lowered an inch, though threatened with "boycotting." They are gaining friends every day. Of course the city has some "trimmers."

"Metho-Congo-Baptist—Unit—in one nature, blithe and bland, Fire or water, hell or heaven, always ready on demand."

but they are growing less as the issue is more sharply defined.

With thanks for many courtesies and special attentions from Pastor Black and his delightful household, at half-past two A. M. we started homeward on the Vicksburg and Meridian, by way of Jackson.

The Crystal Springs Camp Meeting.

We were privileged to spend Sunday, last, at this favored and favorite feast of tabernacles. For immense congregations, open-hearted hospitality and the joyous "communion of saints" great is Crystal Springs. The place is famed in the annals of our Methodism. Around those altars thousands have been inducted into the kingdom of grace, while the saints have renewed their covenant vows and rejoiced in a fresh baptism of power. This year the attendance was larger than last, and the order on the entire encampment beyond criticism. The vast crowds gave respectful heed to the rules of the association and reverent attention to the preaching of the word. Quite a number of penitents came to the altar at each service; but up to Sunday night we were not informed how many, if any, had been converted. The Sabbath at popular camp meetings rarely ever witnesses large gatherings. The crowds are so great, the labor of entertainment so wearisome, and the distractions of mind so multitudinous, that the convicting power of the gospel is not usually very manifest. It is estimated that not less than three thousand persons were present on Sunday—many of whom could not find seats under the magnificent tabernacle. From indications observed we have no doubt the spiritual results of the meeting will be large.

The grounds have been much improved since last year. There has been a judicious expenditure of money, adding materially to the beauty and comfort of the encampment. The public exercises were in the hands of an excellent committee, and the preaching we heard was the pure gospel. On Monday the annual address was delivered by Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter. This is a commendable feature of that camp meeting, and has developed already quite a Methodist literature. Those addresses gathered into a volume after awhile will have a real value.

Prohibition in Louisiana.

The first regular State convention of the friends of prohibition in Louisiana was held in Breveport on the nineteenth instant. The attendance was not very large; but an organization was perfected and a policy outlined that will speedily develop an irresistible sentiment throughout the State. Dr. S. M. Angell, of New Orleans, presided, and J. Y. Gilmore, of New Iberia, acted as secretary. The Committee on Resolutions reported a declaration of principles that will, in the main, commend the support of all unprejudiced Christian citizens. We reproduce this most important resolution:

Resolved, That this move is non-partisan and non-sectarian in character, and seeks only to enlist the active co-operation of all patriotic and law-abiding citizens, without regard to race or party, hoping thereby to secure the hearty support of all temperance, benevolent and church organizations in the legal suppression of the liquor traffic.

That is the true policy. Disentangled from party politics we are sure to win. Then all parties, creeds and colors can unite in the suppression of a great evil and for the triumph of moral reform.

A State Executive Committee was appointed, composed of a member from each congressional district and three from the State at large. Of this committee Rev. J. T. Sawyer, of Arcadia, is chairman. A better selection could not have been made. The other two members for the State at large are Judge E. T. Merrick, of New Orleans, and Hon. W. H. Goodale, of Baton Rouge.

Holsted on Their Own Petard.

A State convention of liquor dealers was held in Jackson, Miss., on the seventeenth instant—two days before the assembling of the Democratic State Convention. They met in secret session, though claiming to represent an important industry and great political principle. Set for the defense of personal liberty and inalienable rights, their deliberations ought to be open to the world. But with closed doors their counsels were held, even refusing admission to a harmless minister of the gospel of Christ. Their conclusions, in the form of three whereases and six resolutions, were printed as a circular and distributed in the Democratic Convention, which assembled on the nineteenth instant. They declared themselves respectable folks, pursuing an honorable business, but vexed by "the unfair and fanatical war being waged in favor of prohibition," and by "enemies of the Democratic party." Being good party men themselves, they asked that those resolutions be presented to the convention for its "favorable consideration." They were introduced, but not by a friend of their cause, and referred to the Committee on Resolutions, which by an unanimous vote laid them on the table.

A little history will throw valuable light on this action and indicate its significance. These liquor dealers and their friends have persistently bargained that prohibitionists meditated the disintegration of the political parties as at present organized. Their purpose was purely political and should be resisted. But the friends of prohibition met in State convention three hundred strong, and declared that their movement was, and should be, "disentangled from party politics." They sought no offices, and asked not for the spoils of place and power. Their conservative course was applauded by the party newspapers of the State as being eminently wise. The liquor dealers, however, mostly foreigners and not generally recognized as leaders in good morals and public thought, meet and make demands of the party in power. We didn't ask recognition; they demanded "favorable consideration." They thrust their cause into party politics and met an unqualified condemnation; we asked nothing, but in the action above have the virtual commendation of the convention. The friends of "red eye" got a black eye. Their secret counsels came to nought. Their poisoned obalace was pressed to their own lips. This is the beginning of the end. The day of redemption is near at hand.

From Arcadia, La.

We are back from our long and excessively warm trip to Griswold Chapel, in the nlp and tuck country. We found things looking up somewhat on the Farmerville circuit under the faithful labors of Rev. J. L. Williams. On our way to Griswold we preached, Friday night, in our church at Farmerville. The handful of Methodists in that town have been struggling on and have succeeded in seating the church since our previous visit, and have in position a very artistic pulpit and side-stand—these being the handiwork of Bro. J. R. Simmonds. They hope to cello the building soon, and to move along as rapidly as possible to its completion, steeple and all. It was told to me that a merchant of the town, not himself a Methodist, will purchase a fine bell for the church. May our good people there have success in their undertaking, and we trust many friends, readers of the ADVOCATE, will be willing to send promptly to Bro. J. C. Cargill, treasurer, twenty-five cents, fifty cents or one dollar to help on the desired end.

Mr. Editor, the people in all that country expect you at the Downs-ville Camp Meeting.

AUGUST 11, 1885.

From the first service on Friday night, Rev. J. L. Wright preaching, the Downs-ville Camp Meeting moved on deepening. In interest up to the time we were compelled to leave the ground. The last service we attended was at eight o'clock, Monday morning, and after a good sermon by Rev. John M. Davies and some exhorting the mourners, as at previous services, came crowding to the altar. Some had already been blessed, and we have faith to believe that many precious souls will be converted and reclaimed, and that many other gracious results will flow from this gathering of God's people on that consecrated spot. Sunday, at eleven, a splendid congregation was present, and the weather was sufficiently cool to allow of preaching and listening with some comfort. The Sabbath began with a delightful season of refreshing from the Lord at the eight o'clock experience meeting, and its hallowed influence was felt all the day at the eleven o'clock, the three o'clock and the night services, and every thing tended to our blessed realization of a "high day in Zion." The pastor asked us to take the collection for Conference claims, and the good people of the circuit gave very readily—largely over the assessed amount.

Bros. Collier, Stone, Wright, Hodge, Davies and some local preachers were in attendance on the meeting, laboring with success for souls, the brethren and sisters joining heartily with them in this glorious work.

AUGUST 18, 1885.

Much has been done for our China mission by special contributions for the support of certain children in the mission schools. These children have borne the names of their benefactors, and thus have been strengthened a peculiar relation. There are some difficulties attending this method, however, and Rev. A. P. Parker, of our mission at Soochow, suggests another which will give in his own language. In a letter to Dr. Kelley he says:

"I think it would be well if you would suggest a different arrangement to those who wish to contribute to the support of this school, viz.: That they support a scholarship without reference to a particular boy. By doing so, they would always be sure that a boy in the school was being supported by their money; whereas now, it frequently happens, from several causes, that changes occur, or the boy that is being supported leaves the school."

If any one will undertake to support one or more scholarships in this school, I will guarantee to send them a half-yearly report of the whole school. I notice the Northern Presbyterianians adopt this plan in connection with their schools, and it evidently works much more satisfactorily than the other."

The cause of evangelical religion is advancing with marked rapidity in the Republic of Mexico. What was the most desperately priest-ridden, superstitious nation of the western world is now coming to the front. We find the following interesting facts in the Advocate of Missions:

"The Roman Catholic Church, fifty years ago, owned three-fifths of the city of Mexico. The Archbishop had a larger income than the Queen of England. There were then convents and monasteries in the country. One-tenth of the produce of Mexico went to the clergy and nuns. The estimated value of the church property as late as 1850 was $300,000,000, one-third of the entire property of the nation. In the City of Mexico there were 5,000 houses valued at $8,000,000, of which the church owned more than one-half. Grand cathedrals were scattered here and there over Mexico, supported by vast sums wrung from the slender purses of the poor. President Juarez confiscated a large part of the church property, and even took its gold and silver ornaments and coined them into money to carry on his war against the church party. There is still considerable wealth and grandeur left to the Catholics, but their day of almost unlimited dominion is over."

The Rev. J. M. Weems has had a gracious revival at Enterprise, and sends us a short notice of it as follows:

As predicted, our Women's Missionary Society and our class meeting have culminated in a gracious revival in our church here. I speak from a happy experience when I say that to get the women to praying and working for the spread of the gospel and the church to loving and strengthening the class meeting, solves the problem of a revival of religion in a community."

The church was ready, and from the first service penitents came to the altar, were blessed and added to the church. In twelve days there were twenty conversions and fifteen accessions to the church. This makes a total of twenty accessions this year, and I feel sure others will follow soon. We are greatly indebted to Bros. McVoy and McLenrin for able and efficient labors in the pulpit and at the altar.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone sends the following bulletin:

We have closed a meeting at Rehoboth, Winona circuit, of a week's continuance. Results: 14 conversions and 19 accessions; many sinners reclaimed; the church generally revived. We have had up to this time about forty conversions and fifty-eight accessions to the church on the work. Thanks to Bros. Burroughs, Riehl and Smith for help.

WINONA, MINN., August 22, 1885.

Slightly inquisitive was the typical Yankee:

"Look here, squire, where was yeon born?" said a persistent Yankee to a five minute's acquaintance. "I was born," said the victim, "in Boston, Tremont street No. 44, last Monday, on the first day of August 1810, at five o'clock in the afternoon." "Benjamin, Dr. Warren; nurse, Sally Benjamin." "Yankee was completely answered. For a moment his face flashed. "Soon, however, his face brightened, and he quickly asked, "Yes, wai, I calculate yeon don't recollect whether it was a frame or brick house, dew ye?"

—Rev. Dr. J. W. Lewis, of St. Louis, has gone to Hot Springs for his health.

—Our facetious neighbor, the Daily States, calls the Bishops of the Church of England, "their lordships of the lawn sleeves."

—A note from Dr. C. K. Marshall gratifies us with the intelligence of his wife's continued improvement at Eureka Springs.

—The Methodists in the West Indies propose to celebrate the centennial of the establishment of their church in Antigua, in 1786, by Bishop Coke.

—Dr. McAnally, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, has returned from a protracted visit to the West. We welcome him back to the desk, but will miss his interesting "editorial correspondence."

—Our friends at Terry, Miss., contemplate purchasing a bell for their church. It may be that some congregation desires to dispose of one. If so, correspondence is invited with Bro. R. J. Barbour at Terry.

—It is alleged that the original manuscript of Rev. Solomon Spaulding, from which it has long been supposed the Book of Mormon was composed, has been found, and is now in Oberlin, Ohio. Its publication is proposed.

—The Marvin Camp Meeting, near St. Louis, was quite a success this year. About twenty-five tents were occupied, a number of ministers were present, including Bishop Granbery, and about thirty had been converted up to last reports.

—The spot in Tunis, where John Howard Payne, the author of "Home, Sweet Home," was so long buried, has been marked with a white marble stone, 7x4, suitably inscribed. It was done at the cost of Mr. W. W. Corcoran, of Washington, D. C.

—Rev. W. H. Crawford, a venerable Methodist of many laborious years, writes the editor a note from Grand Cane, La., in which he opposes the change of our church name. If, however, any change is effected, he suggests that it be the Methodist Episcopal Church of Christ.

—Miss Estelle Isbell, the youngest daughter of Rev. R. S. Isbell, of the Louisiana Conference, and Mr. Walter E. Hendricks, were married at the Lind Grove parsonage, July 1, 1885, by Rev. J. A. Parker. The young hearts, now made one, will accept the ADVOCATE'S congratulations and well-wishes for a long and useful life.

—In a note to the junior publisher, Rev. Dr. Felix R. Hill makes mention of his prosperous pastorate this year at First Church, St. Louis. He says it is perhaps the most successful of his ministry. More than one hundred members have been received, congregations greatly increased and finances double what they were last year.

—We regret to learn of the illness of Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, of the Louisiana Conference. In the midst of a glorious revival he was broken down and has not been able to resume work. It is hoped that his sickness is temporary. He says: "But, thank God, the fire is still burning and Tulp circuit will live whether I do or not."

—The tomb of Gen. Grant is strictly guarded. After nightfall no one can approach within a hundred feet of the spot without being challenged. And so greatness rests uneasy even in the tomb. For filthy lucre his grave would be desecrated and bones stolen. What a commentary upon the human heart! And yet there are doubters of the doctrine of total depravity.

—The Chicago Standard, a strong Baptist exchange, advertises "Baptismal pants with boots and other rubber goods." Just think of following the Lord by donning gum breeches and going down into a furnace-heated pool with side screens and necessary dressing rooms near at hand. And yet our aqueous brethren make this a test of loyalty to the truth.

—The following ticket for State officers was unopposed by the Democrats of Mississippi last week: For governor, Robert Lowry, present incumbent; lieutenant-governor, G. D. Shands, present incumbent; treasurer, Wm. L. Hemmingsway, present incumbent; secretary of State, Geo. M. Givens; auditor, W. W. Stoupe; attorney general, Marshall Miller; superintendent of education, Prof. J. W. Preston.

—Protestantism is making steady progress in France. The last official census places the number of Protestants at 550,000, but a more recent and careful computation by M. Vauchez raises it to 650,000. This is the growth of comparatively a very few years. When France throws off entirely the dominion of priestly superstition and turns to the true light, she will begin a career of new prosperity and glory.

—The Seashore District Conference, at its recent session, inaugurated a most important enterprise—a District High School to be located at Hattiesburg. A board of trustees was elected and now a competent teacher is wanted. Rev. J. W. McLaurin writes that the school is already an accomplished fact, and that it will at once pay a teacher at least $100 per month. That is a good movement and must succeed.

—Writing from McCool, Rev. H. C. Parrott adds to a business note: "I have held two more meetings. The one at Ethel resulted in twenty conversions. A church of thirty-five members has been organized and we will build soon. The other at Shady Grove has resulted in twenty conversions and twelve accessions, and the meeting continues. Up to date there have been one hundred and twenty conversions on this circuit. The whisky fight has not yet ended."

—Rev. N. G. Augustus, of Tchula, Miss., is a prohibitionist who has the courage of his convictions. He is leading the reform in his section with an intrepid spirit sanctified by the grace of God. The efforts made to circumvent the law in the interest of saloon-keepers will not stand the test of legal investigation, nor stand before the earnest preaching of the gospel. We wish our brother the largest success—the overthrow of whisky and the conversion of many souls.

—The New York Independent, of August 13, contains an elaborate two-column review of Bishop McTear's History of Methodism, which is, in the main, appreciative of its merits. The reviewer styles it "A South-Side History," and, of course, takes a latitudinal view of the work himself. He concludes: "It is but fair to add to what has been said above, that while the author is nowhere at pains to suppress his animus, he has not allowed that animus to rob him of his candor, nor of his courtesy in the statement of facts."

—A new Methodist Church was organized in Carrollton last Sunday evening by the presiding elder, Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker. The efficient labors of Rev. Geo. A. Mandeville in that part of the city have resulted so favorably as to render this forward movement advisable. Subscriptions are now being received for erecting a building on the lot purchased last year by Rev. Beverly Carradine and his congregation. The church was organized with thirteen members, but will be largely increased in a few weeks.

—On the subject of an episcopal residence in the West, the Colorado Methodist has this to say. Bishop Hargrove has spent so much of his episcopate in that vast field that he has become quite identified with it and is a warm advocate of aggressive work therein. His residence there would be hailed with joy. The Methodist says: "Bishop Hargrove has presided over our Conference three annual sessions with great satisfaction to all, and by this time is becoming quite well acquainted with us and our wants. On his recent visit we pressed him hard to settle among us, and think we may yet succeed, as Sister Hargrove seemed half inclined to do so. We are sure if she settles in Pueblo, the good Bishop will come."

—The question of dividing the North Carolina Conference is just now being warmly discussed by the brethren in the old North State. The Methodist Advance urges it with zeal and ability, "not because," as our conferees say, "we want it done, but because we believe it ought to be done." A delegation to the General Conference pledged to the division will be elected, if possible, by the friends of the measure. Other issues will be before the General Conference, possibly more important than the changing of Conference boundaries. It would be better, therefore, to select men of good judgment and Christly spirit, and let them act for the well-being of Methodism. A factional representation in our great law-making body is to be deprecated.

—We have read with intense interest in the columns of the Methodist Times (London), the proceedings of the Wesleyan Conference at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Some of the debates were spirited, and quite reminded us of our own home Conferences. A few aggressive measures were proposed, such as an extension of the pastoral term and relieving chairmen of districts from pastoral duty, but were not discussed on their merits. The English mind is traditionally conservative. They suggest, appoint committees, then after twelve months appoint larger committees, and in the course of time effect a statutory or constitutional change in church government. Possibly that is well, but a medium ground—a progressive conservatism would be better. By election of the Conference, Rev. Joseph Ager Beet succeeds Dr. Osborn as theological tutor at Richmond, and Rev. George Bowden becomes the new governor of Kingswood School. Ninety young men were recommended for the literacy—89 for home work, 33 for foreign work, and 13 had to be declined. The Conference throughout was an enjoyable occasion. Dr. Riggs did more talking than any other, but often failed to carry his point.

Such an item as this, found in the columns of the Texas Christian Advocate, should be republished and commended. Why may not other works make a similar advance? Certainly we have not as yet attained unto the maximum of duty. Is the church asleep?

Rev. I. Kingsbury, West Texas Conference: Our assessment for foreign missions was $52 50. I have now forwarded to D. C. Kelley, treasurer, at Nashville, $100, being nearly double the amount assessed against Boxville circuit. Twenty dollars of this amount was collected in the public congregations. One good brother gave the balance—$80. When everyone learns to give as the Lord hath prospered him there will be no lack of funds to carry on the Lord's work.

Rev. Thos. Cameron, of the North Mississippi Conference, sends us cheering news from Goodman as follows:

I closed a very profitable meeting at Goodman last Tuesday night of sixteen days continuance. Christians greatly blest. Four accessions. Am under obligations to Revs. G. W. Bachman, J. A. Bowen, A. W. Jones, D. D., and Rev. T. J. Bailey, pastor of the Baptist Church here, for valuable assistance.

Books and Periodicals.

WORDS OF OUR HERO: U. S. GRANT. Edited by Jeremiah Chaplin. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. Price, 35 cents.

This book is a compilation of extracts made from the letters, messages, conversations and correspondence of Gen. Grant. They gather in convenient form his best thoughts and wisest sayings. The first edition was sold in a single day. The second edition now ready will be somewhat enlarged.

LIVES OF BOYS WHO BROKE FAMOUS. By Sarah E. Bolton. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., 15 Astor Place.

This beautiful volume contains sketches of twenty-eight distinguished men in different walks of life, whose early histories were poor and unpromising. Against many odds, by dint of their own strong energies, they became eminent. Among the sketches are: George Peabody, Bayard Taylor, James Watt, Bernard Palissy, Michael Faraday, Horace Greeley, Dwight L. Moody, Abraham Lincoln and others. We have read some of them with real pleasure. The book is sold at $1.50, and is worth twice the amount to the boys of any family.

Cassell's Family Magazine, for September, is a capital number, well illustrated and filled with good things for every class of mind. "A Diamond in the Rough" is continued. Mistaken Identity, John Sebastian Bach, Ennui: Its Symptoms, Causes and Cure, A Mysterious Attraction and The Poet—some of the sketches are exceptionally interesting. This last has a historical value. We commend this magazine. Only fifteen cents a number. $1.50 per annum.

The Pulpit Treasury, for September, is on our table. The frontispiece is a portrait of Principal MacVicar, of the Presbyterian College, Montreal. Dr. MacVicar's sermon and the sketch of his life are admirable. Other sermons are by Prof. J. P. Caird, D. D., Dr. W. H. Anderson, Dr. John Hall and Chancellor Sims. The Leading Thoughts of Sermons are by Bishop Bowman, Bishop Beckwith, Dr. W. M. Taylor, Prof. J. L. Patton and others. All the departments are amply supplied. This magazine is never tame, dull or lagging, but fresh and abreast of the times. E. B. Treat, publisher, 771 Broadway, New York.

The Popular Science Monthly, for September, has been received. As usual the table of contents is varied and attractive. Though not always agreed with the writers, we read this periodical with interest and profit. Among the best articles in this number are, The Relations of Railway Managers and Employees, The Present Aspect of Medical Education, The Future of the Sea-Shore, Siberia and the Arctic, Sunlight and the Earth's Atmosphere, and others. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1 and 3 Bond St. Single number, fifty cents. Yearly subscription, $5.00.

The North American Review, for September, discusses some live questions. There is a symposium on "Shall our National Banking System be Abolished?" by four great students in national finance. Tendencies of English Fiction is the subject of a paper by "Ouida." The Decay of Ecclesiasticism is discussed in his characteristic style by Rev. H. Hecker. Newton, Dr. Newton is an iconoclast, though as yet a minister of the Episcopal Church. The Great Psychological Opportunity, Naval Tactics of the Future and Grant's Memorial—What Shall it Be? are other papers of value. New York: No. 30 Lafayette Place. Single number, fifty cents. Yearly subscription, $5.00.

WERLEIN'S PIANOS.—Probably no piano in the city has met with more success than that of Mr. Philip Werlein, 135 Canal Street. To the conduct of his extensive business, Mr. Werlein has ever had in view the excellence of the grade of article he sells, together with economy for the purchaser. In this way he has established himself well in popularity, and thousands recognize him in the medium through which they have been enabled to secure a good piano on the easiest monthly payment and most accommodating terms. Mr. Werlein has won for himself a reputation, of which he may justly be proud, in the extensive sale of the world renowned "Mathushek Pianos." Mr. Werlein has also a number of second-hand pianos in thorough order, at very low prices. Good second-hand pianos as low as $20, and brand new pianos at $15. The repairing of Old Pianos is made a specialty. Actions are thoroughly renewed, and the cases polished by an experienced polisher, looking as good as new, at very lowest prices. STRENGTH FOR TO-DAY.

Strength for to-day is all that we need.
As there never will be a to-morrow;
For to-morrow will prove but another day,
With its measures of joy and sorrow.

Then why forecast the trials of life
With such sad and grave persistence,
And watch and wait for a crown of life
That as yet have no existence?

Strength for to-day in house and home,
So practice forbearance sweetly—
To scatter kind words and living deeds,
Still trusting in God completely.

Strength for to-day—what a precious boon
For earnest souls who labor,
For the willing hands that minister
To the needy friend and neighbor!

The Oracle of Noxubee.

MR. EDITOR: We have been frankly told that argument can avail nothing against the pride which holds to the suffix "South," and Bro. Dye's article illustrates the statement. He does not give us a single reason for its retention, virtually admits what I asserted as to the territorial limitation of our church and glories in it, and exhibits an utter lack both of sympathy with the world-wide mission of the gospel and of our opportunity as an integral part of the church of God. His "reply" is an appeal to prejudice from beginning to end, abounding in the fallacies, illogical conclusions and curt personalities which easily substitutes reason with the narrow-minded audience for whom he writes. He recounts the story of the war, and from the tone of his article one might infer that he thought it still going on. Dye glories in hating "Yankees." I know him of old—young, as he says I am. His race is dying out—they can no more live under the conditions that are rapidly growing up around us than the monosaurus could live on the sunny prairies of to-day. Nobody is afraid of his logic of the halter. That threat I know is "mock heroic"—real "bunkum."

Dye boasts of being a logician. He carries "postulates" and "plagues" about as the quack does his nostrums. Here is a specimen of his "reasoning." He puts in quotation mark these words, "The mock heroic South," which he professes to take from my letter, and then goes off in the rhetoric of a sophomore about Southern heroism. He knows well enough I did not write such a sentence. But the audience for which he writes accepts catchwords for argument, and this will arouse the prejudice on which he relies, so he accuses alike the laws of honor and of logic, and deliberately garbles my language to carry his point. As he is as fond of the dead language as he is of dead issues, I toss him an old Roman bone, quite as juicy as the small phrases he employs and say, falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.

Dye's article is a tissue of fallacies. Take this sentence, "But not is it named that the church must yield up her name and surrender whatever some border ruffian may demand." (Italics mine.) Dye would make the impression that the name of the church rests on the same ground as the "divinely imposed duties" he mentions. The sophistry of this bungling assumption is as ridiculous as it is obvious. He must have a low idea of the intelligence of his readers to suppose such verbal jesuitry will pass for reasoning.

Dye says we can not surrender at the demand of the border ruffian. I know his violence of speech touching anything that faces northward, but I read twice to be sure I was not mistaken in these furious words. But there they stand. Who are the men asking us to change the name that we may remove a needless obstruction from the path of our beloved church? They are Dr. McAnally, Dr. Rush, Dr. Scarritt, Dr. Protsman, Judge Holmer, Rev. J. W. Lowrance, Rev. E. J. Stanley and many others; men as true to the church as any, living or dead; some of whom served it before this oracle from the jungles of the Noxubee was born and have stood by its fortunes fearless amid the earthquake and the storm. Border ruffians! Well, may we be told it is useless to argue the question? Border ruffians! That is Dye's logic.

Bro. Dye says if our name is an offense to the "Yankees," say to them, "Get thee behind me, Satan." But the "Yankee" is not going to get behind us—he is bent on keeping before us, and as long as we listen to such counsellors as this sapient logician they will keep ahead. But there is something comical to my mind in Dye's spleen against the "Yankees." Doubtless he was rigged from head to foot in the product of Yankee genius when he wrote that letter—shirts from Lowell, shoes from Lynn, hat from Boston, pen from Hartford, while his master in theology, whose vigorous speculations furnish the substance of Dye's marvelous "psychology," was a Connecticut "Yankee." Pretty fellow to abuse the "Yankees!"

He catalogues our misfortunes. He echoes the wall of our woes. He waves "the bloody shirt." At his bidding the ghosts of war rise from the graves which nature has made green in her kindness and stalk in bloody gloom before us. He puts aside the silver trumpet of the gospel to blow a fierce blast from the bugles that kindle the passions of war. It is a sad spectacle! The rich music of fraternal peace and progress is falling all around us, and the lofty and the good are everywhere delighted with the heavenly strain, but this stubborn brother curls his lips in scorn and puts his fingers in his ears to keep from hearing it. God's good angels are calling us on every hand to look on the widening prospect of human brotherhood and the multiplying tokens of the nearing triumph; but Dye sees a "Yankee" in the glorious view; that spoils everything, and, shutting his eyes, he plunges into the marshes of the Noxubee to escape the sight. I repeat, it is a sad spectacle. The man deserves pity who can sit in grim defiance of time and Providence and nurse his unrelenting anger for a score of years. Mr. Editor, I know very well the power of such sentiments as Bro. Dye's letter expresses, but I have no sympathy with them. They are unworthy of the age in which we live, and have nothing under the sun to do with the question before us. It is a ruse de guerre to divert public attention from the practical utility which ought to control our action. If there are valid reasons for not changing the name of the church, let them prevail; but in the name of self-respect not to mention religion, let the decision rest on some better ground than Dye's hatred of Yankees.

The narrow spirit displayed by the letter of Bro. Dye wrecked the South politically and produced the poverty of which he complains, and it will wreck the church if it is allowed to control her movements. Brethren talk about our success in the West. They are simply mistaken. We have failed. We are steadily falling back. The gallant stand made by the Colorado brethren will end as the Southern valor ended at Vicksburg or at Gettysburg. Unless we pursue a different policy they will surrender to the inevitable sooner or later. The spirit which insists on retaining a sectional name in spite of its disadvantages will not only prevent our extension northward, but westward on our fancied parallel, and the day will come when it will throttle us even in the South. It is a spirit that contravenes the trend of history and ignores the obvious indications of Providence and violates by its bitterness the very essence of the gospel. The brethren, at least those whom our recalcitrant Bro. Dye represents, are willing to stay "South." I am not. That intense provincialism does not suit my convictions. I can find no "postulate" for it in the terms of our commission. God has given the church the freedom of the world. I plead for a policy in harmony with the spirit of that commission and endowment of life. I plant myself on the policy of Paul outlined with sublime freedom from prejudice in I Corinthians ix, 20-23. I will not call the millions of immortal souls to whom we ought to carry the message of life "border ruffians," but, like Paul, concede everything not essential if by all means I might save some.

In perfect keeping with this narrow and illiberal policy, Dye cries to be let alone, and bids me begone if I dislike his ultra sentiments; but it is not likely that I will pay much attention to his wishes in this matter. I am here to stay, and have my own opinions without consulting his views, and he will have to "adjust" his "consciousness" to this "postulate."

Mr. Editor, Bro. Dye does not represent our people. They have no apologies to make for the past, but they are too wise to throw away the opportunity of the present and the boundless heritage of the future through an unchristian hatred towards three-fourths of our fellow-citizens. Even the powerful leadership of this wizard of the swamps will hardly carry them into the shadows of a quarter of a century ago. Our face is to the future and our hearts are ready to advance at its call to higher things, and our proper name is "Episcopal Methodist Church."

ARLWOOD FARM, Mississippi.

The Summer's Canvass.

BY REV. F. M. GRACE, D. D.

"The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." Such is the cry of many a school drummer after the usual labors of a summer campaign in the field of patronage. After working nine or ten months with his pupils he has had to set out and travel and talk two or three months to get pupils for another year, and now wearied in body and mind he begins the toil of another school term. Truly, as Bro. Calloway used to say, it is a begging business. You first beg men to repent of their sins, then to join the church, then to support its institutions, and then to try to get to heaven. Why should a man want to be drummed into doing right? And the very practice of drumming defeats itself. For drummers do not go alone. One follows hard after another. The Methodist drummer goes into a community, visits the families, seatters the catalogues, and, perhaps, gets a chance to preach a sermon, going away satisfied that all is well for his school, when lo! the Baptist drummer is on his track and soon comes along with lower rates and greater inducements than his Methodist brother had to offer, and goes away satisfied, when again the State school drummer follows with free tuition and takes all with him. The fact is the schools are cutting each other's throats by lowering prices, until it appears cheaper to send a girl or boy to school than to keep them at home. Notwithstanding all this, the practice has become too well established to be safely neglected. Only by diligent competition can one school now exist by the side of another. In fact there is greater danger that the more distant schools will swallow up those at home by the more complete use of the system of drumming. Here they are from Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia. They will meet your girls at the nearest depot on a certain day and carry them by a special car to Nashville or Staunton. Who can resist such solicitation? Send your children and your money out of the State and then complain that you have such poor schools at home. Why do those schools up yonder find it necessary to come so far to find patronage? Once they professed to be cheaper, but even that has changed. The farther North or East you go the more costly the schools. Then the climate is superior. But experience has proved that, more Southern girls have died in schools beyond the limits of the State than in those where the climate is congenial to their former habits.

After all, some good has been accomplished by the operations of the drummers. People have been awakened on the importance of education. Rival schools have been compelled to increase their attractions if not their advantages. The example of sending abroad is contagious, and it is better to go somewhere and be taught than to remain at home in ignorance. "Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased."

The writer has availed himself of the excellent traveling facilities afforded by his presiding elder and has visited many portions of the Shreveport district. A two-horse buggy is no mean way of getting around in the country, for, mind you, the country is the place to find the girls and not the towns. My presiding elder deserves the title given by old Homer to the famous Achilles. He is hippo-damos, the horse-tamer. In my journeys with him I have seen him break no fewer than three wild-blooded colts to harness. Beginning with our steady old horse, Edward by name, he has worked out an entire new team. Edward, the old gray, has been retired to the plantation, where I am told he plowed this year some seventeen acres of land, and his successors, West Wind and Browny, (with one intermediate link lost), now go lying around the field in regular hippodrome style.

With the aforesaid team Bro. Alexander and myself have seen much of Red river and the lakes, to say nothing of the hill lands. The people have been hospitable, and have furnished us all the fried chicken, peaches and watermelons that our capacity would admit of. Now, have our labors been altogether in vain? Some twenty new girls have promised to come to the college and the outlook is very promising for another year. We have attended also some precious religious meetings and have gone about Zion, surveyed her palaces and marked well her bulwarks.

China Letter.

BY REV. W. W. ROYALL.

During the last month it has rained and rained and rained until one almost felt as if dropping skies had gotten to be a chore in China. The cotton crop up around Nantziang is "smartly in the grass." I can assure you. In fact in some places you can hardly see the cotton for the grass. The wheat crop was reaped of necessity between showers, and much of it, the Chinese say, is spoiled. Peace has come, yet business does not seem to flourish much so far. The twenty-odd steamers of the "China Merchants' Steam Navigation Company," which were said to have been sold last year to Messrs. Russell & Co., an American firm, are now, it is said, to be transferred to the Chinese owners. Most people look upon the sale as having been merely a ruse to dodge the French. Shanghai is by no means the same place that it was four years ago. Land is now lower than then, and business dull, notwithstanding the peace.

Most of our mission are in good health. My own and that of my family seem now assured. We have, as it were, got seasoned to malaria. Little David, son of Dr. W. R. Lambuth, has had dysentery. The Doctor and family leave soon for Chitoo, where they will stay till autumn. Miss Donna Hamilton has lately had an attack of pleurisy, but is better. Miss Haygood had some severe twinges of sciatica, but she, too, is about well, I believe. I have lately made several trips to Nantziang, and have found Miss Dora Rankin hard at work. It is surprising how much she gets through with. Miss Hamilton's recent illness deprived Miss Dora of all foreign assistance, and she has had double work for nearly two weeks. But she meets the emergency wonderfully. From Soochow, Rev. D.

L. Anderson writes that "we are all about half 'on the lift.'" But I suppose he alludes to the work and "gone" feeling produced by hot and damp weather.

The Anglo-Chinese school has now an attendance of about eighty pupils, though there are about one hundred on the roll. The superstitious nature of the Chinese is well illustrated by the following: A few evenings since one of the boarders, on opening the door of his room, was heard to cry in terror, "Kieu ming, kieu ming," ("Save me, save me!") He declared, when questioned, that he had seen a tall kwei, (ghost or devil,) with black clothes and a yellow face. As a consequence, several of the boys left the place and would not sleep there longer. No negro is more deadly afraid of "haunts" than is a Chinese of the kwei. School closes for the summer holidays this month. The hope is for a better attendance next fall, although it may possibly be no better for another six months. Miss Haygood has approved herself a most excellent teacher. Her boys have done admirably.

Oh, how much I do wish we could get out some men to help us in the itinerancy! The field is here, millions on millions of people to whom, despite much rhetoric to the contrary, we ought, in duty to God, to carry the gospel, the preached gospel. Had Asbury, McKendree and others contented themselves with building a school in New York City, and then settling down there, they might indeed have built up a great school, but America would have been lost to Methodism, and Methodism to America. Given a membership of 2,000 to 4,000 in Kiangsu Province, and then our schools would have a constituency. As it is, they have none but the heathen, and they are not to be depended upon. The more I preach the more I am convinced that this is the greatest door now open to us in China.

The gospel carries its own certificates of virtue and does not go to the college nor to the hospital to beg them. People run wild over new wine sometimes; yet for all that "the old is better." One would suppose that it is rather late in the day to set up a defense of the supreme value of preaching, but when so much is said that, impliedly, at least, throws discredit upon the old and tried way, it is time to protest. Let us have more preachers.

Good Words.

And what can I give the weary,
To lighten their burdens sore,
Since only a single half-pence
Is left of my home brought hither?

Al, smiling can I and a half-pence Accomplish, however small;
Say nothing—but find and a half-pence
Can compass and conquer all!

—It is the habitual thought that frames itself into our life. It affects us even more than our intimate social relations do. Our confidential friends have not so much to do in shaping our lives as thoughts have which we harbor.—F. W. Teal.

—Our very abundance of the good things of life requires that we shall be more active, thus getting the good from them they are meant to bring. Our mercies cloy on us and become hindrances if we do not put them to good uses.

—How shall we dare to behold that holy face that brought salvation to us, and we turned away and self-love with death, and blessed deformity and sin?—Jeremy Taylor.

Family Worship and Religious Instruction of Children.

MR. EDITOR: I can not see how any conscientious head of a family can neglect regular family worship and the religious instruction and training of their children. These duties are so plainly laid down in the word of God, both in example and precept, and so clearly implied in numerous places, that every honest reader of the Bible must see them, and yet to the great loss of the spirituality and usefulness of our church members they are most shamefully neglected. Formerly the neglect of these all-important duties was the exception to the almost universal rule of attending to them, but now attention to them is the noted exception to their very general neglect in many of our churches. When I entered the ministry, more than sixty years ago, it was a rare thing to find a Methodist family without regular evening and morning family prayers, where the head of the family was a member of the church; but now no report at our various church conferences is more common than that of the extreme neglect of family worship by our heads of families. An observing man learns a great deal in a long life by thoughtful observation on passing events, and I will tell you what I have learned about this matter of family worship in threescore years. The children of my old praying brothers and sisters of sixty years ago very generally embraced religion early in life, and when they became heads of families, imitated the example of their parents and set up family worship. Their children did the same, and now, as I still live in the same country, I often meet the fourth generation of these old Methodist families happy in the religion of their forefathers and adhering with undiminished zeal to the church of their choice. I can not say the same of those who neglected family prayer and the systematic religious instruction and government of their children. Many of them did not embrace religion at all, but grew up full of fun and frolic and went off into sin and fearful impenitence; others, to the great grief of their best earthly friends, have strayed off into other churches where they had not half the facilities to help them forward in the divine life they could have had in the church of their parents. In some instances the descendants of those non-praying Methodist families have become extinct as Methodists, not one of them now known to be in our church. By the neglect of family prayer the church is suffering incalculable loss. If a man will not pray in his family he will not pray in the prayer meeting; will often stay away from the prayer meeting for fear of being called on to pray; he will not visit and pray with his sick and dying neighbors; will not approach the altar in a revival meeting and pray with the penitents; in a word, does little or nothing to advance the spiritual interests of his family or anybody else. He has deliberately wrapped up his Lord's talents given him to use in the salvation of souls and laid them away out of sight. Rev. Sam P. Jones repeatedly affirms that "if a man has not got religion enough to pray in his family, he has not got enough to take him to heaven." I do not often express it just that way, but I confess I am considerably inclined to the opinion of the great evangelist. At least I would not be willing to risk my chance for heaven on the non-praying side of this question. There is generally a little cross connected with the beginning of family prayer, but those who shrink from that little cross and live in the neglect of this all-important duty, do not know how much they risk and lose for the want of a little Christian courage right here. Brethren, do put away all your foolish and unmanly notions about your not having gifts for oral prayer. How do you know you are deficient in gifts until you make a fair and honest trial for a few weeks. As you will have the Holy Spirit to help you if you go about it sincerely, you will not have half as much trouble to learn to pray as you had to learn the multiplication table in your childhood. Do, brethren, let us all pray!

THE SOUL'S DISTRESS.

BY JOHN F. WALKER.

Out of the depths, O Lord, I cry,
Out of the depths of sin and misery;
Hear thou my voice,
Into my supplicating hand hold me,
Lift up my sinking soul, and calm my fear,
Did me rejoice.

If thou wilt mark our state, should be,
What man could stand before thee? But with thee Is mercy still—
Forgiveness—and though in our hearts is fear,
Yet love shall cast it out and bring good cheer
Our souls to fill.

I wait, O Lord, for thee, as in the night
The watchmen wait and watch for morning's light.
Lo! in thy word
I hope and, hoping, wait till thou forgive.
Blot out my sins, and bid my spirit live
In thee, my Lord.

Out of the depths to thee, O Christ, I cry,
Thou who, that I might live, thyself didst die
Upon the tree;
O, by thy precious death of pain and scorn,
The glories of thy resurrection morn,
Believe me!

Out of the depths, O Holy Ghost, I cry
To thee my soul to cleanse and sanctify.
Spirit divine,
Breathe thou thy quickening breath into my heart,
And all thy gifts of holiness impart,
And make me thine.

Out of the depths, O blessed Trinity—Father, Son and Holy Ghost—I cry;
Make thou me whole.
Work thou thy threefold work in me: create
A new my life, redeem, regenerate Body, spirit, soul.

Out of the depths I cry, O God, at last!
Raise me by thy great power when life is past;
And in thy love
My ransomed soul into the heavenly raise
My cry of sorrow turn to song of praise
To thee above.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1885.—11 Kings 15, 17, 18.

THE SHUNAMMITE'S SON.

Golden Text: "I am the resurrection and the life."—John 11:25.

MEMORIALS.—The Shunammite's son, 11 Kings 15, 17-18.
The Father's prayer, Matt. 12, 18-20.
The Widow's Son, Luke 11, 17-20.
The Lazarus Raised, John 11, 31-44.
The Bread of Life, John 6, 32-41.
The Good Shepherd, John 10, 1-10.
The Lamb of God, John 1, 29-34.

The names of Elijah and Elisha are linked together in indissoluble bonds. Though entirely different in their mental characteristics, each had special fitness for the work of the time. They were largely the complements of each other. Elijah's terrible sublimity of appearance and statement contrasted strikingly with Elisha's pastoral gentleness and spiritual sympathy. Elisha was bold and intrepid; Elisha was conservative and conciliating. But their attachment to each other was loving and confiding; so, when Elijah was translated, Elisha's supreme desire and prayer was for a double portion of his prophetic spirit. He caught the rough mantle of his spiritual father and counselor; but he did not retain and wear it as an emblem of his more quiet ministry. Having a different mission to perform nearer the homes of the people, he wore the ordinary dress of a teacher and dwelt more in human society. Though less striking in appearance, and more in sympathy with the daily lives of the common people, he was none the less influential. His house in Samaria was visited by nobles and deputies to receive counsel in matters of great public concern. And when at last the news of his fatal illness reached the king he visited him, wept at his bedside, and exclaimed, "O my father, my father! the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!" (11 Kings xlii, 14).

The present lesson is an illustration of those gentler virtues characteristic of Elisha's successor. The home of the Shunammite was a dear place to the prophet, and the little "chamber" was his delightful resting-place. She dispensed a loving hospitality in the name of the Lord, and he reciprocated it as became the Lord's prophet. And the Shunammite's home is not the only one blessed of God because it has been given to hospitality. They have often entertained an angel unawares. In return for kindness to the Lord's messengers comfort has come in times of sorrow.

The death of the son—possibly a lad in his teens—is briefly, though graphically described. It is harvest time and the reapers are in the field. The season in that country is very warm, and the boy was doubtless overcome by the great heat. When the pain first attacked him he appealed to his father, and said, "My head, my head!" He was sent by the father to his mother. What so mighty and helpful as mother-love and sympathy! The strongest man will yield his children entirely into their mother's hand when sick and distressed. Without trying any means of relief, he sent the lad to his mother. And that picture of the mother holding her dying child in her arms has been repeated in all the world's homes. When he died she laid him on the prophet's bed. Her reverence for the man of God and her simple faith in the Lord he served possibly made her slightly superstitious. She placed the dead child in the prophet's chamber, as though the bed had been sanctified by his presence.

She sent for the prophet. Her first impulse was an appeal for spiritual counsel. Sorrow always has this effect upon those who love God. And, doubtless, she believed the prophet could restore her child—that the Lord God of Elijah, who raised up the widow's son at Zarephath, would hear Elisha's prayer in her behalf. Her husband rather objected, saying, "Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? It is neither now upon nor Sabbath." It was the custom of the times to commit the prophets on special days, and this had the effect of law in the father's mind. But her faith persisted, and she proceeded with her servant with all possible speed.

She went to Mount Carmel, a distance of twelve miles, where the prophet was found. He recognized her at a distance and sent Gehazi to meet her with friendly salutation. On this scene Dr. Thompson, in his "Land and Book," says:

"The scene is very natural and graphic. If you ask after a person whom you know to be sick, the reply at first will invariably be, 'Well, thank God!' even when the very next sentence is to inform you that he is dying. Then the falling down, clasping the feet, etc., are actions witnessed every day. I have had this done to me often before I could prevent it. So also the officious zeal of the wicked Gehazi, who would thrust the broken-hearted mother away, probably thinking her touch pollution, agrees perfectly with what we know of the man and of the customs of the East; and so likewise are the injunctions to Gehazi, 'Gird up your loins that you may run.'"

Gehazi was commissioned to go forward with all speed to the Shunammite's home and lay the prophet's staff "upon the face of the child." The injunction about saluting no one by the way was to prevent interruption and to assure a speedy relief to the mother's anxious grief. What significance there was in laying the staff upon the child's face does not exactly occur.

The mother interpreted the command to Gehazi as a purpose of the prophet not to go in person, so she protested against returning without him. So he yielded to her entreaties and accompanied her to the bereaved home. Gehazi did as directed; but the dead child did not awake. Why this failure is occasion for endless speculation. Elisha then proceeded to restore the child according to the graphic account given in the lesson for to-day. On this incident Dr. Carlisle concludes his comments with these words and an admirable quotation from Stanley:

"We can not work miracles to-day. It may be. But can we not make the social and necessary intercourse of common life the means of doing good to men and women around us? And who shall say that this is not the higher mission?"

"Elijah and those who are like Elisha" are needed in critical and momentous occasions "to prepare the way for the Lord." His likeness is John the Baptist; and of those who were born of women before the times of Christendom none were greater than they. But Elisha and those who are like Elisha have a humbler, and yet a wider and, therefore, a holier sphere; for their works are not the works of the Baptist, but are the deeds, if not of Christ himself, at any rate of "the least in his kingdom"—the gentle, beneficent, holy man of God, who passeth by us continually." (Stanley.)

"Rights and Privileges of Laymen."

Mr. Editor: Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., objects to Bro. T. J. Upton's proposed plan for the farther utilization of our lay members by placing some of our ablest and best laymen in the Bishops' cabinet.

Bro. T. J. Upton can attend to his own case. I wish to write as to the merits or demerits of this subject from my standpoint. Let us strike out all of that part of Bro. Upton's suggestion that makes it incumbent upon the presiding Bishop to act according to the advice, or to have the consent, of said cabinet to the appointments as made by him. What valid objection can then be urged against such additional aid in the way of advice and counsel as would be obtained from having as many laymen as there are presiding elders, regularly elected and duly authorized, to represent the church in the capacity of an advisory council to the Bishop?

Bro. Sullivan insists that "laymen already have access to the presiding Bishop." True, if he has "an axe to grind" or a wrong to redress—if anxious to secure a pet preacher or to remove an obnoxious one. But what layman in all our church can be found with so little of modesty and so much of self-assertion as to go, unasked and unbidden, and give his advice upon the general and particular work of changing circuit lines or of appointing preachers to their work?

Bro. Sullivan seems disturbed with the fear that the methods proposed would require "a radical change in the fundamental law of our episcopacy," and "that where the cabinet would be to eliminate one trouble it would be to give rise to more than one," and at last he decides that "we do need all the aid that our laymen can give us, but that is provided for in our law and usages, and in accordance with these it can be fully rendered. Some things need to be proved before being accepted as entirely true. These statements could be doubted."

Again, Bro. Sullivan states that "the whole church has access to the presiding elder who, by usage, is the Bishop's adviser." True, oh, learned brother! But did it never occur to you that the presiding elder may sometimes chance to be a little deaf in one ear? And is it entirely impossible that he should have "an axe to grind"? And has it never been the case that a presiding elder has his favorites? Pardon my saying that, while I have felt well assured that an All-wise God has wonderfully assisted and directed in the appointments of Methodist preachers, as a rule, still I have noticed that it has not been a disadvantage to a preacher to have a brother or a particular friend among the presiding elders.

In conclusion, my plan (and I imagine this accords with what Bro. Upton designed to introduce) would be as follows, viz:

1. Legalize the usage of the Bishops by recognizing, or constituting, the presiding elders of each Conference an advisory cabinet.
2. Let each Annual Conference elect for the following year as many prominent laymen (one of whom may be a local preacher) as there are districts in the Conference, who shall be authorized to advise with and assist the Bishop in arranging the works and in making the appointments for the Conference.

This plan does not propose placing any more power or authority in this cabinet than, by usage and practice, is now granted to the present cabinet, as it is generally called. It proposes (1) to give a larger advisory body; (2) to legalize what is now simply usage; and (3) to introduce those into this inner work who have no personal interests involved except in so far as any member is interested in who shall be his pastor.

The laymen thus elected would certainly endeavor to familiarize themselves with the preachers and the works of their Conference. They would be more readily approached by the membership generally. And we have men of weight, piety and learning—men who know what our "Israel ought to do"—among our laymen who could give much light and be a great help to the presiding Bishop in arranging their works and pastore.

Now, if Bro. Sullivan has any objections to the plan here proposed, I would be glad to see them. I am inclined to think that such an arrangement as here proposed would be a great help to the Bishops and prove a marvelous benefit to our much loved Zion.

The Church—No. 51

"One thing have I desired of the Lord; that I will seek after that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life."—David.

"Writer, I have seen better men out of the church than are some of your members in the church."

Yes, so have we; but your comparison is not a just one. You take the best out of the church and compare him with the worst in the church. This is not fair. It would be fair to compare these all, the mass inside the church, with the "great unwashed" outside. Do this, and we do not blush at the comparison. True, the army of the living God has some who are sick, some who halt and some "moss-backs" who hide away in jungles and woods; but still her rank and file are as beautiful and as "terrible as an army with banners." See her as she goes forth to battle with the earthly hosts of sin!

And, then, this good man and woman to whom you allude, who are out of the church, learned most that they know of or about truth, purity, honesty, or any other moral or Christian virtue or excellence, from the church, from her teaching, her Bible or her civil enlightenment. Had there been no church, all these good people but of the church would to-day be heathen. And, then, I do not know that they, or even you, are as good after all, for you boast of your goodness, but abuse the source from which you get it, or you pour contempt upon it by giving it the "go-by." What do you think of the ingrate?

The vast majority are men and women who can be relied on, who serve the church and the world with credit to themselves and the church, and successfully as soldiers of Christ.

"But there are hypocrites in the church." Yes, there may be; but there are not as many as some suppose. An inside acquaintance with the church for sixty years has never made me acquainted with but one man that I knew to be a hypocrite. Under peculiar circumstances I had it from his own lips that he had been forty years in the church, and all the time praying upon the weaknesses of the brethren and sisters.

I believe that ninety-nine out of a hundred join the church from convictions of duty, having in their hearts an honest "desire to see from the wrath to come." Now, if some of these stumble, it is not proof that they were hypocrites. I never took the intrepid, daring, noble Peter to be a hypocrite, and yet he denied his Master, lied about it and swore to it. See him "weeping bitterly," and then follow him through all of his most successful career, on to martyrdom. No, on the best of hands are the most counterfeits. In the best armies there may be traitors; and the best armies with which we have ever been acquainted with are the armies of the living God. Such devotion, such self-sacrifice, such voluntary liberality, such faithfulness is found nowhere else.

"Breakfast and feed and sure,
His Zion can not move;
His faithful people stand secure
In Jesus' guardian love."

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

Our church has always considered the education of her children a matter of prime importance. To keep the church abreast with the age and successful against her enemies it is essential that her young people be furnished with knowledge. As Christians we do not fear to have the people taught whatever is true, either in science or religion. Ignorance is the hand of God's church, because all truth is from God. But, while we recognize the importance of enlightening the mind, we must not forget the power of evil, and that it is now attempting, through the intellect of the world, to overthrow the church. In order to reach the enemy now, as never before, we must oftentimes recommend the truth in the garb of highest culture and scientific attainment. It is a matter of growing political importance to educate our public schools to the wants of the people that we may at the same time conserve our Christian conscience with reference to our children. Ungodly and ignorant men and women are often teachers of these schools whose example and influence are adverse to Christian education. While we would heartily endorse the dissemination of useful knowledge at the public expense, it behooves us, as far as possible, to look well to the moral and religious character of the teachers. Well conducted Sunday schools will largely supplement what may be lacking of religious instruction in our common schools. For higher education we recognize still more the importance of our youth associating with men of God as well as of science. Hence we should cherish beyond measure the noble Christian colleges that await our patronage. They are God's colleges, and alone are fitted to turn out educated men of God. There are two of these colleges within the bounds of the Woodville district, viz.: Centenary College, at Jackson, La., and Woodville Female Seminary.

Centenary College, in its locality, its magnificent buildings and appliances, its noble, self-sacrificing president and faculty, its decidedly moral and religious surroundings, indeed, in every way, presents facilities for the best Christian culture, and your committee hereby most heartily commend it to the notice, prayers and patronage of our people and the public.

Woodville Female Seminary is now the property of the church. It is a regularly organized and chartered institution, and stands ready to furnish our daughters advantages for the higher intellectual and religious education. The buildings are commodious, the faculty competent, the discipline and teaching thorough and after the best methods. Your committee would recommend again this institution as a proper place for our daughters.

T. W. BROWN, Chair'n.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON TEMPERANCE.

The great question before the country to-day is the suppression of traffic in intoxicating liquors. The temperance reform movement has steadily advanced until the public mind has been led to comprehend the great evil of intemperance and to see that these evils can not be met by moral force alone, but that legal enactments are absolutely necessary and that total prohibition is the only remedy. Moral suasion is insufficient of itself to accomplish the desired reformation while the traffic in intoxicating liquors is sanctioned and protected by statute law. This traffic is fraught with evil, and only evil. Its evil extend to the physical, mental, moral and monetary interests of mankind. The courts of the country have sustained the constitutionality of legal prohibition, and the friends of temperance and humanity are now pressing the battle to the very gates of this foe to the human race, and intend, by the grace of God, to overthrow the liquor traffic. We do not intend to lessen our efforts in the field of moral suasion, but the more effectually to slay the monster, we intend to use the argument of free men, the power of the ballot box. The principle of total prohibition having been legally established, it is left for its adherents to put the principle into practice.

We do not propose to say what a man shall eat or drink, or what he shall have for his breakfast, but we do propose to say that he shall not trade in a commodity that brings physical and moral ruin upon thousands. There seems to be in the country at this time a full political strife and it appears to be a propitious time for the great work we have in hand; and the friends of temperance should seize upon this auspicious time. The Methodist Church can not afford to be indifferent to the claims that rest upon her. She must be diligent, active and energetic in preparing the way for a glorious victory by cleansing her sanctuary and purifying her altars. The people look to us for earnest effort in this great cause. There will be no retrograde movement, no surrender of positions gained, but a constant, persistent effort and purpose to sweep the license laws from our statute books and the traffic from the entire country. And, whereas, we would not be found wanting in a decided expression of our position and our sentiments, we offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we rejoice in the progress which the principle of prohibition has made, in the benefits which it has already conferred upon the people where it has acted upon and that it has so fully met the expectations of its advocates.

Resolved, That as a church we can not afford to be inactive, or in any way exhibit any indifference in this cause, but to give ourselves for the light.

Resolved, That, as official members of the church, we will do all we can to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors and the traffic in them, and in every possible way exert our influence against their use as a beverage and in favor of prohibition.

Resolved, That as pastors we will use all diligence and all proper means to reform any among our membership who use intoxicating liquors as a beverage or traffic in them; or, as soon as possible, to rid the church of all such dead weights which hinder the progress of true religion within her communion.

Resolved, That the pastors of this district preach at least one sermon or deliver an address on the subject of prohibition before the next Annual Conference, and use their influence in the formation of a healthy public opinion in the premises.

Resolved, That we recommend to our people a hearty co-operation with all the temperance organizations which have for their object the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Resolved, That this report be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and that the preachers and members of this Conference not only resolve but act upon these resolutions.

J. M. PUGH, Chair'n.

From the Work.

BROOKVILLE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I have just closed a meeting at South Chapel that continued eight days and resulted in fourteen additions to our church, backsliders reclaimed and the church advanced to a higher plane of spirituality. This is the second meeting on Brookville circuit this year, and has resulted in twenty additions to the church on profession of faith and eight children baptized. We are on rising, I think. I go to Center Point next Sunday.

R. H. CACY.

CHERRY HILL, MISS.

Mr. Editor: If you will give me space in the columns of the ADVOCATE, I will tell you what the Lord has been doing for us on Cherry Hill charge, which consists of three churches and other preaching places. At some of the appointments there was great lack of exemplary Christian living, and the inconstancies of members of the church were a formidable barrier in the work of the Holy Spirit. But they seemed to gradually become sensible of their responsibility and to resolve to lead new lives, and by the time of our protracted meeting they were alive and praying. I must not say that we had a good time, for when Christians wrestle with God until sinners acknowledge the quickening influence of the Holy Spirit success is sure. We have had twenty-three conversions, and two meetings to hold yet. One lady, who had been brought up in the Roman Catholic Church, and had not been in a Protestant Church until she came to the Magnolia Church about three months ago, was happily converted and joined the church. Pray for us that the Lord will carry on his well-begun work in our midst. We are not much in sympathy with the clamor for a change of name of our church.

J. H. SMITH.

SHUQUALAK, MISS.

Mr. Editor: We have held two meetings on the Shuqualak circuit this year, which resulted in a glorious revival of this church. The reclamation of backsliders and the conversion of thirty-three to our Lord Jesus Christ and thirty-two of this number have joined our church. Bro. Calloway, a local preacher in the bounds of this work, assisted us in these meetings and did good work. This aged brother is near the goodly land, and there is a bright crown for him. May God bless him in his declining years! Bro. King, another local preacher from the Hebrew circuit, came over and preached two good sermons for us. Many thanks to him. The Lord is doing gracious things for this people on the Shuqualak circuit, whereof we are glad. We have four more meetings to hold, and we expect greater things of the Lord.

W. T. HARNETT, P. C.

P. S.—We have a church ready for dedication. Our presiding elder, the Rev. J. D. Cameron, will preach the dedicatory sermon the first Sunday in September.

W. T. H.

KEACHE, LA.

Mr. Editor: I had a splendid meeting in a desolate neighborhood in Sabine bottom, August 8-11. Organized a church with seventeen members, who propose building immediately. Twenty more penitents seemed determined to seek the "pearl of great price" until found. There was some old-fashioned handshaking and shouting in the camp. There is some complaint of cotton worm in this section. Corn crops are good.

F. D. VAN VALKENBURGH, P. C.

MONTGOMERY, LA.

Mr. Editor: On Saturday, July 25, protracted services commenced at Ebenezer Church, Calhoun and Montgomery circuits, Alexandria district, Louisiana Conference, and continued through several days until Thursday night, July 30, resulting in several conversions and three accessions to the church at the time. The good work continued on through protracted services held by the Methodist Protestant Church, resulting in five accessions to their church, and the Baptist Church also profited by the revival influence, for eleven were added to their church at one place and about as many, I believe, at another place. Still the work advances. I preached at a private house up in Red River, eight miles from this place, i. e., Montgomery, and five joined the church. May the glorious work continue! To God be all the praise.

We desire your presence at our district Conference, i. e., Alexandria district, which convenes on the twenty-sixth instant. Be sure and come if you can.

H. A. DAVIS.

ARIZONA, LA.

Mr. Editor: I closed a meeting last night at Arizona of five days' continuance, resulting in fifteen accessions to the church and in, perhaps, not less than thirty conversions. A deep religious influence pervaded the entire community during the progress of the meeting, and the effect on the night was the most powerful, I think I ever witnessed. Hardly an individual present that did not pledge himself to better life, and I doubt if there was one who did not in his heart do so. Bro. John A. Miller assisted during a part of the time, and local brethren rendered valuable assistance. Quite a revival influence is abroad in the parish (Calhoun), and as other meetings are yet to be held I trust that hundreds will yet be born into the kingdom.

J. W. MENDOTA.

PROVENCAL, LA.

Mr. Editor: I have just closed a round of protracted meetings on the Provencal circuit, which resulted in thirty accessions to the church, eighteen adult baptisms, eleven infant baptisms and the church greatly revived.

JOHN F. CARNOLL, P. C.

Our Church Name.

Mr. Editor: I believe it is asserted as a principle of the human mind to express a choice almost unconsciously in every matter. So much so that a man will scrutinize between two eggs, though there be no apparent difference in them. Consequently I will not avow nor deny, but leave my words to decide that much of the great amount that I have seen in our Advocate on the change of name, though contributed by learned and thinking brethren, is simply rubbish—much chaff and little wheat.

One brother contends for the suffix on the ground that it will effect our titles to church property and render our credential null and void if one name should be changed. I can see no force whatever in such an argument. If John Smith becomes tired of his name and by act of the Legislature adopts that of William Ward, does he thereby forfeit all of his rights as a citizen and become a subject for naturalization? Does he thereby forfeit all accounts that may be due him or nullify all of his notes as given to others? Are any of his rights, obligations or contracts in the least affected by his change of name from Smith to Ward? We have not so understood, and such would be neither reasonable nor right. So I think that the argument made on that point is without force whatever. Again we are told that to drop the "South" and assume another name will be the cause of many leaving our church here to older Conferences. I can not believe that either a few radical, exceedingly prejudiced people might, but I doubt seriously that any appreciable number of our members would be affected in the least. Why, sir, it is well known to most of the preachers that our people themselves take no notice of the suffix. When it is announced through our own papers that any service is to be held at the Methodist Church, everybody, yee everybody, concludes that it is to be at our church, though the suffix is not used, and we also have a regular Methodist Episcopal Church (North), and an Ames Methodist Episcopal Church in our town. So it is elsewhere. This I conclude argues that our people think more of the thing than they do of the name. I believe, Mr. Editor, that it would not make a whit of difference with us in the older Conferences whatever should be the decision of the question. On the other hand we are told that it is a misnomer, and that the name "South" does not describe us as a church, and so long as we go into the regions beyond it is misleading." Now, Mr. Editor, it seems to me that such assertions or arguments, if they be such, are without foundation. When we speak of Great Britain or the British Empire, do we confine ourselves to the city of London or to the British Isles, for thence they get their name? No. As quick as thought can travel we think of the Dominion of Canada, and all of the provinces, Australia and all of the many islands which pay tribute to her crown, and yet her power and her center of operations—her headquarters, so to speak—are in London and in the House of Parliament. So our name can suggest to the thinking man nothing more, I should think, than our base of operation or rather our source of supply.

Should we drop our present name and adopt that of Methodist Episcopal Church in America, would we not be taunted (1) with a recognition of our own inability to stand by our past history? (2) As being very arrogant in our pretention? And (3) as having a name just as inapplicable if not more so than the one we already have? Certainly we are not the only, nor the largest, branch of the Methodist Church in America. How would it be if we were the only branch? Would we not be laughed at for our own inability to stand by our past history? Would we not be laughed at for our own pretention? THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1885.

We record with pleasure the fact that the friends of Centenary College are responding to the movement in behalf of its endowment. At the Jackson District Conference, President Adams made an address in behalf of the institution, when the brethren responded to the amount of $150. This amount was increased by $150 at the Homer District Conference at Ruston, La., last week. By an active, united, earnest movement, a sufficient amount can be secured this winter to relieve the college of embarrassment. Let every alumnus and old student and every friend of South-Western Methodism make some offering to this grand enterprise. If one or two chairs in Centenary could be endowed at once, rehabilitation would be assured. We are acquainted with the work already done and the measures contemplated by President Adams to thoroughly equip the college for larger and better work.

A Pastor's Welcome.

The success of a pastor depends much upon his reception when entering a new field. If his appointment is a protest, and he has to conquer a place in the good-will and confidence of the church, much of the year will be wasted and experiences encountered that leave sad memories. The pastor may rejoice in his triumph; but some asperities will perpetually recur and affect unfavorably his relations with the brethren. As Methodists, we should be loyal to constituted authority, and not grudgingly, but gladly receive the pastors appointed. A warm welcome, with assurance of ready and unvarying support, at once gives him a vantage-ground that almost guarantees immediate success. It is pleasant at the close of a pastorate to have farewell demonstrations of affection; but it is more profitable to receive them at the beginning. A recent instance occurred that exactly illustrates our idea. The Rev. Dr. John Potts was appointed to the Elm Street Methodist Church, of Toronto, Canada, and at a public reception tendered him on the occasion of his entering upon the duties as pastor of that church the following address was presented. With such a welcome his term of service must be successful.

DEAR SIR: We, the members of the congregation of the Elm Street Methodist Church, desire to take this opportunity—the occasion of your entrance among us as our pastor—in order that we may express to you and your family the feelings of joy and welcome which the fact of your presence with us for the next three years causes us to experience. Knowing well both your reputation as a gentleman and Christian minister, we are convinced that the period of your abode in our midst can not be but productive of the greatest spiritual good to ourselves, and that many a ear in your future diadem will owe its brilliancy to your pastoral care during that period we now look forward to with so much delight. We trust that you will always find us willing hearers, and, what is of supreme importance, eager and willing doers of the word, so that all our activities may co-operate with your earnest efforts to promote the kingdom of the Lord Jesus in our midst. May oneness of aim, conscientious zeal to do our Master's will, and a broad Christian sympathy distinguish us, as a congregation, during your ministry more than in any period of the past, while we keep steadily before us the sole glory of our Savior (not our own) and our great and solemn duty to love one another, thereby allowing the Master to shine in and through us, that the world may see the blessedness of Christ's love, and we be made the instruments in his hands of leading others to the feet of Jesus. During your short sojourn with us we will strive to allow the best that is in us to work in harmony with the best that is in yourself for our own edification, for the benefit of our fellow-men, for the success of the grand old doctrine of Methodism, and chiefly for the glory of our redemptive Lord. We prefer to act our feelings, not to speak them. Mere words of praise from us can add nothing to your already acquired renown and success as a minister of our church and an orator of our land. We, therefore, welcome you and your family with all the welcome that abounds in the hearts of the people of this church—with all the joy and heart-felt sympathy a band of Methodists can possibly offer you, and we trust when the period of your stay with us is at an end both you and your congregation may be able to look back over those three years and say they have been the happiest and best of all the years of their Christian experience.

Editorial Correspondence.

An invitation to attend the Homer District Conference, at Ruston, La., was the more eagerly accepted because of the pleasant memories of last year's visit to Lisbon. Leaving home on Wednesday night, we were joined at Vicksburg by President Adams, of Centenary College, whose genial companionship made us quite forget the tedium of travel. Last year on the same trip we had the company of his honored predecessor, the Rev. David M. Rush—a noble, dignified, scholarly gentleman, the memory of whose radiant virtues and warm, generous friendship we shall carry into the upper world. But God buries his workman and carries on his work. The saintly Rush goes up to his reward; but Centenary moves on under the administration of a worthy, distinguished successor.

Along the road from Delta to Monroe the crop prospects are a vast improvement on the outlook of last year. There will be bread for the eater and seed for the sower, besides an almost unprecedented yield of the fleecy staple. The fields laugh with plenty and the face of the farmer is radiant with hope. What a happy effect is produced by one good crop! Church and State feel the influence and unite in the general rejoicing. The preachers talk cheerfully and anticipate good reports at the Annual Conference. We noticed quite an improvement in the road-bed of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific railroad. It has been raised above high water mark much of the way, and made solid and smooth. The time between Delta and Shreveport has been shortened several hours, and travel has been largely increased. The completion of that road has wonderfully developed the hill parishes beyond Monroe. Towns have sprung up like magic along the way, some of which are doing a remarkable business.

Ruston was reached at half-past five o'clock—too late to witness any of the first day's proceedings of the District Conference, but in time for a warm welcome. President Adams found two of his Centenary boys at the train to take him in hand and conduct him to the palatial residence of Col. Standifer, and this writer was committed to the safe keeping and splendid hospitality of his old Mississippi friend, Bro. C. N. Harris. He is the railroad and express agent at Ruston, and, we were glad to learn, had found high place in the esteem and confidence of her solid citizens.

The District Conference, under the presidency of Presiding Elder Sawyer, was largely attended. About seventy delegates, answered to the proceedings. It had quite the appearance and interest of an Annual Conference. Rev. J. W. Medlock sat at the secretary's table and kept his practiced pen busy in journalizing the day's doings. We listened to the reports with real interest, and make some cheering observations: Every pastor reported an increase in members, and nearly all a number of conversions. Some charges have been blessed with Pentecostal feasts and had large gatherings. Most of the pastors reported their connection with the church as having been secured in full in cash and subscriptions; and that plan is worthy of special mention and commendation. True, some of the subscriptions may not be paid; but it is a more excellent way than the old plan of crowding all collections into the last two months of the Conference year. The prospect now is that the Homer district will bring up a clean balance sheet—all accounts rendered and payments made in full. Such a consummation is devoutly wished for. That record we would like to make of one presiding elder's district in Southern Methodism. If there be failure anywhere, it will not be chargeable to John T. Sawyer, the intrepid and indefatigable young leader of our Israel in that growing section. He has under him a faithful, loyal band of itinerants burdened with the work of souls and zealous for the honor and purity of our beloved church.

President Adams was accorded the courtesies of the Conference and the opportunity of representing the interests of Centenary College, which he did in a most effective address. A resolution was unanimously passed endorsing the college, commending the president and pledging more active and generous patronage of that historic, honored Methodist seat of learning.

Presiding Elder Sawyer called upon the congregation for contributions to the endowment fund of Centenary College, and raised one hundred and fifty dollars. This District Conference gave to the same cause last year nearly twelve hundred dollars. Now is the time for the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana to push this endowment, and thereby emulate the loyal liberality of old Virginia to Randolph-Macon.

The Committee on Periodical Literature reported through its accomplished chairman, Col. Alexander, president of Minden Female College, and gave this ADVOCATE an unreserved endorsement. For the adoption of that report and the kindly expressions of individual members we are most grateful. The servant of the church labors with a more willing mind and fervent zeal when assured that he has the confidence of his constituency and is meeting their expectations. The Conference attended patiently to an exhortation on the importance of circulating our church literature, and invited us to come again.

Saturday morning was devoted to the Sunday-school cause, and the schools from Monroe to Minden were invited to be present. There was an immense attendance and a most enjoyable day. An elaborate programme had been arranged, providing for addresses on selected subjects and much choice music. The report on Sunday-schools was read by Rev. C. B. Godfrey, showing marked progress throughout the district. Nineteen schools had been organized, and there had been an increase of 293 scholars. Thirty-one schools continue during the entire year without hibernation or vacation.

In the afternoon a number of reports were read, one of which elicited a spirited discussion. Rev. J. J. Billingsley was chairman of the Committee on Temperance, and presented an elaborate, well-written report. It arraigned the dreadful curse of the land and proposed some aggressive action on the part of the church. After an amendment it was heartily adopted. That sentiment is alive in North Louisiana, and, sooner or later, will sweep the entire State.

The town of Ruston has sprung up like magic, and has every expression of solid growth. The leading merchants are replacing their temporary buildings with spacious brick stores, while others are moving in from week to week. Some of the private residences are quite handsome and beautifully furnished. The skillful, tasteful hand of the cultured woman is seen in the yards and flower gardens—all evidencing the fact that Ruston is to be a place of social and commercial importance. A large academy building has been erected and a fine school projected. The first term was successful, and the prospects are most flattering. The new Methodist Church, the only temple of worship in the town, is of Gothic architecture and is a thing of beauty. It has been built at a cost of about three thousand dollars, and is a worthy monument to the enterprise of our Methodist congregation. It is furnished throughout with carpets, chandeliers, chancel, and has the exceptional recommendation of comfortable pews. This is quite a Methodist town. A large proportion of the business men are members of the church, and intend, if possible, to make Ruston a station next year. We understood also that they would claim the privilege, after Baton Rouge, of entertaining the next Annual Conference, and we hereby pledge that it will be done in princely style. Rev. J. H. Stone, the excellent pastor and able preacher, has favor with his people and has done a superb work.

Within four miles of Ruston is the old town of Vienna. It has suffered the fate of all places off the great iron railways. In the age of rapid transit and feverish progress no town can live four miles from the railroad. Vienna, however, may have a history for many years. It has been discovered that beneath its hills are the richest iron deposits in North Louisiana. If so, furnaces and foundries may take the place of merchantile houses, and the glory of the new town be greater than the former.

We had the pleasure on Sunday morning of setting apart the new house of worship "from all unholy or common uses." The sermon was preached to a vast congregation that crowded the church to its utmost capacity. With thanks for many courtesies and one of the most delightful visits of the year, we started homeward on Monday morning at half-past ten o'clock.

Nothing interests us more than the every-day home life of great men. We want to know how the quiet hours are spent away from public gaze. In those scenes we may discover the secret of their greatness or else see the side of their humanness—their sympathy with the common experiences of ordinary people. We, therefore, take pleasure in reproducing an extract from a letter to the Christian at Work written by Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, giving an account of a visit to Mr. Spurgeon, the great London preacher:

"Last Saturday afternoon I drove down into the south-eastern end of London, to take supper with my old friend, Mr. Spurgeon. My hospitable host, Rev. Newman Hall, and his good wife accompanied me. It is a twelve-mile drive and more from this pleasant summit of Hempstead Hill clear across London to Norwood—near the Crystal Palace—where Mr. Spurgeon resides. He has a lovely villa, called 'Westwood,' surrounded by about twenty acres of lawn, garden, grove and meadow. It would attract attention by its beauty even at Tarrytown or Irvington. Mr. Spurgeon purchased it at a great bargain, and his one earthly luxury is this charming home. He has well earned it, and long may he enjoy it. He met us in his hearty, genial way, and we were soon out on the lawn, enjoying the views, and listening to his inexhaustible flow of racy talk. As he was picking raspberries with us in his garden he stopped to tell a good story or to give a fresh Scripture interpretation, or to let off a pun. Certainly, with his sallow complexion and short, squatly figure, his physique is anything but imposing; but when his rich voice begins to pour forth rich things out of his big, sympathetic heart, then his plain face becomes positively handsome. The longer I know him, the more I love him. He tells me that he has abandoned a meat diet, and lives entirely on fish, vegetable and farina-cereal food; and he does not suffer from gout and neuralgia as badly as he once did. He and his noble wife are both zealous teetotallers."

The Undertow.

This term is quite familiar to people who live near the sea, or who visit it during the bathing season. It is not unfrequently happens that when the tide is setting high and strong shoreward upon and near the surface, there is below an equally strong current going seaward. This is the undertow. Inexperienced persons are often caught by it in bathing and are carried in spite of their efforts out into the deep water and drowned before help can reach them. A few years ago one of Mississippi's loveliest daughters lost her life in this way. Sometimes it is thought by parties ignorant of the truth that some sea monster, like the shark or octopus, catches and drags away his victim. But it is rarely anything but the undertow, and the inexperienced or unwary are warned not to venture alone too far out.

Let us not forget that the sea is not the only place where man encounters the undertow. Life's waters are all shallow where it does not act most powerfully upon human destiny. In no business or pleasure does man go far enough to take his full measure in body, mind or soul but that he meets and struggles with the undertow. The swell of the tide landward—that is, toward the affairs and hopes of this life—le all upon the surface. Mighty and vast as seem its successes, they but break in spray upon the rocks or die in foam on the strand; but it requires a boundless stretch of fathomless sea to give them birth, and he who has caught their spirit or import feels the relentless drawing of immortality's mighty undertow.

But to change the point of aspect—The world in which man lives is bounded upon one side by the aesthetic and pleasurable. Beauty and grandeur meet us at every turn in life. Paradoxical as it may seem, yet the actual in creation everywhere exceeds the conceivable. Philosophers have at last begun to learn that even life's phenomena transcend conception. Along the beach of an ocean, whose known limits furnish symbols of grandeur too vast to be realized at one glance, man goes out upon a yachting or swimming excursion. All the waves of enjoyment roll seaward. For him the vast ocean was made. Its harmonies of sound and motion of light and sensation seem but parts of the mighty arrangement for his delectation. For him waves roll and winds blow. The sea of pleasure, the grander it swells, only washes farther landward. So man reasons. The more God seems to bless in earthly condition, the more man looks upon this world as his abiding-place, and the deeper he dives into its plans and expectations. But soon he is caught by the undertow. Ere he knows he discovers that he is drifting out. "Like the wanton boys that swim on bladders," he is caught by the rude waves that resistlessly and relentlessly bear him out of sight of land forever.

The undertow of business seizes upon men who at first used business merely to provide things needful. Strength, skill, courage, fidelity upon their part made them strong swimmers upon the business whirlpool. Such men are called for frequently to save life. The weak, the timid, the unskilled are ready to elude and are crying for help. Who can save them but strong men, skillful men, brave men? Honor and humanity urge from within; helplessness and distress plead from without. "Rescue the perishing!" Strongly, boldly, grandly, they strike out. The waves, part as by magic as they rush to the rescue. Breathless the world looks on until a strong hand grasps the sinking man and the swimmer turns landward. A shout of applause greets him. But look! He seems to founder as if struck and stunned. How he struggles! Has the rescued clutched him? No; but the undertow—the outgoing, deep-rushing tide—has caught him and plunges with him down the throat of Charybdis. A strong business man is he who can heed the cries for help around him and yet save himself from bankruptcy.

The foregoing fact furnishes the thought of the moral and spiritual undertow in the business world. Prudence dictates, "Every man take care of himself." The rich man becomes selfish by over-prudence, and vice versa. To die rich himself he must be content to see his friends die poor. His howls of compassion must be closed. His public zeal must be smothered. He must plead inability. He must become a coward and a hollow hypocrite. He must deny himself the luxury of costly virtue and live upon the dry husks of a stony continence that evokes the hearty contempt of swine. It is here that many a prudent and otherwise conscientious man is caught by the undertow of covetousness—that huge devil fish that festers the harbor of this world's busiest and grandest cities. The law of self-preservation carried to an extreme is self-destruction. The words of Jesus ring out defiant of the fearful fact of the existence of the undertow—"Launch out into the deep." "Whoever will save his life shall lose it; he that loseth for my sake, or humanity's sake, 'shall save it.'"

Paul found the strong undertow in the seeds of sin that inhered in his fallen nature. "When I would do good evil is present with me." A peculiarity of the undertow in the sea has its counterpart in man, viz: The rough exterior does not indicate where it is most dangerous, but where it seems to be smooth and placid, gently eddying and tempting dalliance. One who has repressed his passions into temporary submission—who has allied them to him as David did the sons of Zeruliah—at last finds that they are too hard for him. The wild steed never fully forgets his freedom. At an unthought moment he seizes the bit in his teeth and rushes madly with his rider to ruin.

Another fact is that the undertow lies coiler than the surface flow. Men's muscles become cramped and numb. Use being lost to his limbs, man sees himself carried against his will as if bound. So the undertow of spiritual life. It is always chilling. It ever rushes from light and warmth. Its strength is always harmful. Even where we can find bottom and stand, the benumbing influences of our surroundings send a shudder to the fountain of life. This benumbing may pass the bounds of nervous sensation; but knowledge then becomes but a memory, and memory is soon jeered as a dream of the past. Lost to our own feelings, we can not sympathize with others, and we soon grow skeptical as to their reality. Dead as to sensation or emotion, we soon charge those who manifest feeling with counterfeiting and hypocrisy. Moral and spiritual paralysis soon follows, and where we once moved as human we now stand as statue petrified in the chilling current of the undertow of doubt and unbelief.

I would call attention to the undertow that endangers church power and life. There is a landward flow on the surface of all Divine providences. In spite of the hate and opposition of the world every advance in art, science and industry contributes to the advance of the material interests of the church, while every error, adversity and disaster to men's temporal fortunes injure to their spiritual development. Christianity is like a tree whose fibers are toughened by winter's storms, and whose roots grow deeper and wider with summer's heat. "The wrath of man is made to praise God," and his willing service is blessed of him a thousandfold. So, whether the swell be smooth or rough, the shoreward tide seems ever to work for good to the church. But we must look below the surface to find the undertow. We often see an enterprise when small prospering in a wonderful manner. We say God has blessed it. Then we enlarge. Everything comes to a standstill. Our hopes and our prophecies perish. What is the matter? Only the undertow. Our large craft draws ten feet where our small one drew ten fathoms. The counter-currents bring our large craft to a stand, and if it has been made still larger, it is drawn seaward and lost. It is then necessary to increase the driving power. A stronger hand must seize the wheel, a more skillful one must attend the valves. Stronger masts must be prepared for greater sails, and larger cables hold the anchors. The old must go, not because they were always useless, but now in the changed condition of things they would be absolutely dangerous. Methodism, with its light craft and small crew, one hundred years ago could sail landward in safety where now, if no new appliances were in reach, she would drift out to sea and unmanageable ark laden with a world's life, but with its helm gone and its hatchways unsealed of God.

Themes for Thought.

BY REV. J. B. A. AHNES, D. D.

"If there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think of these things."

Many think not. Their instincts, their inclination or disinclination, their love or hate, constitute their guiding star. They are but little superior to the brute creation. The instinctive enhancement of our personal interests, together with the ferment of our passions, are purely animal action. Where this action ceases thought commences. Thought requires observation, examination, investigation; it requires to weigh and measure matters and men, to deduce inference, arrive at a conclusion.

But even many thinkers are not occupied with themes, pertinent and wholesome. Much is made the subject of thought which affects the thinker injuriously. Our diet regulates our corporal condition. Bad diet gives bad blood; good diet, good blood. Even so do our cogitations, our thoughts, give to our character its constituent elements. I will not assert that man is in every instance what he thinks; but it can not be gainsaid that we will soon be what we think. Our thoughts give tone and shape to our life, distinctive traits to our character. But the character is the man.

What do we think? The apostle admonishes: "If there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think of these things." But the reverse of this is the almost general practice. If there be any vice, if there be any denunciation, of these men think. In regard to the business world, we dwell with morbid avidity on the many bankruptcies, fraudulent practices and individual losses. True, there are rogues; but there are, at the same time, thousands of honest men of affairs who employ only fair means in dealing with their fellows. Indeed, men would be in a pitiable condition if they were generally so mean and villainous as many suppose. Mobocracy would be inevitable. But no. Those who are loudest with the asseveration of general corruption are those who have nothing to do because they are distrusted. Dishonesty may sometimes go unpunished; generally it meets its just desert. Success—true, permanent success—achieve only the honest, industrious and faithful men. Those who wreck usually wreck on the reefs of their own wicked practices.

We should not allow our thoughts to be occupied with wholesale denunciation and defamation. To do so discourages, emasculates, makes us feel mean, makes us mean. Think the vast number of honest and prosperous people. They thrive, develop, are blessed and are a blessing to the fellows. Much prosperity, much improvement. Of course, in this world of changing moose changes are inevitable. The collapse of some is necessary to furnish building material to others.

In social life, too, the ugly features are prominently paraded. There may be cases where husband and wife are bent on strife and war; but who will deny the existence of innumerable happy couples whose life is one of unclouded peace, whose homes are unimpaired Eden, where both parties have the good sense both to bear and to forbear? And there you find an incorrigible child; but there are also willows, our progeny who give to their parents unsullied pleasure. They are obedient, affectionate, good. Where you find one hoodlum you discover thousands of gentlemanly young men for one sluggard, spendthrift, fop, dunder head can show you a large number of young men on whom not only the parents, but all well-disposed people look with pride. At the same time there is much virtue, purity, devotion manifest among the fair sex. What though some are consumed by some unexplained contagion, and cease to shine, still the horizon is decked with bright luminaries, pure, bright, lovely and sweet!

In matters of religion this same is noticeable: to see and think of only the censurable. Numerous are the true and devoted children of God, numerous are the consecrated men of God who preach the riches of his grace. What though there be hypocrites discovered now and then, the prayerless may lust that pray is woefully neglected. Nevertheless even now the eye of God rests with great pleasure on many because of their fervent devotion. The Bible, too, is more frequently read than those who neglect it would make us believe. All Christian duties are more generally and fully performed than our Pharisaical "hangmen" will allow. Though there is lessin- gerly, there is lack of charity occa- sionally, as a rule, many of those who profess Christ love and serve him truly, and have also learned to weep with them that weep.

With reference to your church, your preacher, fellow church mem- ber, your wife, daughter, son, your neighbor, if there be any praise, think of it. Think of it; nor be afraid that its communication could possibly injure anybody.

Happy would we be, life would ac- quire additional charms, if we were less censorious and more given to lauding the laudable. Praise, wisely bestowed, is a cordial to every heart. Be to the wretched, giving currency to the wretched and making every- body wretched. "If there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think of these things."

From Vicksburg District.

The Vicksburg District Conference was this year pleasant and edifying. The attendance was a fair average as to number, the entertainment was cordial and comfortable and the preaching was such as it makes people better to hear. The Sunday- school Conference was highly interest- ing to me, and I very much regret- ted that for lack of time all the brethren could not be heard on the topics selected for discussion. Though we had some very exciting subjects under review, there was not a cutting remark nor a harsh word uttered during the session. I heard a preacher once say that on his first introduction to an Annual Confer- ence he heard such words and saw such clenching of fists and such movements of brethren toward each other that he seriously thought of abandoning all idea of seeking con- nection with the body. Yet there are those who fail to see that the church and the ministry are growing in grace.

At Vicksburg I found the church remarkably revived and the young people professing godliness of the active kind. They assemble in religious meetings led by some of themselves, and occasionally meet in social gatherings without thinking of dancing because they find some- thing better to employ them, such as conversation, singing and reading original or other literary productions. I even felt at liberty to proclaim, "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and the Lord would put his Spirit upon them!" The church building is not satisfac- tory; but time, wisdom and grace—especially the grace of liberal- ity—must solve the difficulties in the way of improvement. The city is growing and improving in many respects, and the pastor has not been slow to perceive the need of church work in South Vicksburg, but has already set on foot a hopeful church enterprise in that quarter.

From Vicksburg by rail to Bovina, and thence to Beechland, accom- panied by my wife, in Bro. Young's carriage, with a careful driver and two strong mules, was a part of the bluer life which only a Methodist preacher and his wife can adequately appreciate. At Beechland the gospel did not fail of its effect, and three applied for membership in the church. The pastor will receive them when satisfied that they are spiritually prepared to assume the vows of church membership.

Of the home of Bro. Young and the comforts provided for itinerants there, it might move envy in other's bosoms for me to tell; hence I for- bear. Through his kindness we were conveyed to Wesley Chapel, in Yazoo county, and found a home for a season with Rev. J. B. Hollo- man and family, where we were quarantined during the yellow fever epidemic of 1878. At Wesley the pastor and I preached for five days, sowing, we trust, good seed that may bring forth fruit in coming time.

Crops are wonderfully fine in Warren and in Yazoo. Cotton seemed to be outdoing itself. The seasons and their accompaniments have up to date been unusually favorable. No overflow, no carbon, no gnats, no drought, no worms—indeed, nothing to hinder the cultivation or mar the growth of crops. Yet after leaving Yazoo, and crossing Big Black river, I saw some poor crops injured by rust and good ones wasting from rot. This lands round about Jackson, Miss., have been starved almost to death by selling off the cotton seed and by inadequate cultivation since the last war.

This fruit crop—especially the peach—is abundant, and much of it fine. At Bro. Holloman's I saw apples from twelve to sixteen inches in circumference. They grow in clusters till they push each other off the stem. It is a delicious apple, with almost no core, and took the premium at the New Orleans Expon- sition. Bro. Holloman's peach orchard is a treasure—good for the eyes and for the health. Bro. Bell, near Bentonla, raised superior peaches from the seed of grafts, and had some that weighed over a pound each. Bro. Howard has a pindar over five feet across—i. e., the plant.

I have been able to do more preach- ing this summer than ever before, partly, I think, because of the lessening of the physical labors of traveling through the facilities afforded by railroads. The Yazoo road is well equipped; but makes no close con- nections. The Natchez and Jackson road makes connection with the Meridian train at Jackson, and perfect connections every way at Harrison, where it intersects the Shreveport, New Orleans and Texas railway, enabling passengers to go any one of four directions that may be desired. The trains on the "Little J." as it is called, move with an interesting energy, shooting around curves and dashing up grades and down with a vigorous dash that is in novel contrast with the heavy dignity of the trains on broad gauge roads. There is a gospel in railroads, and the preachers are the men to get it out of them. W. L. C. II.

From Acadia, La.

The State Prohibition Convention met at Shreveport, and did its work, and now the Executive Committee must proceed to have every parish in the State organized and voting as speedily as possible, in which work they look for the co-operation and hearty support of the best men of all parties, creeds and colors.

At Pine Grove, nine miles north of Minden, we held the third Quarterly Conference for the Brushwood cir- cuit. The church building at that point is one of the very best in the entire district. Though not a costly structure, it is very neat and well built—there not being discoverable in it any of that hasty, slipshod work that is seen in so many country churches. There was a fine collec- tion taken Sunday morning for the purpose of realizing the Conference assessments for foreign missions, church extension, etc. The pastor, Rev. C. W. Hodge, protracts the meeting with promise of success.

August 24, 1885.

All Along the Line.

Writing up the session of the Montana Conference, a correspondent says: "All the collections were more than full." Keep this up, brethren. Let this sentence be written at the close of each Annual Conference, and the treasurer of our Board will have a balance to his credit by the first day of next February.

FIRST RESPONSE—CHEERING.

Yours of the 17th inst., just to hand, urging me to see that full assessments for foreign missions be collected from each pastoral charge in my district. In reply I will say you may expect full assessments from each charge. Already in several of the charges the amount sub- scribed exceeds the assessment. The preachers are now beginning to press this claim.

V. V. HARRIS, CHAIRMAN, AUGUST 11, 1885.

SECOND RESPONSE.

Yours inquiring and exhorting to fullness for our foreign mission fund quota of this charge received, and reply by return mail: "Old Guard never surrenders." Danville is full—always full—full now.

Truly yours, H. H. PEARCE, Pastor.

THIRD RESPONSE.

I am looking to see if there will not be a magnificent increase in the contributions for missions in that large and central territory touched by Alabama, Tennessee, Missouri, Ken- tucky, Mississippi, and Texas, by Rev. Sam Jones.

PENDING ELDER.

Where I have called for contribu- tions for foreign missions at my quarterly and camp meetings, more than enough has been pledged to meet assessments; and we hope that will be the case throughout the con- nection.

H. S. T.

FIFTH RESPONSE.

I travel a circuit in the burned dis- trict of Sumner county, Tenn.; but my assessment for foreign missions is all pledged, and more. I have tried and succeeded. You can bank on Sandersville. Hurry up, brethren! The Board and the mission- aries will be established triumphantly.

H. B. BLUE.

Remember, we are collecting money now to pay the appropria- tions of the Board of Missions for the support of our foreign mission- aries—regular appropriations made at the annual meetings. The sec-tary, the treasurer, the "Local Board," have no right to create any indebtedness, nor have they done so. R. A. YOUNG.

Like People, Like Officers.

Your leader in the ADVOCATE for August 27, "Reflections at a Political Convention," is an admirable paper, well suited to the times. In that article you say, "In civil as well as ecclesiastical affairs the old maxim is true, 'Like priest, like people.'" The reflections you draw from this are true, and they are in harmony with the word of God; but the maxim, as you quote it, seems to throw the whole responsibility upon the priest. If you had quoted the oldest edition of this maxim it would have made your reflections more forcible than they are. "Like people, like priest," I quote from Hosea iv, 9. The whole of this chapter would be profitable reading in most political conventions and in all legis- lative assemblies.

You say, "The country is typed by its public officers." Why? Are the public officers responsible for the moral tone of the country, or is the moral tone of the country the reason why immoral men are put in office? "Like people, like priest." The people are always blaming the priest, the public officer, but the public officers are just what the people make them. The people are not the crea- ture of the officer, but the officer is the creature of the people. They make him. Ezekiel v, 31, says, "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." If the people were not corrupt, there would be no corrupt rulers in this country. You got the right moral out of the old maxim, but you got the maxim wrong end foremost.

OILDEROY.

The Right Sentiment.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed I send you a letter clipped from The Century Magazine, for August. Mississippi ought to feel honored in having such honorable Christian mis- sionaries as this honorable Christian sentiment to emanate from one of her noble women. Our people must take hold of this work. Paine Institute is seeking to foster and build up just such a Christian sentiment; but at times there is nothing for us to stand upon but the naked word. At this time not a dollar in the treasury, and not a dollar to pay our teachers for the past month.

Brethren, please help. Send to me by draft or money order, 31 South Broad, Atlanta, Ga.

W. C. DUNLAP, Commissioner.

CHILDREN'S BIBLE.—Messrs. Cas- sell & Co., of New York, have issued a new edition of their Children's Bible at about one-half the cost of the English edition. This volume is beautifully illustrated and elegantly bound, the type is large and clear, and the material throughout is of the best. The work is in story form, each story illustrated and in Bible language, word for word; therefore giving no false impression to the little reader as to the use of the Bible for little people, but rather showing that it is for them, from Genesis to Revelation. The book is sold by subscription only. Price, half morocco, $4.50; full morocco, $5.50; extra (in box), $6.50. We will receive all orders within the State of Louisiana.

CARVER & JAMIESON.

Thousands of the best housekeepers in this country say of James Pyle's Pearlina, "It is a necessity in our kitchen, laundry, and for household use." The seasons of experience prompts us to say a word in favor of it. The annual consumption of Pearlina alone is proof of its utility, and we know that we are saying a word in a good cause, when we advise every one to try Pearlina. It reduces the toil and laundry of a woman's household work by one-half, and is harmless to hands or fabric. Another proof of its merits is the numerous imitations of it. Beware of them, they are dangerous.

MAKE CHRIST THE THEME.—Make Christ the theme of the prayer-meeting. There is no other magnet that can draw the people, and he always draws. Every such gathering there are burdened hearts, anxious hearts, tempted hearts, and only as they find Jesus in his fellowship will the burdens grow light, and peace drive away fear. In every such circles there are believers who are following afar off, who have lost the glow of the birth-hour, and it is vain to try to win them back, and warm their hearts by scolding and warning. But let every moment of the hour be fragrant with the love of a living Jesus; let burning lips tell of his faithfulness and power; let the prayers be love-whispers into his ear; let the song be of cleansing blood and the promises, and every heart will be moved and warmed, and the place will seem like the very "Gate of Heaven." Such prayer-meetings will never be satisfied by the seasons, for it will become a necessity to each believer's life, as the daily meal is a necessity to the physical; and in summer as in winter the place will be thronged, the power of the Holy Ghost will be felt, and every depart- ment of the church life will be consoli- dated and carried forward to grand results, and this weekly fellowship with Christ, and this reunion of hearts in the be- loved.—Observer.

If you trust before you try, you may repent before you die.

WERLEIN'S PIANOS.—Probably no piano house in the city has met with more success than that of Mr. Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street. In the conduct of his extensive business, Mr. Werlein has ever had in view the excellence of the grade of article he sells, together with economy for the purchaser. In this way he has established himself well in popularity, and thousands recognize in him the medium through which they have been enabled to secure a good piano at the lowest monthly pay- ment and most accommodating terms. Mr. Werlein has won for himself a reputation of which he may justly be proud, as the extensive sale of the world renowned "Mathushek Piano." Mr. Werlein has also a number of second-hand Pianos in thorough order, at very low prices. Good second-hand Pianos as low as $50, and brand new Pianos at $125. For a full list of Old Pianos in made a specialty. The repairs are thoroughly renewed, and the Cases polished by an experienced polisher, looking as good as new, at very low prices. Obituaries.

SPARKMAN-DEMPSEY SPARKMAN was born in Gates county, North Carolina, October 23, 1800, and died in Gates county, North Carolina, Miss., Aug. 1, 1885.

Father Sparkman moved from North Carolina to Mississippi in 1848, and settled near Good Hope, on the farm where he died. He was twice married. His last wife being a sister to his first wife (Misses Beaman) both of whom were godly women, being sisters of old Father Beaman, a local preacher who died some years ago. His last wife survives him.

Father Sparkman raised two families of children, many of whom filled honored places in the church, and preceded him to the glory world; and those that survive him, are all in the church, active and useful members, and are following on "in the way their father trod." He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1827, and began at once to officiate in the church, in prayer and class meetings, and soon afterward was licensed to preach, and filled several circuits faithfully. His education, however, being limited, he labored at some disadvantage in his earlier ministry, but a more faithful, humble, godly minister he never knew. After he moved to Mississippi he remained local, but was not silent, for he was a pillar in the church, and continued to preach and labor for the Master until old age came on, and he was no longer able to preach; but even then he would fill his seat in the church, and by his presence, prayers and prayers, encourage the laborers in the Master's vineyard. He was one of the first tenters at old Good Hope Camp Ground, and up to his last affliction, was a blessing to the church and the community at that place. His house was always the place of prayer, and the writer has spent many happy and profitable hours around his bedside. He not only professed religion, but he lived religion and talked religion, and to be in his company was a feast to the soul.

It is hardly necessary to speak of the life of such a life. Suffice it to say, he was "peace." Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. He suffered long, being confined to his bed for nearly a year, and to the house for nearly two years, before his death; but he bore his affliction patiently; often spoke of death, and expressed himself ready, and on the holy Sabbath morning of August 2, God took his spirit up among the angels; and on Monday, at the family residence, this writer preached a funeral discourse to his memory in the presence of a large concourse of his neighbors and friends, who afterward followed his remains to the graveyard and laid them away till the "resurrection morn." After returning to the family residence, I was told by his children that nearly a year ago he dreamed that he died, and was preaching his own funeral from the identical text that I used in the funeral discourse. Who can explain this?

IRVIN MILLER.

MONZINGO.—Our dear brother, Louis Monzingo, a member of our church at Pleasant Valley, in Webster parish, La., died July 10, 1885, after an illness of forty consecutive days. Bro. Monzingo was the son of Henry Monzingo and Narcissa Alcock; was born in Louisiana county, Ga., March 10, 1834; removed with his parents to Louisiana in 1849; was married to Miss Rocco Smith in 1860, and after her death was married again, in 1870, to Mrs. Amanda Crowne (nee O'Neal). Bro. Monzingo joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. Robert H. Kellie, in 1852, and from then his last hours enjoyed the full confidence of his brethren as a worthy and devoted member of the family of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is said of him that he kept the rules of the church.

He was quiet and reserved in his nature, but ever ready to do what he perceived to be his duty as a citizen, neighbor and Christian. I think he enjoyed much religion. To visit him while suffering in his last illness was a relief of grace to anyone; his religious and recognition was so marked, he was happy notwithstanding his sufferings, and would frequently get shouting happy. When he came to die he was calm and deliberate just like fitting up for a journey, giving advice to his family and friends and expressing joy and delight that he was so soon to see home forever. Of course he died well. It is useless for me to add that such a man was a good husband and father. He leaves a widow and four children to battle alone in the world, but thank God for his example in heaven and for such bright testimony as they have of his eternal reward above. May the Lord bless his family.

M. M. LOCKETT, Pastor.

ANDERSON.—Died at his residence in Jones county, Miss., June 18, 1885, Miss Virginia Anderson, the wife of George Anderson. She was the daughter of Mr. T. N. and Mrs. S. J. Holloman. She was born in Barber county, Ala., in 1826 and in 1858 her parents moved to Washington county, Ala., where she remained until 1873, during which time she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of sixteen, and professed religion about the same time and continued to live a pious and orderly member until her death. She moved to Jones county, Miss., with her mother, in 1879, and was married in 1881. She was a devoted wife, a loving and dutiful child. Her last illness was short and severe, and her death was a glorious triumph over the Christian faith. She never murmured or complained that she had to be better than in her own words. Being asked by her mother the day before her death if she was willing to die, she replied: "Yes, mamma, the Lord's will be done. I am going right to the arms of Jesus. It is true I hate to leave you all, but I will be much holier off than then you are." She asked us all to pray for her, and made her mother and sisters and husband promise to meet her in heaven. She also asked her friends present to join in the promise. She said, "I have no fears of death at all, and I am going straight to the right hand of God." She requested us to take good care of her babe; gave all the family a farewell kiss, and toward the last she called for the family physician, Dr. Pool, and inquired how much longer she would have to wait. She then folded her hands and said, "that she would wait the Lord's will."

R. J. TAYLOR.

BIRD.—WILLIAMSON BIRD, son of Rev. Williamson Bird, was born near Crawfordsville, Ga., January 8, 1811, and died in Union parish, La., May 17, 1885. He professed religion at the age of nineteen years, at a camp meeting held by his father and Dr. Lovick Pierce. I believe at the time he professed religion he was going to school to his father, Alex. Stephens was his classmate, of whom I have heard him often speak with the greatest respect, and tell how they had to strive to get an education. I was at the home of Bro. Bird when he heard of the death of his friend and classmate. His remarks were about this effect: "Well, a good and great statesman has fallen, and I shall soon follow," and so he did.

What year Bro. Bird moved to Louisiana and settled in Union parish, I have not the date, but I think it was in 1843 or 1844. Bro. Bird was no ordinary man; possessed of a fine education, and that sanctified by the grace of God. He was a useful man in his neighborhood, and do where more so than in the church. Possessed of means and a comfortable home, his house was always open to receive the weary traveler, as many of the preachers of the Louisiana Conference can testify. He filled the position of steward, trustee and class leader, and was always willing to do anything the church asked of him; and though naturally timid, he felt it a great privilege to do anything for the good of the church and glory of God. Bro. Bird was an old-time Methodist of the days of class meeting and prayer meeting, when every one who joined the church was expected to lead in prayer and give his experience at the love feast. He believed in experimental religion, and said the reason some Christians did not enjoy religion was because of their failure to use the means of grace, that they might grow thereby.

As Bro. Bird's pastor for two years, I was at his house often, and often a week at a time, for he was always glad to see his pastor and have him in study with him. He often would say, "I am never ever lost anything by the stay of the minister, for a long observation had taught him that the families where the minister stayed most, had the best children and seemed to prosper most. Such a life could but end well. I remember to have been at his house last year, when one of his family seemed to be impatient in reference to some worldly affairs. His reproach was: "I can not help it now; we have got enough to live on until we die. All we have got to do now is to be ready to die, and this I hope to be by the grace of God."

Bro. Bird was visited by many of his friends and talked to on the subject of death. His disease was dropsy of the heart, and for more than six weeks his aged companion and friends had to sit by his bed and fan his face, as he could not lie down; yet his suffering was not great, only a sense of suffocation. To all he expressed perfect confidence in his Savior.

I have often thought of Bro. Bird since his death, and in my imagination I have seen him sweeping through the clouds with his robe washed in the blood of his Savior.

Loved ones, weep not, husband and father is not dead, "but sleepeth." The Savior speaks to you as he did to the sorrowing disciples, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. Your loved one has passed on before, so you may follow on to join him in our Father's house."

Our prayer is that his aged companion and children may ever live as the one who has gone on before, till all meet in heaven.

J. M. JOHNSTON.

ELLIS-GEORGE ELLIS was born in the State of Louisiana, October 7, 1807, and died at Union, Miss., March 18, 1885. His parents moved to Mississippi when he was but a child. In the year 1833 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Wade, and the next year settled at the place in Hinds county where he made his home for more than forty years. He was not a roving spirit. Settled in fact, in fancy and in conduct, he was a thrifty man and a useful citizen, one who might be depended upon in all the relations of life. Faithful to duty and wise in counsel, he was several times selected to represent his fellow-citizens in the legislature of the State. On July 27, 1882, he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and lived a consistent, communicant thereof the remainder of his life. He was a man of great gentleness and decision of character, and withal a staunch friend of the church and a liberal supporter of its institutions. His house was the preacher's home, where welcome and comfort were ever found. He was the chief builder and liberal supporter of Tabernacle Church, which stood near his old home. He was also one of the founders of Hennington Camp Ground and a stockholder thereof.

As the infirmities of age were creeping upon him, he removed, a short while before his death, to the town of Union to spend the closing years of his life with his son, Dr. G. H. Ellis, who was residing in that place. Early in March of the present year he attended the Quarterly Conference in Union on Saturday, but on Sunday was in his bed with a violent attack of pneumonia, from which he never recovered. He was a kind father, a faithful husband and a devoted Christian. In patient suffering he closed a useful life and lived, even a peaceful death. The memories of the faithful dead should be treasured in the hearts of the living. They need no eulogy from us. Their record is on high. May the mantle of this good man's soul for the cause of God fall upon his surviving son, and may the surviving companion of his life find the consolations of God's grace abundant and sweet amid the infirmities of age and the loneliness of widowhood.

WHITEMAN.—Tis with a sad heart I send you this notice of the terrible death of my little grandson, MACKIE, aged seven years and three months, son of Dr. J. M. Whiteman and Sallie son of Dr. J. M. Whiteman. About five o'clock Saturday evening, August 1, he and his little brother thought they would make a fire in the stove, and attempt to kindle it with hot oil when the gas exploded, knocking him down and burning him fearfully. The concussion caused a violent hemorrhage from the lungs. He lingered a few hours and then passed quietly away, leaving a desolate home and mourning hearts. But we know 'tis well with the child. Galveston Advocate please copy.

WOOD.—"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Union Hixes, a dear little boy of eighteen months, son of W. H. and R. S. Wood, of Amitee county, Miss., obeyed this call on August 10, 1885; and though there was much "forbidding" by parental affection, the sympathy and effort of friends, and medical skill, yet he went—went directly to Jesus. The jewel is dislodged and the casket awaits, in sleeping dust, another bidding. The casket will as certainly obey the call as did the jewel, and then redemption will be complete. Of the sweet splendor, the unspeakable joy of this final issue, in the reunion of the loved and left with the gone before "in the sweet bye and bye, on the beautiful shore."

HARVEY.—Tribute of respect by the Fannin Sabbath-school, Rankin county, Miss. At a regular meeting of the Fannin Sunday-school, August 9, 1885, the following resolution was adopted: "Whereas, it has pleased God in his providence to remove from our midst, by death, little FRANK HARVEY, one of our most zealous little scholars, to his rest in heaven; therefore, be it

Resolved, That, while we how with submission to the will of God in this affliction, we feel assured that the Sabbath-school as well as his father, mother, brothers and sisters, have sustained a great loss; and that we, as members of the Sabbath-school, deeply deplore our loss, and feel that God has drawn very near the family by his death, saying: "He is also ready."

Resolved, That we tender to the family our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement, trusting that God will take special care of them in their affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, and a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and a copy be sent to the family.

KING.—Died near Kosciusko, Miss., July 4, 1885, GEORGE D. KING, aged twenty-four years, son of Shadrack and Priella King. By request it becomes my painful task to write the sad intelligence to the many friends and relatives who read your valuable paper throughout the State of Mississippi. The disease which produced the final result preyed upon his constitution for sixty-five days; yet through all this pain and suffering, he showed that same cheerful disposition and fortitude which had characterized his whole life, and we were in the efforts of good physicians, as well as the multitude of friends and relatives that came and went. All hoped and prayed that that young man might be spared; but the hour had come, and dissolution must take place. "Dolphus" was my youthful companion, and a true and noble friend. Though separated for the last ten years, yet, in my imagination, I see him by my side. Could Jonathan have loved David more? "My soul was knit with his, and I loved him as my own soul." Dolphus was one of the best of boys, blessed with having religious parents and grandparents. In such an atmosphere it would be hard for him to go wrong. He often sacrificed his own pleasure to administer to the sufferings of a father who was wounded in the war. Having commenced life well, he ended it well, and as a true and noble Christian, he was a bright and shining light in the community where he resided. Of course, I am informed he wanted to live—that was natural. Life is a boon, a gift of the Creator, and we are so constituted that we are loath to give it up; but at grace will instruct us, "Thy will, O God, be done." He was just in his young manhood. He had hopes of his recovery, but during his long, long illness, he was willing to abide the decision of his God. His exemplary character had won the love and esteem of all with whom he came in contact, and all were bowed down with sorrow as the sad news was made known to one and another of his many friends. Adolphus is dead. Ah, the tear of sorrow steals down my cheek. Real in peace, my youthful associate. But what must have been the anguish of that mother, the sorrow of that kind father, and the grief of the many relatives and friends who had watched by his bedside in earnest solicitude and desire for his recovery. But his work on earth was done. His short life was ready to be merged into the eternal life beyond, and he was ready to cross over the river and rest on the banks of sweet deliverance. He said he was ready to go. "Ready!" what a beautiful word! "Ready!" only a step and heaven! About leaving the shores of time, he lingered and called loved ones around his bedside, and asked them to meet him in heaven. About the setting of the sun, at the twilight of the evening, when all was hushed and still, he calmly breathed his last and fell asleep, blessed sleep for the righteous. His friends strive to meet him and all our loved ones in heaven, where sorrow, death and parting comes no more.

A WONDERFUL and SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists, who claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons: 1. The chemicals make the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first. 2. The chemicals keep the glasses cold, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye. 3. With these glasses you can read, write or sew all night, the light having no effect on the eye, with no distracting or tiresome sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

Beware of counterfeits—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED. THE MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED. Dealers Supplied Wholesale at Liberal Discount.

ALL EYES SUITED. Persons residing at a distance who may wish to procure fine spectacles, can send for a circular containing description, prices, etc., and directions for insuring a perfect fit, and have them sent by mail, by addressing

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 25.—Charleston was struck by a cyclone this morning and one-fourth of the houses in the city were unroofed. Part of the spires of St. Michael's and St. Matthew's Churches were blown away and the spire of the Episcopal Church was demolished. The Baptist Church was completely unroofed. The Synagogue was also unroofed. The Church Home, in Lawrence street, was badly damaged, and the Avery Institute unroofed. Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church and the chapel of the College were unroofed. The Mount Zion Presbyterian Church was unroofed and badly wrecked. The wharves and warehouses were badly damaged. At Sullivan's Island two steamers are aground and the new Ashley River bridge, in course of construction, was swept away. The vessels which arrived yesterday were wrecked. The telegraph wires are down and there are no cars running. The loss is estimated at $1,000,000. The work of restoration has already begun.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 27.—As the westbound passenger train on the Natchez road was crossing Bayou Platte the engine jumped the track, tearing up seventy feet of the track, and sending the train crashing to the bottom of the bayou, a distance of thirty feet, killing the fireman and engine driver instantly. The tender and a coal car jumped completely over the engine and lies on the west bank of the bayou. The mail car was also derailed, and went through the partitions, burying the mail agent in the wreck. Both the engine and the tender were fatally injured. The smoker followed, crashing through the mail car, and reducing it to splinters. The engine and the passengers in the smoker were hurt, several seriously. The ladder car was derailed, but did not go down with the wreck, and no one on it was injured. The cause of the accident may never be known, but it is probable that the engine was overloaded in death, as the wreck of the bridge is so complete that no evidence remains.

LAWRENCE, Kan., Aug. 29.—The sheriff returned yesterday from Missouri with B. F. Talbott, who was placed in the county jail for horse-stealing committed over a year ago. He was found in the Co. of Cavalry, conducting a series of camp meetings. He is a married man, twenty-eight years of age, very intelligent. He attended Methodist Episcopal University Baldwin City, this county, for four years, up to June, 1884, when he started a team of horses, and sold them in Lawrenceburg, Mo. He then came to Lawrence, Kan., and returning to his home in this county, The sheriff found Talbott holding forth in a colored church at Boydsville, and was obliged to tear him from his congregation to a great excitement, many of the sinners and others tearfully beseeching the officer not to take Brother Talbott.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 20.—John R. Meyer, a well-to-do farmer living near Weishurg, Dearborn county, while in a condition bordering on delirium yesterday, piled the bedding and furniture on the floor of his room, lit, and then mounting a chair on top, in the middle of the room, and aiming himself with a shotgun, had decided to take his imaginary tormentor. When the neighbors rescued him his clothes were burned out and he was otherwise badly burned that he can not work. The house and contents, worth $10,000, were destroyed.

YAZOO CITY, MISS., Aug. 23.—The was discovered about six o'clock morning in the store of Holmes & consuming the building and all stock. The adjoining store of L.
& Sons was damaged to the extent about one thousand dollars, the greater part of the stock being saved, the greatly damaged. The cause of the is unknown.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 23.—The hibition State Executive Comhas sent a communication to the crafc State Executive Committee tending Gov. Hoadley to a discus-with Dr. Leonard, the Prohibition

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—For some past several Mormon missionaries have been laboring with great energy in East of London and have succeeded in making many converts and proselytes in spite of persistent opposition. Last night an infuriated mob invaded the mission premises and took possession of the hall in which the missionaries were speaking. The missionaries were speaking. The mob stormed the platform, and destroyed the furniture in the hall. The most of the furniture in the hall was made a total wreck of everything on the platform. Several of the missionaries were conducting the service.

terribly abused by the mob.
nothing was torn to shreds, were beaten until they were in-ous and almost lifeless. The been sufficient for a cure, and who have been cured by a single bottle. The best restoration of the general health, however prudent, and in every case fatal to cure, if it use is continued doses for a week or two after the blood checked, more especially in long-standing cases. Usually this will not require any aid to keep the good order. Should the patient be a case of catarrh of the middle, after three or four doses of the Tonic, a of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILIAR will be sufficient. Use no other.

Bishop Greu, of the Episcopate of the Church, who is at Sewanee, sent a kind and generous message to Sam Jones at Montevalle. "Tell Brother Jones," he said, "I am anxious to meet him and to hear him, but I am too feeble to come to Montevalle, and therefore, I most cordially invite him, under my own vine and fig tree, to preach under my own auspices, and I sincerely wish him God-speed in his labors of love and pray that God will bless him more and more."

It could not have been because of the day itself, for a more beautiful day—a day more fitted for worshipping God—has seldom come from the womb of time. It was a day to be kept holy. ### Homer District Conference.

Although money has been notably scarce this year, yet I do not remember to have heard "hard times" mentioned even once. The preachers were looking well and very cheerful and hopeful. The laymen all stood square up to business and seemed intent on having everyone his shoulder to the wheel. Reports from the charges, in the main, were good. Gracious revivals in places had been realized. Class and prayer meetings were stressed more than usually. Church and parsonage building was to the front. Pastors had not received much on their salaries, but they seemed less than usually concerned. And why not, backed as they were by such a band of laymen as representatives here showed them to be? The connexional interests were held up prominently, and the general collections will doubtless be ahead of former times. So, all along

 MONTE, LA., Sept. 1, 1885.

Now on the Name—and Then,

To return, however, to the Western brother who calls for a new name because the term "South" is so offensive. He says, "Kansas was once entirely ours, now we hardly have a foothold there." If this brother thinks the word "South" wrought the change, let me correct his mistake here. No, brother, the word "South" did no more in the battle than any other name for our church would have done in like circumstances. The Methodist Episcopal Church, (North,) sent more emigrants into Kansas, thousands more, than the "South" has sent. That church is overrun in nearly every Conference with applicants for membership. Those Conferences abound with talented, well-educated able ministers. Many of these have gone to the West. Then that church has built better houses of worship, made them more attractive and the people naturally drifted that way. Had we been able to send able men all over the West, as we have done to a few places, and built commodious and tasteful churches, the term "South" had never disturbed the nerves of anybody worth receiving into our communion. In this, as in other fields, in an old time, the law of survival has followed.

Look again, "The Methodist Episcopal Church in America." Are we

Dr. McAnnally makes a wise suggestion. It is that each and every Conference shall pass a resolution instructing their delegates that, in case the proposed name be not adopted, they shall be fully empowered to adopt such name as the majority, on a two-thirds vote, shall decide upon. If they will do that, we may end the controversy, otherwise it is likely to survive and outlive the tub that was thrown to the whale. But would that be constitutional?

METHODS.

"Rights and Privileges."

MR. EDITOR: I see by my NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE that all the distress is not on "change of name," but now comes in the loud call for advisers of our Bishops from the laymen. And it is claimed that they have "rights" and claim the privilege of so doing. Of all the advised men in the world I have thought that our Bishops had the least cause of complaint, and that, too, from the laymen. If any brother has attended a session of Conference in these later days and failed to see a goodly number of laymen present, whose business it was to advise the Bishop, then I propose to say he was at least "unarsighted." "Rights and privileges" are claimed by a certain class of women. Whisky sellers are crying out for their rights, etc., but a demand that the laymen be admitted into the cabinet, "legally," is a new proposition. I am for equal "rights and privileges" with all, and submit the following, taking our district to bring out my suggestion: We have sixteen appointments—three stations, twelve circuits and one mission, with equal "rights and privileges." As it now stands, only the presiding elder "legally advises" the Bishop, but each station is entitled to one layman in the cabinet—so far so good. Then each circuit and each church on the circuit is entitled to a fair representation in the matter of advising the Bishop. Say we have an average of four churches on every circuit, that would make forty-eight from the circuits, three from the stations and four from the mission—making a total of fifty-five from this district. Then multiply that by nine, our number of districts, and you have four hundred and eighty-six in the cabinet in this Conference claiming "rights and privileges." Tell Bro. Van Valkeburgh to urge it by all means, for no layman has "an axe to grind."

Good Words.

Around us ever lies the enchanted land,
In marvels rich to thine own sons displayed ;
In finding these are all things round us found ;
In losing these are all things lost beside.

THE CLOSING SCENE.

BY T. ROBINSON READ.

Within the sober realm of the leafless trees,
The sunset year inhaled the dreamy air;
Like some faint vapor in his hour of ease,
When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray heron looking from his bazy hills,
Over the dim waters widening in the vale,
Saw down the air a greeting to the hills,
On the dull thunder of alternate gales.

All sights were muffled, and all sounds subdued,
The hills seemed farther and the stream sang low
As in a dream the distant woodman hewed
His winter log with many a muffled blow.

The embattled forests were armed with gold,
Their banners bright with every martial hue,
Now stood like some dead, beaten host of old,
Withdrawn afar to time's remotest hue.

On sombre wings the vulture tried his flight;
The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint;
And, like a star drowning in the light,
The village church vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel cack upon the hill-side crew—
Crew three—and all was stiller than before;
Silent, till some replying warbler blew,
His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the joy within the elm's tall crest
Made gurgling trouble round her noiseful nest;
And where the oriole hung her awaying nest,
By every light wind like a censer swung.

Where sang the noisy martins of the caves,
The busy swallows circling ever near,
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
An early harvest and a plentiful year.

Where every bird that walked the vernal feast
Shook the sweet dumber from its wings at morn,
To warn the reaper of the reaper's feast;
All was now silent, empty and forlorn.

Alone, from out the stubble, piped the quail;
And croaked the crow through all the dreary gloom;
Alone, the pheasant, drumming in the vale,
Made echo in the distant cottage loom.

There was no bud, no bloom upon the bowers;
The thespians were their thin shrouds night by night;
The thistle-down, the only ghost of flowers,
Bailed slowly by—passed noiselessly out of sight.

Amid all this, in this most dreary air,
And where the woodbine shed upon the porch
Its crimson leaves, as if the year stood there, Firing the floor with its twisted torch.

Amid all this, the centre of the scene,
The white-haired matron, with her molochous tread,
Held the swift wheel, and with her joyous men,
Sat like a fate and watched the flying thread.

She had a frown sorrow. He had walked with her,
Oppressed and broke with her the barren crumb,
And in the dead leaves still she bears the air
Of his thick mantle trailing in the dust.

And yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom,
Her country sunnied, and she gave her all,
And twice was bowed to her his sable plume,
Regave the sword to rust upon the wall.

Regave the sword, but not the hand that drew
And struck for liberty the dying blow,
Nor him who, to his sire and country true,
Fell mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the dropping wheel went on,
Like the low murmur of a live at noon;
Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone
Breathid through her lips sad and tremulous tune.

At last the thread was snapped—her head was bowed,
Life dropped the distant through her hands serene,
And living neighbors smoothed her careful shroud,
While death and winter closed the autumn scene.

We reproduce this week, from the Sunday-School Magazine, President J. H. Carlisle's "Practical Application of the Lesson."

"And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Elisha the prophet; and none of them was cleansed saving Naaman the Syrian." This is the only passage in the New Testament where Elisha is named. It is striking to remember that, as a Jewish boy, Jesus was told by his mother, no doubt, this very story of Elisha and Naaman.

The God of Israel was also the God of Syria. Elisha had more to do with neighboring nations than Elijah. No "pent-up" Israel or Judah hemmed in the sympathies or the official life of Elisha. He had a message for the Syrian stranger as well as for his brethren according to the flesh. As we shall see hereafter, he could take his place in the time of a terrible war. To-day we are to see in him the dignified, retiring, unselfish physician of the body. This simple story of Naaman is well known. It has furnished several suggestive texts for many a gospel sermon. It comes in as a quiet story to relieve the tiresome and repulsive records of war. The name, "Naaman," more pleasant to our tongues and ears than many old Hebrew names, is said to mean, "pleasant or clever fellow." To his misfortune he owes his good fortune of being ennobled in the history that shall never be forgotten. But for his leprosy he would most probably have been forgotten. The strange thread of a particular providence runs through the whole account, connecting a raiding party, a captive slave kindly treated, a conversation between the mistress and that slave, the sympathy and special letter of one king to another, and the prophet, Elisha, all in a simple, natural story. Does not that same particular providence run in a golden thread through each life, however humble and limited? Did God not care for the many other lepers that were in the time of Naaman? Does he not care for the many lepers that are in Syria to-day?

The "pleasant fellow" was a leper. Neither wealth nor office could shield or cure him. This affliction did not in Syria shut him out of society as it would have done in Judea. But leprosy even in a palace must have been a terrible calamity. We often meet some of our race who are the victims of some life-long affliction, bodily or mental. No one can fully sympathize with the victim of an incurable disease or a life-long deformity or calamity. Surely these need all the help that considerate kindness can give them. They have enough to bear. Let not heedlessness on our part put another drop in their bitter cup.

How far does the name and influence of a good man extend? Elisha was the common property of all Israel. The children knew him or knew of him. When carried away into bitter exile, the captive maiden remembered her great prophet and curer. Let partisan writers on either side write recklessly as they will, a state of dependence and slavery has its alleviations no doubt; but it also has its unalleviated sorrows. Remove the idea of slavery, which now can scarcely be said to have a place in Christendom, and all who are dependent need more sympathy than we often give to them. We do not allude to the established relations of children dependent on parents, for example. There are all over the land those living with strangers, those more or less helpless—not only those literally in the "parish houses," but those who by failure of health or means are forced to eat the bread of dependence. This allotment may be often the portion of some of God's chosen ones, who feel keenly the infelicities of their daily life. Surely it is a task of love to deal tenderly with these. "Ye know the heart of a stranger," was the touching appeal to Israel. Surely no member of such a household would have met a kinder word or look from Jesus, when on earth, than the dependent one in the household, but not of it. Happy is he or she who by a timely forbearance or sympathy will win in that day the public benediction, "Inasmuch as you did it unto the least of these, you did it unto me." The scorned, unwelcome addition to the household may be very dear to him. The coarse family may be alighting an angel unawares.

A casual suggestion may lead to great results. A servant girl may move a king to write a royal letter. Her master, as the result of her remark, starts off on his western journey with tens of thousands of dollars with him, which he will gladly leave behind him on his return if he can leave his loathsome disease also. The millionaire to-day would gladly buy health, or even the night's rest, of his gardener or carriage driver, if he could, at a great price.

The surprised King of Israel is at his wit's end. The power to drive out the leprosy does not belong to the palace. The captive girl was not thinking of the king when she spoke of someone who could cure her master. Very naturally Elisha brought into the story, and very naturally indeed does the rich patient behave as his coach drives up to the prophet's house. The dignified and reticent prophet knew that a deeper disease than leprosy was in Naaman's blood. Pride was there, which is not confined to this side of the Jordan or that, to Jew or Gentile.

In the simple current of this story, which scarcely needs explanation even to a child, the deepest truths of the gospel may be seen as in a glass. Let the man of God, who has been highly honored as the instrument to heal many of the leprosy of sin, Mr. D. L. Moody, read it for us:

"He thought he could get what he wanted by taking letters to the king—not the prophet. The little maid told him of the prophet; yet he was going to pass the prophet by. How many people would go into the kingdom of God if it were not for pride! He was too proud to go to the prophet. But pride, if you will allow the expression, got a knock on the head on this occasion. It was a terrible thing for him to think of obeying—going down to the Jordan and dipping seven times. He had got better rivers in Damascus in his own wisdom, and says, 'Can I not wash there and be clean?' He was angry; but when he got over it he listened to his servants. I would rather see people mad than see them go to sleep. I would rather see a man get as mad as possible at anything that I may say than see him to sleep. When a man's asleep there is no chance of reaching him; but if he is mad, we may get at him. It is a good thing for a man to get mad sometimes, for when he cools off he generally listens to reason. So his servants came to him, and said, 'Suppose he had hid these some great thing, wouldst thou have done it?' Probably had he told him to take cod liver oil for ten years, he'd have done it. If he had told him that he wanted as much money as Naaman had brought up, that would have been all right. But the idea of doing nothing—just to go down to Jordan and wash himself! It was so far below his calculations that he thought he was being imposed upon. It is so in our days. How many people expect to get salvation by some sudden shock, some great event happening to them, or some sudden flash of light to break upon them! Some think that God's plan of salvation requires months to find out. They go on stumbling over its simplicity. And so his servants said: 'If the prophet had hid these some great thing, wouldst thou have done it? Wouldn't you just better go down and wash yourself in the Jordan?' Perhaps he said, 'If I go down to the Jordan and am not cured, what will my enemies say when I go back to Damascus?' But he was influenced by the servant. That was one good thing in Naaman's character—he was influenced by a humble messenger. A good many people won't accept a messenger because he is not refined and cultured and educated. My friends, never mind who brings the message. It is the message you want—not the messenger. If a boy was to bring me a telegraphic message with good news, I wouldn't notice the boy, wouldn't look to see whether he was white or black. It would be the message I would want.

And so it was with Naaman. It was a little Hebrew girl that first told him to come to Samaria, and now he was told to wash by his servant. So down he goes and dips into the waters. The first time he rose he says, 'I'd just like to see how much my leprosy has gone.' And he looks; but not a bit has left him. 'Why, I'm not going to get rid of my leprosy in this way; this is absurd.' 'Well,' said the servant, 'do just as the man of God tells you; obey him.' And this is just what we are told to do in the Scriptures—to obey him. The first thing we have to learn is obedience. Disobedience is the pit that Adam fell into, and we have got to get out of it by obedience. Well, he goes into the water a second time. If some Chicago Christian had been there, they would have asked, sneeringly, 'Well, how do you feel now?' He didn't see that he was any better, and down he went a third time; but when he looked at himself he saw that he had just as much leprosy as ever. Down he goes a fourth, fifth and sixth time. He looks at himself; but not a speck of it is removed. 'I told you this,' he says to his servant, 'look 'e here; I'm just the same as ever.' 'But,' says the servant, 'you must do what the man of God tells you to do—go down seven times.' He takes the seventh plunge and comes out. He looks at himself, and, behold! his flesh is as that of a little child. He says to his servant: 'Why, I never felt as good as I do to-day. I feel better than if I had won a great battle. Look! I'm perfectly cleansed. O what a great day this is for me! The leprosy has gone.' The waters had been to him as death and judgment, and he has come out resurrected—his flesh as that of a little child. I suppose he got into his chariot, and away he went to the men of God. He had lost his temper, he had lost his pride, and he had lost his leprosy. That is the way now. If a man will only lose his pride, he will soon see his leprosy disappear. The leprosy will go away with his pride. I believe the greatest enemies of men in this world are pride and unbelief. I believe hundreds and thousands in Chicago would press into the kingdom of God if it were not for their pride. He goes back to the man of God and takes his silver and gold. 'I don't want your money,' replies the prophet. If he had taken money, it would have spoiled the beautiful story. Naaman had to take back everything he brought from Damascus but his leprosy. The only thing that the elder has got that God wants is his sin; and if you let him take them to night, he will. Get rid of your leprosy; he will take it. Never mind your feelings. No soul in this audience will go down to the dark caverns if he is willing to obey God. And now the question comes to you all, Will you obey him? You haven't got to go a thousand miles away and dip into a Jordan, but just believe where you sit—believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.' Is there anything to hinder you from obeying God now? He will give you power to accept him. Do you believe he would offer you salvation without giving you the power to obey him? Don't go from this hall with any such delusion, my friends. Don't go home with this leprosy, thinking that you can not get rid of it. If you are better to you, then, of course, sin is better to it; if leprosy is worth more to you than to be purified, then keep to you than to be purified, then keep to you. Naaman could have gone back with his leprosy if he had not met the prophet and gone down to the Jordan. If you go without accepting him, you go out a sinner, and if death comes, as it may, suddenly upon you, there is no assurance in the Bible that you can pass through the pearly gates! There is no leprosy there. You must leave it here. If a leper was to get into the kingdom of heaven, all heaven would be affected by him. There is a fountain opened in the house of David for the leprosy. This night you can be saved if you will. The door is opened—on the hinge; the battle is fought on this fact if you will—not because you can't.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: All around the city of Tainpoo for many miles we could see nothing but extensive rice fields, for it is the principal production of this part of China. It is the staple food here, and all large cities in this region have extensive granaries for storing rice before shipping it to Peking. I was very much interested in seeing the natives prepare the rice for use. It is threshed from the ear with a bamboo flail; then the husk is cleared by a process of fanning and sifting. When the rice is sufficiently cleansed it is put into a mortar worked by a stone pestle, raised by means of a treadle worked by the feet. In this laborious way the rice is prepared for use. Chalk is afterward thrown in to help polish it, and thus make it look white and clean. It is then ready for consumption.

After passing this city we entered a succession of lakes which were covered with fishing boats and sailing craft of all descriptions. There being no roads in this part of China, the people go by boats from one place to another, so that we always had a number of boats in company with us. Some contained rice and other productions of the country, while others were used as passenger boats. Some of the boats were filled with many men seemingly intent in the worship of the god of the waters. One boat was rowed by twelve men, some of whom were detailed to keep a constant beating of gongs, which was almost deafening, while others were casting upon the waters ghost money made of paper covered with tin foil. They seemed to follow us very closely—sometimes ahead, and at other times behind us. All this was new to me, and I thought these men were very zealous in worshipping their gods. I felt sad to think I was not more earnest for my blessed Lord and Master. Bro. Llew had observed them very closely, and, being better acquainted with the character of his own people, said to me: "They mean no good to us. They are a bad class of men, and are seeking an opportunity to board and rob. We must keep a good lookout for them." It just then dawned upon me that we had a band of pirates following us who were determined, if possible, to take us unawares. They, no doubt, supposed we were going into the silk districts to purchase silk and must, of necessity, have a large sum of money. We watched them closely, and felt sure we discovered signs of evil intent. When we came to anchor they did the same, and when we commenced our journey they also weighed anchor; but they always kept up the appearance of worship. Long before night we thought it wise to anchor at some village with other boats, and thus we defeated the plans of those who, I verily believe, meant to do us harm. Here we were, nearly a hundred miles away from the foreign open port, among a people whom we could not trust and surrounded by many who lived by laying violent hands on their fellow-men; but when the shades of night surrounded us we read God's word, sang his praise, and then committed ourselves to our kind heavenly Father's care. We slept in perfect peace, for the Lord was our almighty. I felt thankful to know I had a Christian man in Bro. Llew—one with whom I could unite in worshipping the true God, and whose heart went out in earnest prayer for the salvation of his fellow-men who knew nothing of the love of the Lord Jesus. I retired every night trusting in the Lord who has promised to protect and defend his people.

We had many difficulties by the way, for we were wholly unacquainted with the country. When we reached the village where the silk merchant lived we were not long in finding him. Very soon after our arrival as many as ten thousand men, women and children turned out to see the foreigners who had so suddenly appeared in their midst. We tried to preach to them until the crowd became so great and pressed upon us so much that we were forced to enter our boat and thrust out from the land into the lake. There we again tried to preach to this immense audience the words of eternal life, as they were gathered on the shore of the lake. Many walked into the water to obtain books, and we found it quite impossible to land while we had any left. In a few hours the people became more quiet, so we went ashore and walked through the village, visiting all places of interest. No one offered us any violence; but, on the other hand, were very respectful. It was not pleasant to have thousands of heathen men, women and children gazing at me in great wonder and astonishment. I had no alternative but to submit and allow them to look until they were perfectly satisfied. My heart was made sad when I thought of their being in ignorance of God's word and of salvation through Christ Jesus, our Lord. It was with a heart full of thankfulness to God that I could point them to Jesus as their Savior. They may not have been able to understand much I said to them; but I know they could understand Bro. Llew. It did my heart good to hear him preach the glad tidings of salvation to that vast multitude. Who can tell the result of his preaching on that occasion?

Some years after this I visited the same silk merchant in his home in the country and left books with him. He said he believed that Jesus was the Savior of men. I trust he did truly believe and was saved. When the country was so disturbed by civil war I was prevented from seeing him for many years. When I returned to the place and asked for him I was told he had passed away. We try to "sow beside all waters," and it may be that the word spoken there shall not be without a blessing. I am, Yours in Christ,

The man who feels physical want will find his source of happiness in the physical world; the man who feels his intellectual wants will find his source of happiness in the intellectual world; while the man who feels his spiritual wants finds his source of happiness in all the dominion of all the heavens, that is, in the whole universe; and he is a happy man. He reigns where Caesar's scepter can not reach, and when all the powers shall have passed away and the present scheme of things be dissolved, he has the heavens still, the constant, enduring universe.—The Deem's Birth-Day Book.

How Christ Was Baptized.

MR. EDITOR: For the sake of your many readers I will arrange a few questions and passages of Scripture that will enable them to read it for themselves that the water was sprinkled upon him.

1. What was Christ? We know who he was: The Son of David and of the seed of Abraham on his human side; on the divine side he was the Son of God, "without father or mother and without beginning of days or end of life." But what was he? Answer: A minister or high priest. (Hebrews ix, 8; Hebrew ii, 17.)

2. If a minister, of what dispensation, the old or the new—or of circumcision or of baptism? Answer: Of circumcision. (Romans xv, 8.)

3. What, for, to introduce a new religion with new doctrine and ordinance? Answer: No; "but to confirm the promise made unto the fathers." (Romans xv, 8; St. Matthew v, 17.)

4. If a minister of circumcision, how was he made a minister? Answer: "Like his brethren" in the ministry. (Hebrews ix, 17.)

Was there any law in the church under the dispensation of promise in which circumcision prevailed as the seal of the covenant? Answer: Yes. (Numbers iv, 3.) This is with reference to the time when they could begin their ministry. Did Christ and John observe that law? Yes. (St. Luke iii, 23.) John being six months older than Christ, began his ministry six months before he did. (Luke i.) But was there a standard law by which they consecrated or ordained their ministers and clothed them with authority to preach and perform the functions of the ministry? Answer: Yes. (Numbers viii, 6-10.) Did that law require baptism? Answer: Yes. (Luke viii, 6; Numbers viii, 7.) Was there never after this any other custom of making ministers? Answer: None.

How was that washing or baptism performed? (Numbers viii, 7.) Was it a literal or real washing of the body? Answer: No; it was symbolical. What did it represent? 1. That, naturally, man was an unclean being, unfit for such a holy sacred office. "And thus shalt thou do unto them to cleanse them." 2. The baptism of the Holy Ghost was set forth in symbol and promised as needful to qualify them for their sacred work. (St. John xiii, 8.) That is, spiritually. (St. Matthew iii, 14.)

Christ, we see observed the law as to age; and declared that he came not to destroy or abrogate the law, but to fulfill it; not to introduce a new religion with new doctrines and ordinances, but to confirm the religion set forth in types and symbols, and, though not an unclean being, yet saw proper to submit to the law of cleansing or baptism, and, like his brethren, receive authority at the hands of the church and law. Says he, "It becometh us to fulfill all righteousness," obey every and the least commandment that contains a principle. Fulfillment, we know, dates backward; that is, there is some law or Scripture that exists previously that must now be obeyed and the truth of it maintained. Christ's baptism, then, we see, is a fulfillment, not a new thing just instituted.

His baptism was in obedience to the law of ministerial consecration or ordination, and St. Paul tells us he was a minister of the circumcision and was made such like his brethren. From generation to generation, and from age to age, they were led to the water in the brass laver and the officiating priest or minister took a bunch of hyssop and "sprinkled the water upon them;" therefore the irresistible conclusion is, so far as the water part was concerned, the water was sprinkled upon him as they stood at the water's edge in Jordan, not on the banks or in the woods, but in Jordan, yet "with the water" not in it.

But why were not the other things done for Christ as ordered by that law that were done for his brethren in the ministry? Answer: Because they were of a sacrificial nature, and with the beginning of John's ministry everything of sacrificial worship was to be laid aside. (Daniel xii, 2.) Daniel foretold this and was John's authority for so doing, although it seemed to be a great violation and revolution. "And from the days of John the Baptist the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." (St. Matthew xi, 12.) Yet John violated nothing, he dropped the form or symbol and held to the substance. He pointed to Christ as the substance of all sacrificial service, and says, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

Then there was to be a time when the daily sacrifice, the offering of a lamb from the flock, should cease and everything of a sacrificial nature. Hence those things were omitted by John in the case of Christ, but the symbolical washing which has from age to age set forth the Holy Ghost baptism could not be omitted. It held forth the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and thus it was fulfilled upon Christ in the form of a dove and upon the people on the day of pentecost. This laying aside the daily sacrifice enables us to understand Ezekiel's prophecy. Does it not? Indeed it does. (Ezekiel xxxvi, 25.) "Then," at the time just referred to when all sacrificial services should cease, "will I sprinkle clean water upon you: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also," etc. Here it will be seen that both water and Holy Ghost baptism were promised. Before this time blood and other things were mingled in the water of purification. (Hebrew ix, 19.) But the time will come when sacrificial things will cease, and "then will I sprinkle clean water upon you."

From the days of John the Baptist and on throughout this age baptism was to be performed by sprinkling clean water upon the people. Was not? Yes. This was God's will declared in holy prophecy.

But did not John immerse people? No. He gave this symbolical washing in the river Jordan, but the water was not in it. Why did he do this? Because it was most convenient to attend at the water's edge in Jordan more so than to bring water up to the river; for now all ceremonial vessels are laid aside together with ritual service in the temple. Would now may be conducted anywhere, this broad wilderness of sin, yet this temple of glory.

But does not the New Testament count of this worship or baptism as Christ came straightway out of water? No. The Greek preposition "apo" is there in every case where Christ's washing is mentioned, and means "from, away from," and a new version has it so in one place and why not in every place? No reason can be assigned, only they wished to favor the idea of immersion which was set forth by the King James' translators who were immersionists. Would not have been best for them to have expressed God's will rather than theirs? Indeed it would.

Does any other prophet foretell baptism? Yes. (Isaiah lili, 15; Malachi iii, 3-6.) Did not the prophet foretell that Christ was to sprinkle unclean, not immerse them? Yes. (Isaiah lili, 15.) And upon this based his commandment. "So shall all nations," was it not? Yes. (Romans i, 2.) "Which he has promised afore by his prophets in the Holy Scriptures."

Did the prophet say he should immerse them? No. "So shall I sprinkle many or all nations." He was Christ to appear in doing the Answer: As a servant. (Isaiah lili, 15.) Is there any fulfillment of this Scripture? Yes. (St. John xiii.) He takes the attitude of a servant, gives the symbolical washing foretold. Here we see no immersion. And ought to be none.

A Sermon on "Crown."

Paul writes, II Timothy ii, "Honor thou there is laid up for me at that day; and not to me, but to them also who love his appearing." The apostle is looking at things not seen; * * * things reserved in heaven; the things laid up. He is seeing faith. He has made the future realistic, substantial present. Crown laid up for him is a future thing, of which he received a foretaste even here. The thought of this possession was a quickener; it was a lively hope; * * * it drew him to press towards the prize of the prize of his high calling of in Christ Jesus. He knew that he would gain this crown of life he merited lawfully; that is, lawfully, the Grecian gamester who sought win in the race must comply with rules prescribed * * * so the Christians, if he would gain the prize, keep the law. This is in accord with the words of Proverbs iv, 8, 9: "Her (wisdom), and she shall press thee: she shall bring thee to the when thou dost embrace her, shall give to thine head a chaplet of grace: a crown of beauty shall deliver to thee." Those "incorrupt crown" is given to those who have fought the good fight of faith, for righteous Judge says, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." (Revelation ii, 10.)

cautions us to "hold that fast we have, that no man take away." We are encouraged in daily conflicts by the words James i, 12: "Blessed is the man endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised them that love him," also by the words of I Peter v, 4: "And when the Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive the crown of glory that shall fade away." Our Father knoweth the frame. He remembered that we dust. He is very anxious that we be adorned with lovely crowns, desires to see us at his own right clad in the regal splendor of his excellencies. Therefore he is crowning us with loving kindness and tender mercies and is withholding good things from us in order that our glorious appearing of our Savior may receive the crown.

righteous Judge has for us. Crown laid away for us in God's storehouse of mercy. * * * May we love his appearing, and delight to meditate on the crowns of his character drawing into hearts more and more of his nature, rising from glory to glory, we behold our King in his beauty, faith bringing all precious promises into a present realization of them.

We will not wait till all things are made plain. * * * If enough for us to let God baptize us. * * * As those on whom the light of God hath shined. * * * Till he more than light give us. * * * Or through the darkest claim us for his. * * *

From the Work.

WEIR, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I am stopping for a day or two between South mission and Salem camp meetings. The former closed this morning. The divine presence was manifest from the first to the last service. The preaching was in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. There were about fifty conversions and a general and gracious revival in the church. Bro. Worsham held for fifty dollars for missions on Sunday and got seventy-one. This completes his assessments for missions, though he has taken collections at two churches only out of seven. Salem camp meeting begins to-morrow night, which we hope and pray for gracious results.

WEST, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I closed a meeting last night of six days' continuance at West, on West circuit, which resulted in fourteen additions to the church. All the church members that were in a prepared condition to receive were abundantly blessed by the power of blessings that were poured upon us. Congregations were large day and night, and apparently eager to hear the word. We felt the power and presence of the Holy Spirit every hour's service. Rev. H. E. Smith, of Carrollton, and Rev. O. F. Jones, local preacher, rendered us valuable assistance.

G. W. MOYER.

TOCOPOLA, MISS.

Mr. Editor: The revival spirit is abroad in the Tocopola circuit. The harvest is spreading, and bids fair to include every community and embrace every church. Eighty-nine have been converted into the church and seventy-five have been converted. May this harvest be of glorious saving power until it puts us beyond the influence of sin and associates us with the sacramental hosts of the Lord Jesus Christ. I desire to thank Mrs. Freeman and Sullivan for a few days' service in this work. Glory to God!

H. C. MOHREHEAD.

SUNFLOWER, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I write to inform you that the Lord has greatly blessed us in this charge—Indian Village and Augusta. We commenced a series of meetings at Friendship Chapel on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July. Finished on the next Saturday. Twelve conversions and accessions to the church. The members of the church greatly strengthened in the faith, etc. Last week I closed a meeting of a week's duration on Island resulting in eight accessions to the church, all on profession of faith except one. Interest increased in both places the last. More will join, I think.

J. M. HUGGIN.

HILLSBORO, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I have just closed a revival at New Providence, formerly known as Grange Hall. The results were about thirty-five conversions and twenty-nine accessions to the church. There were quite a number of backsliders and lukewarm members stirred up. At the close of the meeting we organized a prayer meeting, with the result of a good and prompt attendance, also a Sabbath-school was organized which promises to do good work. We think the work on this circuit is in a good condition. We have our meetings yet to hold, and do hope the Lord may bless our work.

J. C. LONG.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

Mr. Editor: It would do you good to stop over to Carrollton and see our message. It does not appear now as it did when you were with us last year. The ladies' society purchased the house three years ago; last year they raised and spent about $200 on the house. This spring they raised money and repaired the house inside and out; all our rooms are canvassed and papered on the inside, and the new building is newly painted over. There could be used outside and inside. This makes the pastor, and his family feel very much like they are at home and among friends. What ladies do do is not worth doing.

We had a very profitable meeting in place several weeks ago, which resulted in eight conversions and four accessions to our church. We are under obligations to Rev. R. F. Witt, of the Mississippi Conference, and Bro. Ritchie and W. S. Lagrone, of the North Mississippi Conference, for valuable services rendered. We have lately had a very gracious revival in Enon, ten miles south of Carrollton, which resulted in quite a number of conversions and sixteen accessions to the church. Many thanks to Bro. G. B. Brown, of West circuit, for his faithful assistance.

We have let out the contract for our new house of worship in Carrollton, which will cost us something over two thousand dollars. The building will be completed in less than two months on date. We have very nearly enough money subscribed to complete the building. The necessary amount will be raised. We never served a more liberal people than this. One hundred subscribed eleven hundred and fifty dollars. What a blessed thing it would be for the church if all our wealthy members would make their riches serve good instead of making themselves servants of their riches.

We are repairing our church building at Enon. The brethren there mean business. The change in the appearance of their house of worship will soon show what the Lord has done for them in the late revival at that point.

We have about six hundred dollars subscribed to build a new church edifice at Centerville, eleven miles south-west of Carrollton (the three churches mentioned compose our charge), but the building committee is having some trouble just now at the point in locating the building place. We hope the matter will soon be adjusted to the satisfaction of all, and we hope to see a nice house of worship completed there soon. Then Carrollton circuit will have a nice parsonage and a good church-house at every point.

H. E. SMITH.

WEST POINT AND THIBEE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: It will be remembered by some that I gave a report of a meeting in our church in West Point, resulting in forty conversions and thirty accessions to our church. The above meeting was held in April, and was continued in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church under the leadership of the faithful pastor, Rev. Bro. Keeton. He continued three weeks and reported forty conversions. The day this meeting closed the Baptist pastor began his meeting. This also resulted in about forty conversions. From these three meetings, which were protracted for ten consecutive weeks, we have received about one hundred persons into the various churches. After having given the people some time for rest we began another meeting in our church. We were led in this by the faithful and efficient Bowen, of this Conference. We were also favored with the presence of Mrs. Buchanan, Parrott and Foster, who rendered valuable service. This meeting resulted in the most complete revival in the church I ever saw. We have but few male members in this church who will not pray in public. Our Missionary and Woman's Aid Societies, also the Young Men's Christian Association and temperance Sunday-schools, then the weekly prayer and class meetings, are all well attended. The average attendance on Sundays is about three hundred, especially at the eleven o'clock service. We expect to have more to report by Conference. Our report from Thibee will be brief, but good. We have just closed a very successful revival there. We were assisted by Rev. J. E. Thomas, of Batsville. He did all the preaching, and the people were perfectly charmed with him. It has not yet been my pleasure to be associated with any man at any time or anywhere that could preach better revival sermons than J. E. Thomas. Any man would do well to secure his services for a revival meeting. At this place we received eight into the church, with more to follow. Baptized eight infants, and witnessed a complete stirring up of the membership. I do not remember the name of a single male member in this church who will not pray in public when called on. Nor a single female member will refuse to stand up and talk before the entire congregation. This, I think, is good. But I must close. Will write more anon.

E. G. KILGORE.

BELLVILLE, LA.

Mr. Editor: Our camp meeting of nine days at Cotton Valley just ended. About fourteen conversions, and church most thoroughly revived. I have never known a better work in the church. Our church officials at Cotton Valley are good workers; some of them superb, and all of them all with the Holy Ghost. Just think of our Sunday-school superintendent preaching Jesus for two hours on a stretch to his customers as they came to his store on Saturday evening! Cotton crops are cut short by drought. Good deal of sickness, but not very fatal.

R. M. BLOCKER.

OAK RIDGE, LA.

Mr. Editor: Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Good Hope, resulting in eleven or more conversions and an addition of eighteen members to the church. Bros. Muniholland and Patterson did faithful work for the Master. Bro. U. also assisted me at Lecharbon, where we had several conversions and four persons added to the church. Help us to pray for a revival at Oak Ridge and Prairie Mer Rouge.

J. P. WYNN.

MONTGOMERY, LA.

Mr. Editor: Our District Conference was quite a success, and we are in the midst of a good revival of religion. Conference convened August 29, and adjourned Saturday, August 29, but protracted services continue. Up to date several conversions and fourteen accessions to the church and membership much revived. Pray for us. To God be all the praise.

R. A. DAVIS.

We clip the following from the Methodist Recorder:

Some professing Christians care more for a circus and a clown than they do for the church and the ministers of Christ. They are too poor to contribute to the support of the Gospel, but when the circus comes along, they can take their whole family to the show. The church has no need of such people. They are no credit to it, and it is evidently but of little benefit to them.

Wanted—A Revival of Reverence.

BY REV. L. R. DUNN, D. D.

"Let knowledge grow from more to more, that mind and soul, according well, may make one music, as before, but vainer."

"Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary."—Lev. xii, 30.

The voice of God and the poet's song both demand the same thing—reverence for God, his Sabbaths, and his sanctuary. And the demand is an urgent, pressing one, especially at this time, and among our own nation and people. No one can have failed to notice, in the pulpit and in the press, in the lecture-room and in the church, in the family, in social and political life, how much this element is needed in our national and church character and life. It has been frequently, and we fear only too truly, said that America is the most irreverent nation on the face of the globe. The Asiatic nations are reverent to their temples and their gods. However dark, blind, or superstitious they are, yet the element of reverence enters largely into the national character and life. They never curse the god whom they worship, and they regard with sacred awe the temples where the gods are worshipped. The Mohammedan leaves his dust-covered shoes at the door of his mosque, and reverently prostrates himself in his worship. In the Roman Catholic and Greek churches, reverence is manifested in the gorgeous and liturgical forms of service. While there is less of reverence in the worship of the Church of England and Lutheran churches, yet the absence of it is not so distinctly marked as it is in other Protestant denominations. The changing of the priests, the kneeling in prayer, the processional hymns, all inspire at least the present feeling of devotion and reverence for the service and the place where it is performed.

And here, in noticing, as we now propose to do, the causes for this lack of reverence, we would say it is the credit of the churches referred to, that they are never loused or let for any other purposes than worship. We strike here, at once, what we regard as one of the principal sources of this great lack, viz., the frequent use of our churches for secular and worldly purposes—lectures, concerts, anniversaries of different wars, not strictly religious, musical and literary entertainments, often of an irreverent, or, at least, indelicate and unbecoming character, broom-drills, operatic performances, fairs and festivals. In all these purposes it has not been uncommon to have our churches used. And how can we expect our children or our congregations to have any special reverence for a place where such things are allowed? The organist and choir in many churches have lent their talents and talents of their services to the secular purposes of the world, and our hymns are often of the most secular character. Even between the verses of the most solemn and sacred hymns, the knowing can readily detect snatches of music familiar in the theatre and the opera, and sometimes, in the most solemn sermon, the congregation is treated to music of the most trivial and secular character, dispiriting all the effects of the faithful sermon, and scattering to the winds all religious impressions. So much for the organist. But how many many of our churches seem to think that singing is all the part of the service which they should have any interest in. And so the male members of the choir often leave the church during the sermon, to smoke, and in some instances we have known, to drink in the nearest saloon, returning only to sing the last hymn; while it is the most common thing for them to be turning over the pages of the note-books, whispering, writing and reading sly notes, and in various ways showing their utter uninterest in the prayer service, readings and sermon. We must, also, take a look at our congregations. Before services commence, there is often loud whispering, nodding to persons near, sniffling as persons enter the church, criticisms on dress and appearance. How few also, in many churches, join in the singing! How few have Bibles in the reading of the Scriptures—lesson! How few kneel, or even bow their heads low in prayer! And then when the doxology is sung—what an adjustment of wraps and dresses, what a putting on of overcoats in the season! If an ordinary congregation could be photographed on plate or paper, as it is presented to the eye of the minister as he stands in the sacred desk while the grand doxology is sung, it would indeed be one of the most ludicrous scenes imaginable.

Nor is the pulpit always free from the charge of irreverence. The careless reading of the hymn, the hurried reading of the Word, the undue familiarity in prayer, the sensational and exciting language, the indulging in slang, and sometimes the playing of the mountebank—all remove every vestige of solemnity and reverence for the sacred character of God's ministers, his service, and his house of prayer. And when the service is over, there is a sigh of relief, a rushing for the doors, and a busy hum of voices discussing the minister, the music, the fashions, the last party, or the coming wedding. Sometimes, also, the minister rushes hurriedly out of the pulpit, pushes his way down the aisle, and gains the door, so that he may show how social he is, and then mingles in the social chat or gossip of his retiring congregation. Now in all these things—and the pictures are not overdrawn—where is the spirit of worship? Where is the reverence for the house of God? Is it any wonder that the wide, wicked world around us turns away from such places and such scenes with disgust? Is it any wonder that our children and young people are growing up with a positive dislike and distaste for the house of God? Is it strange that the plea of so many professors of religion is so shallow, so vapory, and so unreliable? It would be a fruitless theme, had we space to consider it, that in proportion as reverence or devotion for God and his worship, is declining for parents, rulers, law, authority, institutions, everything, in how many, even in what are called our first families, the father is called the "governor," or "the old man," and the mother the "old woman." Parental authority is disregarded, and by their tone action on the domestic organs, regular stools are produced. Price 25¢. 44 Murray St., New York.

mand with promise—"that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Paul exhorted the Romans to be subject to the higher powers, "because they are ordained of God," and his "ministers," and to give "honor to whom honor is due." Timothy and his church are exhorted to "pray and make supplication for kings and all who are in authority." And religious exhortations to honor the dispensation, to "honor the king." This is the spirit of the New Testament teachings; and if American institutions are to be preserved, we must have more reverence for them and the departments of government which are entrusted with their guardianship and preservation.

So we see that everywhere there is wanted a revival of reverence—a reverence for God, his name, his Sabbaths and his sanctuaries; a reverence for parents and parental authority; a reverence for the laws, institutions, and authority of our country. And let us begin to labor for it, none. No line is to be lost. Let the pulpit illustrate it and commend it. Let the officers and members of our churches hold them strictly to sacred religious purposes. Let them hold organist and choir to strict account for the character of the music, and for their behavior in the house of God. Let parents teach their children at home to reverence their authority, the Bible, the courts of the Lord's house and the Sabbath, by precept and example, and let them inculcate respect and reverence for the rulers of the people. All this is essential to the prosperity of the church of God, the well-being of the family, and the well of the commonwealth.—Zion's Herald.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.—The year 1884 was for the Indians a year of comparative peace and quiet, and one of steady progress in industry and education. More Indians are engaged in cultivating the soil and in mechanical pursuits, and more children are attending school than ever before. The progress in agriculture is not very great, but looking back over the whole period since "peace policy" was inaugurated, one can see evidence of growth and progress.

The Indians, not including the five civilized tribes, have 14,821 houses, of which 2,267 were built the previous year. There are among them 215 schools of all grades, with 787 teachers and 11,731 scholars. The expenditure of money for education is as follows: By Government, $850,565; by religious society, $218,845; by the State of New York, $18,848. There are 19,979 Indians who can read, of whom 2,257 learned to read the previous year. There are 17 church buildings on reservations. The Indians cultivate 229,758 acres of land. The capacity of all the schools is stated to be 13,414, and this increase of attendance the last year to be more than thirty per cent. If we add the schools of the five civilized tribes, we have a total capacity for 24,118 pupils, and a total attendance of 19,343. These figures show a large advance in material prosperity and in education; but they do not exhibit the most important features of this progress, such as improved implements of industry, improved methods of agriculture, and improved character of schools.—Independent.

STATUARY CHRISTIANS.—When Oliver Cromwell visited the cathedral in York, England, he saw in one of the apartments statues of the twelve apostles in silver. "What do those fellows there?" he asked, as he approached them, on being told, he answered: "Take them down, and let them go about doing good." They were taken down and melted, and put into his treasury. I have also read that there were too many persons who, like these silver apostles, are too stiff for service in much that the Lord's work requires. They stand or sit stiff and stately in their dignity, and sinners may go un-saved, and believers unimproved, for all they do is to make to him a hard to save them. They need melting down, and to be sent about doing good. Statuary Christians, however, are not in the kingdom of Jesus.—Watchword.

Men are called to be what they are. Every musician is called of God. Do you suppose that every man who has ten fingers can play the organ? Do you suppose that every man who has large lungs can play upon a trumpet to the instruction and edification of those who hear him—to their lifting up and their resurrection? Every poet is called to make his verse; he is anointed of God. Heroin is that saying true which a Frenchman spoke, to whom it was said, "It must be very difficult to make epic verses." Said he, "No; easy or impossible." Every tradesman is called to his employment, if he be in the right sphere. A tradesman can not be made any more than a poet. I know how to account for all the failures in commercial life; either the men are not in their right places, and were never meant for those places, or there is that necessary want of energy and genius, tact and perseverance, which comes out of antipathy to the pursuit. Train up a child in the way he should go, catch the child's ideas, controlling him, interpret the Divine idea in the creation of his life, and then you will have a natural, asymmetrical, and happy development of faculty and energy and love, and at the last you will have a life beautiful for its completeness and utility.—Joseph Parker, D. D.

Christian Advocate.

ORIGIN OF THE LUTHERAN, METHODIST AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, D. D. REV. J. T. SAWYER
REV. W. L. C. HUGHES.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1885.

Senator Coke, of Texas, has stirred up a veritable nest of hornets by his own reckless volume of tongue. He made an unwarranted attack upon ministers of the gospel, and has thereby trained with the slum element. We prophesy that when he gets through with this fight, he will be in the poor plight of Sut Lovelugood's "Daddy playing horse."

Our honored friend, Peter James, is still doing liberal things for his Lord. He has loaned our Board of Missions $1,000, without interest, to aid in tidying over present embarrassments. Surely the Master will richly reward our generous brother. He has done much in placing this Advocate in the hands of many unable to pay the price of subscription. If other like contributions are made to our Board of Missions, Dr. Kelley will speedily acknowledge the same.

Returning from Ruston, La., the editor was taken sick, and during the entire week was confined at home. As yet he is not able to do full duty, though well enough to be at his desk. But, as is his wont, Dr. Carter generously came to our assistance, and has done most of the work in getting out this issue. No doubt our readers will enjoy the change and thank the Doctor, as we do, for his periodical editorship. We would like to use his pen more in the enrichment of our columns.

The Montana Conference, by an unanimous vote, rejected the proposed name of the church sent down by the General Conference. Then, by a vote of six to two, memorialized the General Conference to change the name to "Episcopal Methodist Church." That, of course, is a separate, independent action that may or may not be granted. The only question now, however, before the Conference is this—Will we drop the present name and adopt "Methodist Episcopal Church in America?" On that proposition the Montana Conference was unanimously in the negative.

Some earnest advocates of temperance and prohibition are in danger of allowing prejudice in favor of a special method of procedure run away with their better judgment and injure the cause in the house of its friends. The non-partisan movement projected by Dr. Dorchester, of Boston, and endorsed by loyal prohibitionists, North and South, is strenuously opposed by the third party advocates, North, and by some members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—the latter principally because Mrs. J. Ellen Foster left them on the political issue. With this matter we have nothing to do. Of one thing we are sure—only non-partisan prohibition has any chance of success in the South. When we thrust the movement into party politics we handicap all future operations. And the further removed the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is from partyism and woman's suffrage, the better. This is the speediest and best means of securing the legal and constitutional suppression of the liquor traffic. Division on side issues should not be allowed.

The special effort just now being made in England to break the force of the Pall Mall Gazette disclosures by trumping up a criminal charge against its editor, Mr. Stead, we predict will fail. Other journals have been strangely silent on the moral outrages brought to light and have left the Gazette editor to bear the cross alone, and right heroically has he done it. The charge of abduction brought against him shows the desperation of his enemies. Unable to disprove his facts which reveal such a tale of horror and sorrow, they retaliate with counter-charges. But such is the unreasonable blindness of misguided men. We remember the experience of a minister in a certain city in reference to the Sabbath question. In his efforts to secure a more faithful enforcement of the Sunday law and an arrest of shameful Sabbath desecration he aroused strong opposition, and some "lewd fellows of the baser sort" even threatened to have him arrested if a collection was taken in the church on Sabbath. Of course it was only bluster; but it indicated the recklessness and folly of men under the dominion of sin. Whatever the result of the trial of Mr. Stead, as a champion of moral reform in England his name and fame will abide.

Camp Meeting Preaching.

I have had the privilege lately of attending a popular camp meeting, and I spent four days on the ground. There are many interesting features about a well-conducted and well-attended camp meeting. A concourse of human beings is always an interesting spectacle, and when people come together at an appointed place, away from the habitations of men, for the express purpose of spending a week in a religious meeting for the spiritual benefit of themselves and others who may attend there is brought together a set of circumstances which can never fail to interest the thoughtful. To me the most interesting part of a camp meeting is the preaching of the same gospel by so many different men. Truth is many-sided, and when men of different mental power and different methods of presenting truth come together and preach the attentive hearer will be very apt to get a clear view of truth from many points of view. The fact is, if he will sum up what he hears, he will have the whole gospel which is able to save the soul.

At the meeting I attended I heard the preaching of men from almost every position in the church. Editors, college professors, presiding elders, station preachers and circuit riders were all there, and all had an opportunity to proclaim the good news. The young preachers, just beginning their life-work; the middle-aged preachers, "bearing the heat and burden of the day," and the superannuated preachers, waiting with listening ears to hear the call of the Master to come home, were all there—each interested and helping to further the good cause. I do not know when I have had such a feast of preaching, and, as I do not have an opportunity often to hear the gospel preached, I do not know when I have had so much enjoyment in listening. My occupation is such that I do not hear preaching much more than once a quarter, and this fact had whetted my appetite to such a keen edge that I could not afford to miss a single sermon. The themes selected were generally appropriate to the present audience, and discussed in so earnest a manner as to arrest and detain the attention of the hearer. The great facts of redemption were stated in plain English, and the grand doctrines of our holy religion were explained to the comprehension of the humblest, and the precepts of practical godliness were emphasized in a way to make them impress themselves deeply in many consciences. One or two preachers were led away into the mystical realms of metaphysics; but after a few gyrations in the heavy atmosphere of that region they swept round again into the gospel sphere. I was delighted with the preaching of the young men. It evinced much thought, and the language in which it was expressed was unexceptional. In my opinion no language is equal to ours for preaching, and if our preachers would study other languages that they may know their own, they will do the right thing. I suppose the preaching I heard from the young men to be a fair sample of the ability of the young preachers generally, and, if so, then my deliberate opinion is that the preaching of the young men of to-day is superior to that of the young men of a generation ago! In conducting the altar exercises one of these young preachers displayed the skill of a tactician that would have done credit to a veteran.

Sometimes the question is asked, Are our preachers improving in preaching ability? I had an opportunity to test this question to some extent. I had the opportunity of comparing a middle-aged preacher with himself after an interval of ten years of study and labor in the Master's cause. I heard him at a camp meeting ten years ago on the same subject which he expounded on the present occasion. Of course, the circumstances were not the same and the audience was different, which would make some difference in the sermon. The thought of the sermon ran in the same general direction; but its volume had been largely increased. The current was not so swift and noisy; but its momentum spoke of power added somewhere along its course. There were at many points clear evidences of careful study during the intervening years. So I concluded one preacher is improving as the years roll on. How wonderful to me is the fact that after his widest explorations in the word of God a man still finds himself on a shoreless ocean! After listening to all that faithful preaching, and being edified by it, I wondered if any would go away without going in the "fullness of the blessing of the gospel!" Alas! how many go, pay respectful attention and never hear at all, and as "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," how can they be saved?

Comparative Costliness.

According to the last statistics at hand the religion of this country costs our people about $18,000,000 per annum. This is an immense sum of money when we think of it by itself. If expended in bread, it would buy enough to supply 450,000 people for a whole year! If expended in tuition, according to the usual rates, it would pay for the schooling of 600,000 children for a term of ten months! If a man were to count 100 per minute for twelve hours a day, it would require 250 days for him to count the dollars spent in maintaining religion in our country for one year! Some people look at these figures, and say, "Religion is a very expensive thing." The money value is all they regard.

According to the last statistics at hand the liquor of this country costs our people about $900,000,000 per annum. This is a sum of money too big to think about without becoming dizzy. If expended in bread, it would be enough to supply 22,500,000 people for a whole year! If expended in tuition, according to the usual rates, it would pay for the schooling of 30,000,000 children for a term of ten months! If a man were to count 100 per minute for twelve hours a day, it would require thirty-four years and three months for him to count the dollars spent in maintaining liquor in our country for one single year! Some other people look at these figures and throw themselves with all their might on the side of prohibition! Sound political economy demands prohibition! Disorganized labor demands it! Demoralized society demands it! Bread for the hungry demands it! Education for the young demands it! In the face of the awful facts of the case who can afford to side with liquor? The man who will patiently study the facts, and then deliberately take the side of liquor is an enemy to the poor of the land and a traitor to the rising generation! "Let no such man be trusted."

Reputation and Character.

(From the German of The Family Friend.)

Reputation and character are not identical. A man's reputation is what public opinion supposes him to be. His character, on the other hand, is what he really is independent of favorable or unfavorable opinion of him. Reputation is something external, character is the inner life; the former is often but whitewash, the latter is the true gold.

It is natural to desire a good reputation as well as a good character. But we have no control over the agencies which constitute our reputation. Our character, however, is our own manufacture. We ourselves create and shape its constituent elements. Its excellency is our true glory; its baseness, our true shame. If the conglomerate throng, who have a man's reputation at their disposal, were uniformly conscientious and sensible, the reputation would be a true index to the contents of the character; but the opposite of conscientiousness and good sense is fearfulness. Hence reputation is often the product of ill-will and folly.

A good character has been known to be injured by a bad reputation. If the good character were at the same time strong, defamation could not affect it. But since with goodness weakness is frequently united a bad reputation, begotten by defamation, becomes an agency of influencing the otherwise good character injuriously.

Philip of Macedon declared that the defamations of the Athenian orators had benefited him. "Their villainous lies," he declared, "make me a better man. The crimes with which they charge me I now take pains to avoid." Philip was not a harmless character; but he made use of his bad reputation for the benefit of his character.

In "Pilgrim's Progress" we find Christian, attired in white, incessantly defiled by dirt thrown at him. But the dirt always disappeared quickly, after which the white seemed brighter than before.

"May the world despise and leave me, They have left my Savior, too."

You take pains to conserve your Christian character; as a wise master-builder, complete it. In trouble it is a strong tower; in sorrow, a precious balm; in darkness, a light; on earth it is our heaven.

J. B. A. AURENS.

Our confere of the Texas Advocate has taken a census of the church by means of postal correspondence, on the change of name controversy, and publishes the result. The sentiment is overwhelmingly against a change. Some prefer one name and some another, but very few the one proposed. The question may now be considered settled and further discussion is quite a work of supererogation.

Notes and Comments.

Mr. Cleveland's reply to one who recommended a person for an office to which he did not wish him appointed sounds like the voice of one crying in the wilderness of public corruption. "Prepare ye the way of reformation in the civil service of the government," says he, "with amazement and indignation. The sole mitigation of the crime you avow is the candor which leads you to confess it. If you can derive any consolation from that, you are welcome to it." If Mr. Cleveland shall use the power his position confers to purify the government, and drive corruption from high places as well as low, his name will go down to posterity wreathed with honors more glorious and perennial than temporary adulation which the populace yield to the glamour of military glory. The civilian's and the statesman's true work is as much more honorable than the soldier's as the ameliorations of peace are more desirable than the destructions of war. The arts of war show the devil that is in man, while the arts of peace show the divine nature that is in him. When will the nations beat their swords into plowshares and learn war no more? Might not five of the strongest nations unite in an alliance of peace—any three to settle disputes between the other two, and all combining to forbid wars between any other nations?

If anyone wishes to see the auctioneer's cry enacted, let him look at a presiding elder—going, going, gone! He, too, is, in a sense, an auctioneer, dispensing the gospel to the highest bidder. He who prays most and listens best gets the best sermon always because he pays the highest price. Preachers, too, are distributed by auction, going not only where they are wanted, but where they are wanted most—appreciation of gifts and ability to pay being elements in fixing appointments. As an auctioneer means an increase, may preachers in charge and presiding elders ever increase the dignity of their offices and the power of the gospel they are commissioned to proclaim!

At Natchez a two thousand-dollar organ is contracted for to be placed in the rear of the pulpit of Jefferson Street Church, and Wesley Chapel aspires to the purchase of a paragon. Never have I seen a financial system which so nearly approached perfection in theory and operation as that which has for years been in use at Jefferson Street, in Natchez, and is being followed in a degree at Wesley Chapel. That plan consists in the consolidation and pro-rating of all the collections for church purposes, and results in a higher average or complete payment of all the claims upon the church, while it relieves the pastor of a burden of collections, which is, indeed, in most pastoral charges grievous to be borne. I think pastors will by almost uniform testimony sustain the assertion that to do full justice by all the collections now required by the church—especially including the centennial collections of last year and this—requires at least one-half a pastor's time and thought during the entire year. Some plan which will relieve pastors of the ever increasing burden of multiplied collections is a thing greatly to be desired in our church at this time. The consolidation of all claims and the collection of the same through the stewards or collectors appointed by the church Conference is, perhaps, the best, as it will interest both pastor and stewards in all the collections, allowing none to be slighted. A great excellence of this plan is its simplicity, for, say what we may about intelligent Methodists, the average Methodist does not, and never will, comprehend distinctly the various claims for which the church asks contributions, and especially will be ignorant of any proper method of distributing a given amount among the several claims. As our plan now is, many members hand the pastor an amount and ask him to divide it as he thinks best, for the number of claims and, far more, the proper ratio of distribution among them transcends the mathematics of their souls. We must simplify the collections, or suffer great loss in the evangelizing work of the ministry while they "leave the word of God to serve tables."

The cause of prohibition prospers wonderfully. It is not yet complicated with politics in Mississippi, and I hope it never will be. The moral grandeur of the movement transcends all precedent and all conception. A great people extricating themselves from the yoke of the devil, under which they have voluntarily placed their necks, is a spectacle which challenges the admiration of angels.

Rev. Sam Jones is much talked of and somewhat discussed in these regions. If he has not given us new gospel, he has certainly given us the gospel in a new style. He gives us, if not the gospel of slang, nor the gospel in slang, at least the gospel with slang. I was tempted to think such a procedure allowable; but, remembering that the Apostle Paul avows that he caught certain people with galle, I suppose we must allow Sam Jones to catch with slang such people as can not be caught in any other way, if there are such people. If Sam Jones is right in supposing that the use of slang is really an important element of his attractiveness as a preacher, then the pulpit must be a great loser by its customary refusal to use it. His success in preaching is, no doubt, rather in spite of his slang than by the aid of it. Christ certainly did not authorize or suggest its use as an aid to preaching. I doubt the propriety of printing his sayings and sermons. The wit and the slang in them catch the popular mind, while the gospel they were intended to spice and intensify is unappreciated. There is but one Sam Jones, and none, I hope, will attempt to imitate him. The stars will shine as bright as ever when the comet has passed. I hope none will understand me to intimate that there ought not to be any comets. They are natural and, no doubt, serve useful purposes in the economy of grace and in the celestial sphere.

W. L. C. H.

From Arcadia, La.

MR. EDITOR: Well, as you know, and being yourself a prime factor therein, we had a splendid time at the Homer District Conference. The attendance of pastors was full, with the exception of our Bro. Sheppard, who was kept at his home, in Athens, by sickness. He sent us a letter of love and cheer, accompanied by a good report of the Tulip circuit. The local preachers and lay delegates were there in force, and the total of preachers and delegates exceeded the famous District Conference lately mentioned by Bishop McTyeire and Dr. R. A. Young. If Dr. Walker, Bro. Pipes and others of the fathers of the Conference had been with us, and a Bishop in the chair, the body could easily have been taken for the Louisiana Annual Conference.

The Ruston people entertained us royally, and there is no room to doubt that Ruston should be chosen as the place of meeting of the Annual Conference when next we come to North Louisiana. Sunday-school Day, Saturday, was a grand success, and much credit is due Bro. Godfrey, who had worked constantly to that end and had secured the attendance of the schools along the line of the railroad.

There were in attendance from abroad, preaching and speaking, Revs. James A. Parker, William Hart and A. C. Cooley, of the Delhi district; President Adams, of Centenary, and the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The latter, after preaching a masterly and eloquent sermon, dedicated the new church according to the Discipline, setting it "apart from all unhallowed or common uses for the worship of Almighty God." A good collection for foreign missions and church extension was taken. We might write of the grand sermons of Dr. Adams and the rest, of the delightful nine o'clock love-feast, the blessed sacramental occasion and other incidents of the Conference; but we suppose that the editor and Secretary Medlock will give accounts of what was said and done in Ruston. We will, therefore, attempt nothing further than to say that a number of ladies and gentlemen organized into a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society with the following very capable officers: President, Mrs. W. A. J. Lewis; vice-president, Mrs. J. J. Neilson; recording secretary, Mrs. Sallie Ashley; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. N. Harris; treasurer, Mrs. Dr. F. M. McCormick; solicitor for the Woman's Missionary Advocate, Mrs. Col. T. C. Standifer.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1885.

P. S.—Bro. Stone decided to protract the meeting, and several brethren remained to help. May God pour out abundantly of his Spirit upon the church and community of Ruston!

MR. EDITOR: I am very desirous of completing, for the purpose of having bound, a set of "The Southern Quarterly Review" for the years 1869 and 1873, inclusive. If any reader of the ADVOCATE has for disposal any of the numbers published during the time indicated, I would like to correspond with him on the subject. I have more than two-thirds of the set completed, and having several duplicate numbers, I may, by exchange, help some brother in the completion of his set, and be at the same time benefited myself.

Yours cordially,

A. F. WATKINS.

"The Church and the World."

The following brief essay was read before the Oxford League, in Carondelet Street Church, last Friday evening, by one of its members. It is simply a straw indicating the current of the wind.

"THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD."

"In the science of mathematics we are taught the nature and meaning of axioms. An axiom is said to be a proposition whose truth is so evident at first sight that no process of reasoning or demonstration can make plainer." The example usually given to illustrate the definition is: "A whole is greater than a part." This is said to be a self-evident proposition. There are axioms, "self-evident truths," in religion. The Savior announced one of them in these words: "Ye can not serve God and mammon." God rules in the church; mammon rules in the world. The church and the world are opposites in nature and habit. Opposites can never be made to agree. Churchliness and worldliness are contraries. We may compare them to light and darkness. They can not dwell together. When the light comes the darkness must withdraw. This is true of the least things as well as of the great things. A large spirit of worldliness is no more incompatible with the spirit of churchliness than a small spirit of worldliness. It is not the largeness or the smallness. It is not the measure or degree that affects the case; but it is the essential principle, and that is present in the small spirit as well as in the large one. It is the spirit in a man that determines his character more than what he does. If he is in the church and yet displays the least spirit of worldliness, there is conclusive evidence that his character needs re-structuring, because the spirit of the world is in direct antagonism with the spirit of Christ. Then, if the things are so, those communions called churches, which allow the members to display, without rebuke, a worldly spirit are simply playing into the hands of the enemy! When they invite the young to join with them because less restraint in regard to worldly things will be exercised on them, they are simply contradicting our Lord's axiom: "Ye can not serve God and mammon." By doing this they bring a reproach upon life on earth and set up their filthy judgments against his infallible judgment, and thus lead the young in rebellion against the authority of God as expressed in the Bible.

"On this subject the trumpet Methodism has never produced an uncertain sound. She has taken her stand upon the Savior's axiom—'Ye can not serve God and mammon'—and her whole history has been loud protest against the endeavor of bringing the world into the church. She says to the youngest as well as the oldest of her members, 'Worldiness is opposed to Christ.' Her exhortation is, 'Come out from among them and be separate.' She offers the pleasures of piety, the reward of good conscience, the peace of God in place of the amusements of the world and the shallow peace of a hour of fashionable pleasure."

Rev. J. O. Keener, presiding elder of the Mobile district, has been on visit to Kansas City. We are glad to learn that his wife's health has much improved, and that her entire recovery is only a matter of a few weeks. The higher latitude of Kansas City and the ministrations of his father's home, Rev. Dr. John Matthews, have hastened convalescence. Enclosing a list of Quarterly Conference notices, Bro. Keener writes a note from which we extract a few sentences:

"This is a wonderful city—a city of country about, and a pushing, business people in it. The children might have caught this fever here. You can see it and feel it in all the works. Our churches are in condition as far as I can tell from careful observation. * * * We have plenty of time down with us to save a soul, but here it is quite otherwise. Time here is precious. Unless you put your hand upon the man, he is gone. This is just the country for such an one as yourself."

—Rev. L. B. Stateler, of the Montana Conference, has been elected delegate to the General Conference and Rev. E. J. Stauley, alternate.

—Dr. Fitzgerald, of the Nashville Advocate, has been up to Chattanooga again. This year he lectures on Amusements, and publishes extracts in his paper. He speaks words of truth and soberness, with point and freshness.

—We regret to learn of the serious and protracted illness of Rev. Early Carradine, pastor of St. Charles Avenue Church. He has been bed-ridden for ten days, and much of time painfully sick. No doubt he will be able to report for duty on Sabbath.

Two Post-graduate Fellowships (worth $500 each), and four Graduate Fellowships (worth $300 each), are annually awarded. Board from $12 to $30 per month. Register sent on application to Wils. Williams, Secretary of Facult. L. C. GARLAND, Chancellor.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

SURREYPORT, La., Sept. 1.—The vote on the removal of the courthouse from the parish of Bellevue to Bossier City, opposite Shreveport, resulted in 118 in majority in favor of Bellevue, the present parish seat.

WACO, TEX., Sept. 1.—In the local option election yesterday, this city gives over 1000 majority against prohibition. Returns from the county at present indicate that local option is defeated by at least 1200 majority. The election was very quiet and orderly. A jubilee meeting was held to-night and speeches were made by prominent speakers.

New York, Sept. 2.—Undertaker Merritt said to-day that the items of his bill for attending the Grant funeral are $14,162.75. "That includes everything I did or furnished here and at Mt. McGregor, including $3000 for carriages. We did not charge a cent more than we would have charged anyone else."

HAVERHILL, Conn., Sept. 2.—All the fire insurance companies of Hartford, with a single exception, and all the fire insurance companies having general agencies in this city, have withdrawn their agencies and discontinued business in the State of New Hampshire on account of the valued policy bill.

OSHKOSH, Wis., Sept. 2.—A drowning accident occurred at the St. Paul Railroad bridge across the river here this morning. The draw being open eleven persons, nine girls and two men, nearly all employees in the Diamond Match Works, attempted to cross the open channel in a boat; they were caught in the swell of a tug which had just previously passed through, and their boat was upset. Only five of them were rescued.

CHRYSTIE, W.V., Sept. 3.—News from Rock Springs to-day indicates all the Chinamen over 500 in numbers have been driven out of town. Fifteen dead Chinamen have thus far been discovered, and as many more dead bodies are probably in the ruins. Fifty houses belonging to the railroad company and to the town owned by Chinamen were burned. The Chinamen are yet in the hills west of the town, without food, afraid to go to Green River, a city distant about ten miles. Gov. Warren is now at Rock Springs, with General Superintendent Dickinson and Superintendent of the Union Pacific Railroad. No more disturbance is anticipated. Food will be sent to the starving Chinamen in the hills by the authorities.

MINNEN, La., Sept. 3.—Negotiations for the completion of the tap railroad were closed this week. The road will be completed in thirty days.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Reports received at War Department from the Indian Territory indicate that the terms of the proclamation in regard to the removal of cattle are being fully complied with—that the cattlemen are moving the cattle as rapidly as possible. As long as the authorities are satisfied that the cattlemen acted in good faith in the matter, making no distinction in moving their herds, no interference will be allowed, but if they find that they are unnecessarily prolonging their departure, and willfully disregarding the proclamation, the United States troops will be ordered to drive them and their cattle from the Territory.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Gen. Rosecrans said to-day there could be no reason for believing that the massacre of Chinamen by miners in Wyoming could lead to serious troubles on the coast. Hugh Mahan, a prominent California politician and campaign speaker now here, takes a contrary view. He says that the unemployed laborers of California, who attribute their lack of employment to the presence of the Chinamen, need only the slightest excitement to make an attack on the Chinese.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Sept. 6.—Bob Haylor, the train engineer who stuck to his post in last Wednesday's accident on the Indiana, Bloomington and Western Railroad, lost the lives of the passengers, died here to-night from the result of injuries. His act was one of the most heroic on record, as he braved certain death to save the lives of three hundred and fifty passengers, many of whom would have been killed had he deserted his post. His funeral will be largely attended.

VANDALIA, Ill., Sept. 4.—Mr. Deane, a prominent farmer living nine miles north of Vandalia, has lost twenty head of cattle out of a drove of 150 head, during the last few days, and some fifteen head more are sick. The disease is pronounced by cattlemen of this vicinity pleuro-pneumonia.

Rockford, Ill., Sept. 4.—Farmers in the northern part of the county report a strange fatality among the hogs. The disease seems of the nature of lung trouble, and it is killing the porkers at a rapid rate. One farmer at Shiloh lost twelve fine hogs, another twenty large pigs and all his little ones, and a third has been burying four or five a day for the past week or more. Reports from Rockford are still worse, nearly every farmer is experiencing trouble, and two have lost nearly 100 apiece. Some contend that it is genuine cholera, not lung disease.

Memphis, Sept. 7.—The cotton crop report for the Memphis district, which embraces West Tennessee, North Mississippi, North Arkansas and North Alabama, is anything but encouraging. The weather prevailed during the past month, which did serious injury to the growing crops. Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee have suffered most, and the fine prospects for a large yield of the staple which were indicated in July report have been materially changed. A severe drought, together with shedding and rust, have caused damage to the growing cotton plant in almost every district excepting Alabama, where the injury has not been so severely felt.

In the election for local option in Rockdale county, Tex., yesterday the prohibitionists were successful by a majority of 80.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Lieut. George M. Storey, commanding the Alaska exploring expedition, reports to the Navy Department from St. Michael, Alaska, June 30, that after leaving Ounalaska, June 9, he visited the new volcano on Bogalee Island and found the only changes since last year's visit to be a less discharge of smoke and steam and a small point making off from the northwest end of the new volcano. The party reached St. Michael on June 23, after encountering heavy ice to the westward of St. Lawrence Island. At St. Michael Lieut. Storey secured nearly all the fur clothes required, also eighteen good dogs and three good teams. The dogs cost about $150 each in exchange for trade goods. An interpreter was also engaged and shipped as ordinary seaman. Lieut. Storey intended taking with him two natives as drivers and the wife of one of them. He expected to leave at once for St. Lawrence Bay and to proceed to Hotham Inlet. All on board the schooner Viking were well and showed great interest in the work ahead of them.

PONT TONACCO, Md., Sept. 7.—The most destructive hail storm ever known in this section occurred Saturday evening. Entire fields of corn and tobacco were destroyed. In many fields not even a leaf of tobacco was left on the stalks or ears of corn on the stalks. The destruction was as large as a bullet. The destruction was general where the storm touched. The damage in Charles county is estimated at $100,000.

New York, Sept. 7.—Owing to the lateness of the start of the initial race between the Genesta and Puritan, and to the lack of wind afterwards, the yacht succeeded to-day in making only half the course, of 20 miles. In this 20 mile race the Genesta sailed the Puritan square sailed the Genesta one mile in ten, and nearly two miles in 20.

The cup for which the Genesta and Puritan are now contesting is held in this country by virtue of the sailing of the yacht America. It was won thirty-four years ago and has never been recaptured by English sails. It was offered by the Royal Yacht Club, in 1851, during the great World's Fair, of that year, open to yachts from all nations. The race in which the America carried off the cup was sailed on Aug. 22, there being eighteen entries. The America won by twenty minutes ahead of the Puritan. The cup thus became the property of the New York Yacht Club in July, 1857, the America's owners having transferred it to the club. In 1880 an attempt was made to recover the cup. The race came off on Aug. 8 of that year between the English yacht Camperdown, owned by James Ashbury, and a fleet of American yachts. The Camperdown came in tenth in the race, the Magie first and the old America second. In 1881 another trial was made by Mr. Ashbury, who seemed determined to get back the cup. The American yachts were again defeated, the Magie being first, the Camperdown second, and the old America third.

In 1881 another trial was made by Mr. Ashbury, who seemed determined to get back the cup. The American yachts were again defeated, the Magie being first, the Camperdown second, and the old America third.

DURHAM, Sept. 7.—Statistics just gathered show that the population of Ireland is now 5,600,000, and that the number of births and marriages is below the average of the previous ten years.

A party of moonlighters raided a farm house near Trillick last Sunday evening. They pulled a girl out of bed and cut off her hair, and then two donkeys, tail to tail, and burned them alive. They also burned a rack of hay and stabled a horse to death.

LIFE'S FAILURES.—But how to hear failures? The best way is not to recognize the fact. Read history, and find the failures have really advanced the world more than successes. Columbus was a failure, Galileo was a failure, Savonarola was a failure, and the world is better for it. If those three men had at any time been gifted with the second sight, and had seen the place they were to fill in history, it might have consoled them; but, no doubt, every one of them died of a broken heart, convicted in his own mind of failure.

This blind goddess hides her favors behind a terrible failure sometimes. One of the best scholars that West Point ever produced spent the whole period of our war underground, building works in the uncharted earth of Vicksburg, and the like. He saw all the boys, whom he had distanced at the academy, ride on to glorious victory with all the pride, and pomp, and circumstance of war, while he, burrowed like a mole, hid his talents underground. When the war was over there was no increase of rank or pay for the industrious engineer, and he had no reward, but his own conscience. How rarely fourth-rate men become generals while he was in that mud? What an instance of the apparent injustice of fate! He was sensible enough to retire from so ungrateful a profession, and to take up one in which he has met with no failures.

Vendell Phillips, in one of his witty lectures, made an amusing catalogue of the hundred habits who should be born on some particular day in New York. Fifty were to be absolutely failures, not able to take care of themselves at all; twenty-five more were to die out of a hard working existence, just as they were getting started; fifteen more were to be bespectacled, inventors, dreamy and impracticable, but able men; and the remaining ten were to be successful men. "If, indeed, anybody can be called a successful man," added the lecturer.

Perseverance to see the successful man with his satellites—the failures—hanging on to him; some who cannot work and some who will not work all needing help. The energetic, industrious, successful man goes pulling his adherents through the world as some smart steam-tug goes pulling lazy freight through the still waters of the Hudson, or in the busy waters of the bay. It is astonishing how generously and unquestioningly these successful men attach themselves to him. Does he never ask himself? Why should I help these people? Why should they not help me? Apparently not, he accepts his duty as unquestioningly as the steam-tug does. The herds of the one is the complement of the energy of the other.—Sunday Magazine.

THE BEST PREACHING.—Of all preaching, in our ordinary pulpits, and on common occasions, apologetic preaching is the poorest and weakest. The minister or the Christian who is constantly defending Christianity is likely to leave the impression that it needs to be defended. The best defense of our holy religion is the preaching of the great central truths of the Gospel by the lips and the lives of Christian men from the pulpits, in the news and the common walks of life.

Endorsement of the Spirit of God in the hearts and consciences of men, is an argument which none can gain say or resist.—Methodist Recorder.

INFLUENCE.

BY REV. JOHN KEEFER.

We scatter seeds with careless hand,
And dream we never shall see them more;
But for a thousand years
Their fruit appears,
In fields that mark the land,
Or fruitful store.

The seeds we do, the words we say,
Still stir the air they seem to float;
We count them over past;
But they shall last—
In the dead judgment day
And we shall meet.

Change the life by the years gone by,
For the love of brethren dear,
Keep, then, the one true way
In work and play,
Let in the world their cry
Of love thou hear.

Disarming Our Enemies.

BY REV. J. D. A. AHRNS, D. D.

"This man's ways please the Lord, he maketh his enemies to be at peace with him."—Prov. xxi. 1.

To disarm their enemies is the natural desire of nearly all men. Few, very few, to whom enmity is genial and pleasant. It is of rare occurrence to meet a fellow-mortal who finds no peace except in war, who can not rest except in the unrest of hostility. To most men enmity is a grievous cross. It is not the fear of possible injury inflicted by enemies, but it is the enmity itself which afflicts the well-disposed and philanthropic man. The consciousness of having not ourselves caused the enmity does not remove the pain which its existence produces.

But can we abolish all enmity, can we disarm all our foes? Generally, yes. Evil may be overcome with goodness. If with Christian meekness and loving kindness we heap coals of fire on the heads of our enemies, their hearts will soon burn within them with remorse. Soon a flame of new and fervent love is kindled. Devotion takes the place of aversion. True, sometimes failure marks the effort in this respect; but the cause is usually manifest. Often in depositing the "coals of fire" men manifest not that wisdom which God bestows, but proceed awkwardly. The motive is not recognized; hence the enemies who are benefited imagine that their humiliation was intended. Chagrin and anger ensue. Or it may be the motive was not pure. Perhaps the "coals of fire" are heaped on the heads of enemies for a vain show in order to influence public opinion, aim and end manifestly being to enlist others to side with us against our foes.

To obliterate enmity and to convert our enemies into friends fully requires the Divine blessing. Expediency will fail, human skill will not avail; but to ensure the Divine blessing and consequent extinction of all enmity it is necessary that our ways please the Lord. Our sentiment and conduct must have His sanction. Our ways being pleasing to the Lord, he will endeavor to please us. Finding that the existing enmity is a source of much affliction to us, he will remove the source. He means for the accomplishment of such happy results are abundant. Hence it is of greatest importance, with pure and holy sentiment and undeniable piety, to prove ourselves worthy of God's friendship. Our ways must please him if we truly design to befriend our enemies and bring about general "disarmament." Particularizing, I hold that to ensure Divine favor in this respect the following four requisites must be met:

1. The existing enmity must afflict us. Christ is the Prince of Peace. Where enmity is at home Christ is a stranger. Are we not all members one of another? Has not one God made us all? It was the fratricide, with gory hand, who asked, "Am I my brother's keeper?" All men are indeed one family; hence when one member suffers all suffer. A child of God is not unconcerned and indifferent in regard to his fellow-men. Their friendship is to him more precious than rubies. It grieves him, it even fills his soul with an anguish, when he discovers that there are men who hate and despise him.

2. Next, it is very important that we ourselves are not filled with enmity. We can not coerce our fellow-men into friendship; but we can certainly keep our hearts free from the poison of hate and ill-will. May others be hostile and belligerent, we are at peace with everybody. Jesus had many enemies; but he was everybody's friend. May others do wrong, we do right; may others curse us, we bless them; may others hate us, we love them—love them with a love without dissimulation.

3. It is also necessary that we manifest and give expression to our amicable disposition. Our enemies must be informed that their enmity afflicts us sorely; that they do us great wrong and woefully sin by hating us and treating us as enemies. Do they hate you without cause? Well, convince them with your unostentatious kindness that their supposed cause for hating you is founded in error.

4. Lastly, we must earnestly pray to God to convert our enemies into friends. Such prayer is certainly included in the ways which please the Lord. I have already heard people pray for their enemies when it was apparent that their sole design was, publicly and with impunity, to punish them. That is wicked. In our closet we must tell the Lord that we had vainly endeavored to placate our enemies. Their ill-will and acrimonious antagonism was a source of torment to us. He only could make peace. He had inclined Esau's heart to peace; he could influence our enemies similarly. He who could command the winds and seas to be still could also allay the angry feelings of our enemies.

Take pains and make haste that your ways may please the Lord. Then your foes will soon become your friends.

Change of Name.

MR. EDITOR: I had thought until within the last few days that I would take no part in the controversy now going on about changing the name of our church, but I begin to feel that, perhaps, it is my duty to write a short article on the subject, as I have been intimately connected with the movement from the beginning. After the Louisville Convention in 1845—of which I was a member—had determined on a separate organization for the church in the Southern States the question came up as to the name we should take. There were already many in the convention opposed to having the word "South"—which had been used extensively in the General Conference of 1844 and in the controversy which followed in the church papers—appended to our name. Dr. A. L. P. Green, of Tennessee, moved that we adopt our original name: "Methodist Episcopal Church in America." But Bishop Soule said the word "South" had been used extensively on both sides of the line to differentiate us from the Northern Church, we, perhaps, had better retain it until our organization was completed and all our financial interests satisfactorily adjusted with our brethren of the North, which suggestion was agreed to. I do not remember that the subject of our name was again discussed in the General Conference until 1854, when "Dr. A. L. P. Green and J. B. McFerrin offered a resolution respecting a change in the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which was laid on the table for the present." This resolution was taken up and read in an afternoon session on the day before the General Conference adjourned, when all was hurry and bustle, and on motion was again laid on the table, where it remained. I have not the journal of 1854 at hand and do not remember whether the subject was ever mentioned in that General Conference. Our next General Conference did not meet until 1866. Then the war between the States was over and the seceding States were all getting back in the Union and the lines separating the two churches had long since been blotted out by mutual consent and there seemed to be no further reason for retaining the suffix "South" to our name except local prejudice.

The subject of a change of name was introduced about the middle of the General Conference in order to give due time for its discussion. "J. B. McFerrin and W. Mooney offered resolutions on the change of the name of the church," which were laid on the table for the present. A few days before the Conference adjourned J. B. McFerrin and W. Mooney withdrew their resolutions and J. B. McFerrin and C. F. Deems offered a substitute proposing "Episcopal Methodist" as the name of the church. Pending the discussion Conference adjourned. When the vote was taken on a subsequent day nine names were proposed and all but two received from no vote to eleven. One name with "South" appended received nine votes. The name "Methodist Episcopal Church in America" received eleven votes. The "Methodist Church" received forty-nine and "Episcopal Methodist Church" received fifty-two. As none received a three-fourths vote the vote was then taken again on the three highest. On the second vote "Methodist Episcopal Church in America" received fifteen, "Methodist Church" fifty-nine and "Episcopal Methodist Church" fifty-two. No election. The third vote was taken on the two highest. "Episcopal Methodist Church" received fifty-nine and "Methodist Church" seventy-one. While the church was still under discussion Conference adjourned. On the next day W. W. Bennett proposed the name "Episcopal Methodist Church," which was adopted by eighty-six yeas over thirty-eight nays. Some members came in after the vote was taken who added their names so that the final vote stood: yeas, 98; nays, 45. But the trouble was not to cease yet. Though we had a large number of memorials from the Annual Conferences to change the name of the church so as to leave off the suffix "South," which had now been fairly done by a two-thirds majority voting for "Episcopal Methodist Church," somebody was disappointed and wanted a chance and time sufficient to defeat the great majority in the General Conference, and though there was no law in the discipline requiring the Bishops to lay our final vote before the Annual Conference for confirmation by a three-fourths vote, amidst the excitement of closing the General Conference, some persons, unknown to me, for their names are not in the journal, got in a proviso requiring the Bishops to submit our vote on the name of the church to the Annual Conference, and, if not confirmed by a three-fourths vote, then our General Conference vote to be null and void, thus giving a minority of a little over one-fourth of the Annual Conference power to nullify and set aside all that the representatives of the whole church in the General Conference, after a full and labored discussion of the subject in all its bearings, had done. Soon after the adjournment of the General Conference the usual controversy in the church papers was resumed until many, disgusted with the whole thing, gave it up and turned away from it. There was a minority of more than one-fourth in the Annual Conference against the change of name, and, with little show of justice, the greater had to submit to the lesser. I have read all, pro and con, that I have lately seen in our church papers on this subject. I regret the controversy very much. I have never been favorable to the word "South" as a part of our church name, and I now see no justifiable reason for its continuance. I think

I will not vote for any name with a geographical or latitudinal or longitudinal appendage. "The world is our parish." I want a clean-cut name that can interfere with no well-balanced man and that will be acceptable everywhere. If I have a chance, I will vote for Episcopal Methodist Church because it will more fully express the true character of our church than any other name yet proposed. We have both in theory and practice the best episcopacy on the earth, and Methodist will fully express our doctrine. I think we had better vote out the name "Methodist Episcopal Church in America," and then, by formal vote, request the next General Conference to give us the name of "Episcopal Methodist Church" without any reference to the vote of Annual Conferences. The General Conference is composed of representatives from every Annual Conference and are presumed to know the wishes of their preachers and people.

Alexandria District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Alexandria District Conference, which convened at Montgomery, La., August 26, was an occasion long to be remembered by all who were so fortunate as to attend. The Rev. N. S. Cornell, P. E., presided with dignity and efficiency and the undersigned attended to the minute business. About thirty delegates, ministerial and lay, were in attendance, and of all of these were persuaded that the good citizens of Montgomery made the same mental observation which is credited to the High Priest of the Jews and his numerous kindred on another interesting occasion. (Acts iv, 13.) The business went forward with dispatch and without needless friction by the aid of Bishop Hargrove's excellent blanks, whose few ambiguities, it has been surmised, are not pointless. Among other features of the Conference an evening session was devoted to the subject of missions, at which stirring addresses were made by several delegates and by the chairman, and which culminated in a resolution, strong enough to focalize and reflect these beams, and in another requesting Rev. J. D. Harper to deliver a missionary sermon before the body at its next session. And among others that may be of interest to the publishers of the ADVOCATE, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Nashville publications, after strong commendatory speeches, were, by an unanimous vote, recommended to the patronage of the religious public within the bounds of the district. The reports from the preachers in charge, all of whom were present except one brother, who was too poor to secure transportation and who forwarded a weeping excuse, show the district to be in a growing, if not a prosperous, condition, and reveal a most hopeful state of feeling upon the part of the self-sacrificing laborers by whom it is manned.

The religious exercises were, perhaps, the most prominent feature of the session, being held morning and evening, and never without that blessed concomitant which, in the mouths of "unlearned and ignorant men," once "took the world for Christ." Large and weeping audiences—the most numerous in the history of the town, it was often stated—waited upon the proclamation of the word, and, while Christians rejoiced, many captive souls were freed and sent forth into the liberty of Christ's people. Until Sunday evening—the last meeting attended by the undersigned—there had been fifteen accessions to the church, and on that evening there were at least two score penitents and from six to ten conversions; and, indeed, from the beginning to the close of the Conference session a sweet spiritual atmosphere seemed to hang about the place and to bring not only every thought of believing souls, but even the rebellious multitudes, of which hundreds were unable to gain access to the place of worship, into at least measurable subjection to the will of Christ. The exercises will be continued during this week with Bros S. H. Whatley, J. D. Harper, J. W. Davis and several lay brethren to assist the pastor.

Of the hospitalities of Montgomery, engineered by the much-loved and indefatigable pastor, Rev. R. A. Davis, and of which the writer both heard and saw much, it will be sufficient to say that it was of that sort which must have been both prefaced and followed by the blessing of him who will not have us ignorant of that great spiritual feast to which he is gathering his disciples of all ages.

Some Visits.

BY REV. H. F. JOHNSON, D. D.

I have often realized in my experience the truth of what Solomon says, "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting." It has been my good fortune to visit several such houses during my brief sojourn in the mountains of western North Carolina.

1. I visited an aged woman who is very vigorous in body. She is near her threescore years and ten, but she can climb these mountains with as much ease as many who have not passed their threescore years. She is poor and lives hard, but is industrious and economical. My wife and self were asked to break bread with her. We went over one evening and partook of her bread, potatoes, milk and butter and relished them more than any meal that has been spread before us lately. The conversation turned on thankfulness to God for his goodness. Said she, "Yes, we ought to be thankful, thankful for everything. Why, we ought to be thankful for life, just to live, that's a great thing." After awhile she added, "Pride is a mighty bad thing, keeps a heap of people from doing right, sticks them up sorter, makes them feel kinder as if no other body was round about or had any rights at all." Then we talked about her husband who had died recently. "The old man," said she, "lived the church long time ago, but when he got near the end he wanted to stay a little longer—was afraid he hadn't prayed enough nor done enough good." And then she asked tenderly if people dying that way could ever get to heaven. After some words of comfort I preached to her Jesus Christ and him crucified, urged upon her repentance, faith, a new heart and a godly life, for she has never professed religion. After awhile she said, "Well, I think I'll start pretty soon, for I'm afraid if I wait till I get better I'll never start at all. I have since asked myself, Am I thankful enough? Do I pray enough? Am I doing what I can for the Master? Is there pride in my heart? It is better to go to the house of mourning," etc.

2. I went to see a man who might pass for one hundred years of age, but he is not more than sixty-five. He is a wreck from sinful, criminal habits, prostrated, unable to rise from his bed, waiting to die. He mourns over a life recklessly spent, out of which no good can come unless it be a warning. Broken down in mind and body, in reputation and fortune, spending his few remaining days in pain and anguish, weeping and mourning, he hopes that God has pardoned him. I talked with him, prayed for him and had forcibly impressed upon my mind the passage, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

3. I visited a man whom I knew from my earliest childhood. He is now ninety-five years old, and has been in bed from paralysis for thirteen months. My introduction was novel. I entered the house, a small log cabin, and told the wife of the sick man my name. She grasped me by the hand, looked straight in my eye and cried out in a high pitch, "Are you Harvey Johnson, the big fat gal's daddy?" (One of my daughters had been thereabouts a short time before.) Then she introduced me to her daughter, "This is Harvey Johnson, the big fat gal's daddy." Then to another woman, using the same words. She turned to the bed on which lay her husband, and in a louder voice she cried out, for he was a little deaf, "Pap, this is Harvey Johnson, don't you know him, the big fat gal's daddy? Just then in came two little girls—grandchildren, I think, one carrying a baby nearly as large as herself—to see what all the uproar was about. The kind old lady kept right on, "Go up and speak to the man, don't be afraid, that's Harvey Johnson, the big fat gal's daddy," and with that assurance they marched right up like little Julius Cæsars and gave me the right hand of fellowship. The woman was satisfied, so was I. Then I talked to the poor afflicted man about a half hour. He had never joined the church, but had felt great comfort in praying, and was very thankful to God for his great goodness. I read several passages of Scripture to him and prayed for him. He joined very heartily in the service. When I bade him good-bye, I said to him, "I am very glad I have had the privilege of coming to see you." He replied, "I am much gladder than you," and thanked me heartily. I had impressed on my mind the passage, "Jesus came to seek and to save the lost."

4. A lady, the daughter of my father's friend, is suffering from cancer and her end is near. About sixty years ago she joined the church with twenty-two other young girls, two or three of whom were my sisters. Hearing that she wanted to see me, I called on her and found her in great suffering of body; but her mind clear and her heart stayed upon God. The one hundred and third Psalm and the fourteenth chapter of John were the lessons, "The Beautiful Shore" the song, and the house of mourning became the house of rejoicing. "It was good to be there."

5. One other visit. There is only a few miles off an afflicted boy, I say a boy, though he is twenty-five years old. For fourteen years he has been blind and for five he has been suffering from acute rheumatism. His body has wasted away. He lies on his little bed or sits on his little chair. He calls everything he has little. He is patient, cheerful and loving. He is so thankful for little favors. How much we, who have health and a thousand other blessings which little Joe never dreamed of, complain and grumble at our small lots while he, calm and patient and trustful, looks up to his heavenly Father without a murmur and in thankfulness for what he receives! He has sent for members of my family, not to see him, but that he may see them. And he sees them, he says he sees them, though he is blind. Ah, little Joe, your eyes are glazed now, but God will open them by and by, and thou shalt see—the hill-tops of glory, see the jasper walls and the gates of pearl, shall see the lamb arrayed in his beauty and hear him say, "It is enough." I have heard lectures on patience, have delivered some myself; but the best I ever heard is the one delivered by little Joe as he sits in his little chair and receives gratefully whatever God has in store for him.

The secretaries of the Woman's Missionary Societies, Jackson district, Mississippi Conference, will please send me as soon as practicable their reports. They will please also notify me of any society that has disbanded, that we may devise means for reviving such.

THE CHURCH: WHAT IT IS AND WHERE IT IS. By Rev. J. A. Parker.

At some of our Quarterly Conferences the fact has come out that Bro. Parker's valuable book is being studied in a few of the Sunday-schools of our district. The fathers and mothers (the oldest as well as the youngest should attend Sabbath-school) and the young men and young women in all our schools would be greatly helped in the developing of themselves into intelligent Christians and well-informed Methodists, if they would study the valuable matter contained in this book. We would be glad to know that the men and women and youth of our churches and schools were making themselves familiar with the important facts set forth with great clearness and accuracy by Bro. Parker. Let Sunday-school superintendents and Bible class teachers send to the author at Bastrop, La., for a dozen or two copies of "The Church," and so make the trial.

PRICE.

BY JAMES H. L. JONES.

It is a sad-sad-sad thing,
A bird, the loneliest of the kind,
Hears down a faint faint from afar,
While all its mates are dumb and blind.

It is a sad-sad-sad thing,
That, ere in the roller ring,
Thine eyes were like mine once,
But now they are like mine no more.

It is a sad-sad-sad thing,
The story of some ancient ill;
But "thou too" "thou too" "thou too,"
Is all it says, and then is still.

It is a sad-sad-sad thing,
It calls and calls and calls,
Hushed by the pathos of its fate,
Listen: no whisper of reply.

It is a sad-sad-sad thing,
Comes from its doom-dissevered mate,
A pain articulate so long,
Whose ghost still lives the furthest thing
Down the way of solitude of time.

Wait of the world's wonder-hour,
When gods found mortal maidens fair,
And will again be joined with power,
Love's kindly law to overbear.

Like Pagan, did it feel the stress
And coil of the prevailing world, Close round its being and its breath,
Mute as a bird's nature to a bird's?

One only memory left of all
The motley crowd of vanished scenes,
Here and vain impulse to recall
By repetition what it means.

"Phoebe" is all it has to say
In plaintive cadence clear and o'er,
Like children who have lost their way
And know their names, but nothing more.

Is it a type, since nature's life
Vibrates to every note in man,
Of that ineffable desire,
Meant to be, since life began?

1. In strange lands at gray of dawn,
Waterfall have heard that fruitless plaint
Through memory's chambers deep withdrawn,
Renew its iterations faint.

So might yet from remotest years
It come to us in magic, rare
With longings unexpressed and tears
Drawn from the very source of life.

A Phase of the Temperance Question.

MR. EDITOR: We have been watching the current of opposition turned against the cause of temperance by those whose craft is endangered by its success. The basin subterfuge among politicians who are afraid to risk their elections without the influence of the saloon is that all prohibitory measures to restrain and control the liquor traffic strikes of the nature of sumptuary laws, which, they say, are averse to a free and democratic government. "No sumptuary laws" has a place in the Democratic platform.

In Congress, when a commission of inquiry was asked for by ten thousand petitioners from various temperance organizations to investigate the liquor business in relation to the good of the nation, it was opposed on the ground that every measure that looks to the restriction of the alcoholic traffic is a sumptuary law. But the sophistry of this plea was fully exposed by the Hon. J. T. Updegraff, member in Congress from the State of Ohio. In a speech in the House, in answer to a speech of Mr. Knott, who urged sumptuary laws as a plea in favor of alcoholic traffic, he said: "This charge is one of defilement and historic fact. Webster defines 'sumptuary'—'Pertaining to or regulating expenses.' He says, 'Sumptuary laws are laws passed by the government to restrain the expenses of its subjects or citizens either in apparel, food, or otherwise.' Furthermore he said: 'The law writers sustain this definition. Bouvier, in his law lexicon, defines them to be laws relating to the expenses of the people, and made to restrain excess in apparel, food and furniture, regulating the diet and dress according to rank.' Furthermore he said: 'Blackstone makes a similar, but stronger distinction. He defines them as laws against luxury and extravagant expenses in diet and dress, and the like, and speaks of them as an absurd relic of an earlier age. But laws against intemperance are distinctly declared to be of an entirely different nature and a legitimate exercise of civil power. If a man makes his vice public, though it may be such as principally to affect himself, as drunkenness, and the like, they then become by the bad example they set of pernicious effect to society, and, therefore, it is then the business of human laws to correct them.' Furthermore he said the profound and philosophic Montesquieu, in his 'Spirit of Laws,' discusses the subject of sumptuary laws at great length and learning, but evidently was not aware that laws against intemperance and the traffic which is its twin belonged to that class. He treats of sumptuary laws only in connection with luxury, extravagance and rank. Furthermore he said historical evidence confirms the same view. Sumptuary laws have been directed against luxury and extravagance, and not against intemperance. One of the sumptuary laws of a Chinese Emperor not only commanded frugality, but enforced labor, adding, if there is any man who does not work or a woman who is idle, somebody must suffer. The sumptuary laws of the Romans prohibited luxury and extravagance. They regulated the dress of the women and the dowry of brides. Under Tiberius sumptuary laws were by him enforced against the quantity of gold and silver ornaments, against pictures and statues, against wondrous art, against dress above rank. These and many other such laws were directed not against intemperance proper, but luxury above rank. The English sumptuary laws were a series of absurd and arbitrary decrees against extravagance mainly in dress, ornament and diet, but never against intemperance in the use of intoxicants. They were a part of the crushing aristocratic machinery which sought not the benefit of the many; but the law guarded the ascendancy and promotion of the few. So it will be seen that sumptuary laws were always designed to oppress the poor and to promote aristocracy; whereas the prohibition of the liquor traffic is always designed to crush a vital evil—to benefit all men, and especially to benefit the poor and the ignorant.

We only have to investigate the working of those who oppose themselves to the temperance cause to witness a current of sophistry and intrigue running through their whole scheme from beginning to the end. The cry in Congress is, "Sumptuary." In the States it is, "Indemocratic." Among the freedmen it is, Your rights and privileges are taken from you by this temperance move. This is the first step. The next will be to limit your tobacco; then next to restrict the amount of bacon, and, finally, to expel the oil-mix, they tell them the ultimate of the plan is to put them back in slavery. Such sophistry can only be equaled by the forty acres and the mule promised the freedman by the carpet-bagger to make votes. A cause dependent upon such chicanery for its existence must sooner or later fall before the intelligence and refinement of the people of this commonwealth. J. P. MANFIELD, LA., Aug. 31, 1885.

Louisiana Educational Association. What Next?

MR. EDITOR: You have heard of the second annual meeting of the Louisiana Educational Association, recently held at Monroe, La. Three years ago President and Mrs. T. S. Sligh, of Homer Masonic Female College, aided by Col. Alexander, of Minden F. M. College, Prof. R. A. Smith, Rev. J. W. Medlock, of Homer, Prof. A. C. Calhoun, and others, issued a call for a meeting of the friends of education at the concert hall of Prof. Sligh's school. A few friends and workers in the cause came forward, organized and went to work. Sligh, president; Calhoun, secretary; Smith, treasurer; Alexander, editor, and Hon. W. H. Goodale, orator.

The first meeting was held at Minden, and was visited by representative men of your city—Col. W. H. Browne, Prof. W. O. Rogers, Rabbi Leucht, Superintendent Easton—besides a number of leading citizens from other parts of the State. The speeches, essays, lectures, etc., were in keeping with the high aims of the association. The address of the orator of the association gave life and fresh vigor to the enterprise. Hon. Warren Easton was elected president. An Executive Committee, composed of Col. Boyd, Col. Nicholson, Mr. Goodale, Mr. T. F. Boyd, and others, was appointed. Hon. J. H. Shopper, of Shreveport, was elected orator. The roll of members was very much enlarged. At the recent session all the principal officers were re-elected, and the roll still further lengthened out: Mr. Easton, president; Prof. Calhoun, secretary; Prof. Smith, treasurer; Miss Williams, editress; Miss —, historian, and this scribbler, orator. We were honored with the presence of Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews and Prof. Hutson, of Mississippi, Gov. McEnery and other distinguished visitors.

The work goes on grandly, being helped by every grade of learning and sentiment. Calvinism, Methodism, Episcopalianism, Catholicism and skepticism, together with all other sorts of isms, meet in one common onslaught on ignorance and superstition. The devout Christian can proudly claim that it was not his aim nor his desire to project into the occasion of an annual meeting any of the customs of his church and creed contrary to the customs and creeds of others. But just here I want to say that the world can not claim so much for its charity.

One of the first things I heard on reaching Monroe was that the programme of exercises for the Louisiana Educational Association included a grand concert and ball for Thursday night! Now, had it been arranged for a "grand foot washing," or a "grand love-feast," or a "grand class meeting," or a "grand experience meeting," or a "holy mass" on Thursday night, what a howl of disapprobation would have gone up from members of that association because there were some there who would have preferred "holy mass" to "class meeting," while some would have preferred a "class meeting" to "holy mass!" The association is not in charge of the morals of the people, and its managers have no right to project into its work anything on that line.

It is no use to go around the issue. The theological professor has just as much right to have the association endorse his peculiar views as the temperance professor has to procure the endorsement of his. This association was born of religious parentage, and is, or should be, as religious as a regiment of soldiers, or a State prison, or Congress—all of which have chaplains and recognize God in prayer. But just here and just now I enter my solemn protest against any more "halls," or any "love-feasts," or any "foot washing," or any "high mass" for the souls of the dead being recognized as any part or parcel of the programme of those meetings of the Louisiana Educational Association. I submit the justice of this view to the judgment of the intelligent.

J. A. PARKER.

China Grove Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: Having been requested to send you a notice of the China Grove Camp Meeting, you have the following: The meeting was well attended, the weather favorable and the moonlight nights delightful. The congregations were large and attentive, and the estimated attendance on Sunday was about two thousand persons. There was a large number of tenters, and some new tents had been erected. This camp ground has been in existence seven years, commencing with a small beginning, having been born in a prayer meeting under an oak during the pastorate of Rev. P. Howard. It has the appearance of permanency, and at this place many souls date the commencement of a new life.

The meeting commenced on Friday evening and closed on the following Wednesday morning. It moved off well at the beginning; but it was apparent that the church was not fully equipped for the battle. There were thirty-eight accessions. The number of conversions could not be ascertained; but was supposed to be between seventy-five and one hundred. At several services the number at the altar for prayers was one hundred, or more. Many of the young people were the happy recipients of converting grace. The preachers present from the Lutheran field were Dr. Harmon, of Summit; Bro. Featherston, of Kavanaugh; Col. Heward, of Yazoo county; Smith, of Columbia; Pugh, of Amite City, and Simmons, the popular and live pastor of the work there. The presiding elder, Bro. Rayner, reached the camp ground on Monday to hold his Quarterly Conference. From the local ranks were Bros. Havors, Moore, Hyde and Reagan. This preaching may be characterized as earnest and practical. The young people received special attention. Bro. Featherston held a service for them at the church and addressed them on Sunday at eleven A. M., and Bro. Harmon entertained and instructed the children at three P. M.

The order during the day was excellent; but during the night "some fellows of the baser sort" disturbed the quietness of the consecrated spot. I commend the conduct of the young people. Though they associated freely, I observed no giddy and vain trifling or any conduct unbecoming the occasion. The people are kind and hospitable, and those more immediately interested in the meeting endeavored to make it both pleasant and profitable. It will be remembered long by us who were there—by many whose souls were liberated from the bondage of sin and made partakers of the Divine nature; and its scenes and enjoyments will not soon fade from the memory.

I have three suggestions to make to the association:

1. By all means have the camp ground incorporated with metes and bounds.
2. Permit no one to sell lemonade, ice cream, tobacco or cigars, or anything, within the incorporate limits. The licenses received do not compensate for the demoralizing influences engendered thereby. The vending of such things draws the attention from the object of the meeting, and many a boy will there take his first lesson in the use of tobacco. The thoughtful mind will readily see the tendency of this policy.
3. Have the pulpit moved forward ten or fifteen feet, so that it may be under the main body of the tabernacle. The preacher would then speak with more ease to himself and with more pleasure and profit to his hearers. We hoped that the editor of our ADVOCATE would put in an appearance.

Fraternally, J. M. FURR, AMITE CITY, Louisiana.

Our Conference Collections.

I noticed in a recent ADVOCATE the action of a District Conference recommending the organization of a foreign missionary society in every church. This is a good idea. It certainly would help that fund and would stimulate the consciences of the brethren to contribute to all other church purposes; but in this plan there is the same chance for failure that already existed. I read an article in our paper some weeks ago that seemed to put at a discount the preacher whose conscience would give him no rest until the last cent assessed against his charge was raised and paid over to the proper authorities; yet it would be only this kind of a preacher who could make a success of church missionary societies.

I would suggest what, it seems to me, would be a successful plan for fully developing all the financial resources of our church, and especially for raising the Mississippi Conference to its proper financial position. Our Wesleyan brethren after a long, patient and careful investigation of the affairs of their Foreign Missionary Society came to the conclusion that in order for them to advance successfully, or even to maintain their ground, they must have more secretaries. We also need more. My plan would be to make every Annual Conference missionary secretary an add to the general secretary not only in name, but also in reality. Let him be required to be present at all the District Conferences and at as many places as possible in the bounds of the Conference during each year. If he faithfully performs his duty, he will arouse our preachers and people to a sense of what they owe to the missionary cause and to all the other collections ordered by the Annual Conference. Let the Bishop appoint the secretary to a work that will only require half his time, and let the Board of Home Missions provide for the balance of his support. If he paid to the right man in our Conference, it will be one of the best investments our Board ever made. The secretary, together with requirements laid down in Paul's letter to Timothy, needs also the "grace of giving" and the ability to collect.

I think that an arrangement of this kind would benefit the church along all lines. It is true that our presiding elders could do much of this work; but their time is too fully occupied with other matters. I have preached in the Mississippi Conference nearly six years and have never yet found a people who, if approached rightly, would not pay to the full all demands upon them.

Brethren, let us hear from you. Are you not as much ashamed as I am that our Conference falls behind in its collections every year? If you are, suggest a remedy or let me have your views on my plan. Your brother, JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

Every Proper Prayer is Always Answered.

But a prayer to be proper must always be made with the distinct and accepted understanding that it may be granted just as offered, or modified more or less, or refused entirely, just as God in his wisdom may deem best; and, furthermore, the petitioner must be in a proper state of mind and heart to present the petition and to receive the answer as it may be granted. Then if all these conditions be fully complied with on the part of the petitioner, why would anyone think that the Lord would hesitate to grant the petition? To suppose that he would refuse, or modify, or delay even, unnecessarily, would imply that God either does not authorize prayer at all or that he is whimsical and unfeeling or that he is arbitrary and unkind. But far from that—"as a father pletheth his children, so the Lord pletheth them that fear him." The Savior kindly tells us to "ask, and it shall be given you."

"What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?" "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father, which is in heaven, give good things to them that ask him?" The Savior, when he asked "how much more" will our heavenly Father give us good things when we ask him right, meant, of course, to let us know that just in proportion, as the Lord is more able and more loving to us than we are to help our children, is he more willing and ready to bless us with all needed good when we ask him right, of course?

The reason so few of the innumerable so-called prayers are answered is because so few are offered aright. There are very many reasons why answers to so many of the so-called prayers are so long deferred or so often never granted at all. In the first place too many of the petitioners are wanting in too many of the prerequisites essential to the receiving answer to prayer—either the mind or the heart is not in a proper state of earnest devotion, compliant submission, loving obedience and trusting faith. And in the next place the petitioners too often do not begin at the proper place and in the proper manner, and they ask for improper things and dictate improper terms, and then they do not expect the Lord to pay but very little, if any, attention to their perfunctory, soulless and unrelieved lip-performances. Faith can never enter into a soul in such a state of unpreparedness and indifference. And prayer is never answered without faith. The Savior says, "What things soever ye desire when ye pray believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." St. James says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed." But no one can exercise effectual faith until the prerequisites are complied with. If such could be, the Almighty would be robbed by violence. But the Savior has taught us who are poor in spirit, for there is the kingdom of heaven; that they that mourn shall be comforted; that the meek shall inherit the earth; that they which do hunger, thirst after righteousness, shall be filled; that they that are merciful shall obtain mercy; that the pure in heart shall see God; that the peacemakers shall be called the children of God; that blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; and that they that are reviled and persecuted and all manner of evil spoken against them falsely, for his sake, are blessed. And he encourages us to rejoice, and to be exceedingly glad; for great is your reward in heaven." Now, did not the Savior mean to teach us in this inimitable discourse when we are to begin to "seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness?" and to what glorious rewards we may obtain? And when anyone comes to God in such a state of soul as the Savior here recommends, faith just swells up spontaneously in the heart and rushes irresistibly into the mind and awells into a flood of comfort and joy that swoops away all doubt of God's mercy and goodness and willingness to pardon and save to the uttermost all who come into him aright, and the soul is filled unutterably full of the love of God. Nothing short of this will be acceptable to God. He will receive nothing less; he asks nothing more. Stopping short of this it is impossible, utterly impossible, to believe that God will pardon and save us. Coming fully up to the Savior's standard we can not help but believe. But without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Why should any doubt God's mercy and goodness and go unblissed and unhappy? He so loved the world as to give his Son to die for us, and as surely as the less is contained in the greater so surely will the Lord "with Christ freely give us all things." Since he did not withhold his Son, how can anyone think he will withhold anything else, as the gift of his Son was so infinitely greater than all other things put together? What a prodigy of absurdity to think so! Would a nation spend millions of money to build and man an invincible navy, and then when the tug of war come refuse to supply the brave and loyal men with ammunition and coal? Would a man incur the expense of digging to a great depth and finding plenty of good water for his family and then refuse to further expend the inconsiderable sum needed to buy a bucket and rope to draw it?

From the Work.

RICHLAND, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed an excellent meeting at Richland. Bro. Ramsey, my presiding elder, was with me, doing valuable service for the Master. The whole church was greatly revived. Six conversions and eight accessions.

THOS. CAMERON.

MR. EDITOR: I am here to aid Bro. T. Cameron this week in a meeting. The readers of the ADVOCATE will remember that there was a great revival at this place in June, in which a considerable number of souls were converted and added to the church. We hope that they will be strengthened and many more brought in on this occasion.

I attended the Salem Camp Meeting, Louisville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, August 21-27. There were about twenty-five conversions and ten accessions to the church. Revs. J. D. Cameron, P. E., J. A. Leach, P. C., J. S. Oakley, L. D. Worsham, G. H. Hodge and A. W. Langley were the preachers, together with Revs. Cooper, Vance and Fox, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. From thence I went to Waterford and spent last week with Bro. C. L. Ballard. The meeting at that place was a great success, several conversions and the church membership greatly revived. I left Bro. Ballard and his people triumphing in the Lord. May the good work go on until their designs are accomplished, especially the closing up of the liquor traffic in Waterford!

Rev. J. H. Hunter, of Cornersville circuit, is sick with typhoid fever.

Rev. H. C. Parrott is carrying the works of the enemy by storm on McCoel circuit. He, aided by Bro. J. A. Bowen, held a successful meeting at McCoel last week. The Lord is blessing the Attala circuit, also under the ministry of Bro. Dollar. Bro. Cameron has just closed a good meeting at Richland. All along the line the bugle notes of victory are sounding: "Bless the Lord, O, my soul!"

G. W. HACHMAN.

SEBASTIA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Friday night last, August 29, I closed a meeting of four days at Soule Chapel, on this charge. Results: Twenty accessions and the church abundantly blessed. I had no ministerial help.

E. F. KIDGEE.

LAKE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a very successful and profitable meeting at High Hill, Lake circuit. Results: About twenty-five or thirty conversions, two accessions and the church greatly blessed—most of the conversions and the two accessions were from the Sunday-school. We are under lasting obligations to Bros. J. S. Weems, (local), and A. D. Miller, from Trenton circuit, for efficient services rendered. To the Lord be all the praise and glory!

W. W. CAMMACK.

MARTIN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Within the last month I have held protracted meetings at three points on my charge and at every meeting the pastor was blessed and strengthened. At Mizpah the meeting continued five days and resulted in the revival of the church; the conversion of several persons and four accessions. An outdoor meeting at Flower Hill was broken up by the rain at the close of the third day. The result there was a strengthening of our minds for the work of church building and three accessions to the church. At Martin we had an especially delightful meeting. We had three services a day for ten days. The spirit of prayer seemed to possess the entire membership, and in turn was manifest at the very first service. Sinners were convicted and converted, the backslidden were reclaimed, God's people were blessed and cried for joy and thirty-two persons united with the church. Thanks are due Bros. Drake, Poun, Bradford, Slins, Robertson and others for valuable service rendered.

There is to be seen a marked advance in every department of church work on the different appointments on the charge. There have been added to the membership of the church on the work this year sixty persons, three-fourths of whom were received on professions of faith. I devoutly thank the Lord for his goodness.

A. F. WATKINS.

TERRY, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have recently enjoyed a gracious revival of religion at Terry circuit, at Bethesda Church. Assisted by Rev. H. D. Howell, Hazlehurst, we protracted the service seven days, embracing the first Sunday in August. The congregations, generally, were large, and attention given. The people, as well as the preachers, met promptly at ten o'clock for prayer and experience meeting, which was by no means a small part of our services, but was very edifying and profitable to all exercised therein. After a short intermission we came together again for eleven o'clock service.

The brethren gathered themselves together for what we call a "men's prayer meeting," and the sisters likewise for a "ladies' prayer meeting." There we poured out our souls before God in praise and prayer and talked freely one with another for the space of one hour, after which we again came together for evening services. And by the means of these morning and evening prayers and experience meetings and the preaching of God's word under the influence of the Holy Spirit, we were sufficiently humbled before God so that we could truly say,

"In my hands no price I bring, Simply to thy cross I cling."

And to our heart's delight God removed with compassion towards us and poured out his Holy Spirit upon us in great power, which resulted visibly in twelve conversions, five accessions to the church and his believing children greatly revived and strengthened in their most holy faith. In word, I do not know of any church which is in a better condition than Bethesda. We have the best Sunday school in many respects at this church than I know of anywhere. Prayer class meetings are regularly held and well attended. A woman's mission society, which has been organized several years, is in good working order. Pray for us that we may abound more and more in the work, knowledge and love of God.

J. N. TUCKER, P. C.

BYHALIA AND VICTORIA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Some six months since the above-named charge was placed under the pastorate of the undersigned by Rev. John Barcroft, presiding elder of this, the Holly Springs district. The work was undertaken with fear and trembling, as the auspices were far from favorable. We are glad to report, however, that everything is moving on gradually. We have closed a series of meetings at Victoria with very gratifying results. At Victoria a week's work resulted in a most glorious revival in the church, eight conversions and six accessions. The Victorians, although we humorally are, are strong in the Lord, regular Spartan band. It would be hard to find a church in North Mississippi, or, indeed, anywhere, that is more according to members, harder or enjoys more religion than this noble people. Victoria is a town on the M. & S. R. R., and, of course, the church organization has had but a few years of existence. We have no church building worth the name, but a very strong and decided effort is now being undertaken one that will be a credit to town, vicinity and to Methodism. We hope, Mr. Editor, before the close of the year closes to have you visit and dedicate to the Lord a handsome new church at this place. One of most encouraging features of the work at Victoria, which culminated in revival, is the awakened and increasing interest in the cause of prayer, not only of church members, of the irreligious in the vicinity. Everybody is helping to build the church. May God abundantly bless this noble people and give them every one a part and lot in that house made with hands! Acknowledgment are due Rev. J. T. Moody for very assistance rendered during the meeting. Bro. Moody favored us with a five very powerful and effective sermon, winning all hearts. A pastor's lasting love and gratitude but a poor return for this valuable help.

At Byhalia we have been laboring in the prayer meeting, Sunday and pulpit to sow good seed, expecting before the close of the year to reap abundant harvest. In this the Lord has not disappointed us, blessed be his name. Sinners have been converted, backslidden reclaimed and the church wonderfully revived. Never in our life have we had our heart so set upon anything as upon this meeting, and we are filled with thanksgiving and praise to our God for the outpouring of spirit and the demonstration of power. Happier multitudes of heartier witness and testimony Jesus we have never seen or heard. While the good work was moving the church there were five or six

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1885.

All the "first sales" have been duly chronicled, and all crop reports agree that they are the first fruits of an abundant harvest. The acreage is measurably increased in many sections, and the yield will be possibly twenty per cent. larger than last year. There is a spirit of hopefulness abroad in the land. This, then, is a good time for pastors to increase the ADVOCATE'S subscription list. See that all who have pleaded poverty have an opportunity of supplying themselves with their own church paper. An ADVOCATE in a family now will help the connectional collections during the next two or three months. Our people must know the needs of Zion before they can be expected to display the grace of liberality. Men are not apt to contribute to causes about which they are uninformed. The well-filled columns of a church paper is the most efficient "help" a pastor can have.

How thrilling is the news from the churches. There seems to be a grand simultaneous charge on the empire of darkness all along the line. Soul-saving is not a lost art and the gospel has yet apostolic power. We would be glad for brethren to forward brief reports of meetings immediately. A "revival column" will cheer the church universal.

The voice from the West on foreign mission collections is a trumpet call to the whole church. The Denver, Montana and Western Conferences have met their assessments in full. If the older and better organized sections of our connection make like responses, next May will look upon a treasury out of debt and with gilt-edged credit. To achieve this, let each pastor resolve to report no deficit at Conference on the foreign mission assessment. We will underwrite for one pastor.

A postal from President Adams, of Centenary College, last week, received after the ADVOCATE had gone to press, brought cheering news of the opening session. On the first day there were more matriculations than at any opening since 1881. It is confidently expected that the attendance this term will show a marked advance. Since the completion of the great trunk line from New Orleans to Memphis, giving Centenary easy and ample railroad facilities, confidence in its permanent and increasing success has been restored. The religious atmosphere in that college is most wholesome. During his presidency Dr. C. G. Andrews once remarked on the floor of Conference that he believed a boy would more likely be converted at Centenary College than at home. No church institution could have higher praise.

The centennial of temperance reform in the United States is to be celebrated next Sabbath, the twentieth instant. Ministers of all denominations are requested to preach special sermons on the subject, and all congregations to offer special prayer for the decrease of intemperance and the destruction of the liquor traffic. This is the great Divine-human cause of our age and country. No one should be indifferent or withhold his influence. It involves the shelter of our homes, the salvation of our sons, the enlargement of our Christian civilization. Opposition is stubborn and strong. Millions of money are ready to purchase perjured consciences, suborn witnesses and subsidize influences, commercial, social, political and ecclesiastical. We must not underrate the power of our enemy. But God and right are on our side, and we must prevail. The essay of Dr. Benjamin Rush, published one hundred years ago, was the first note in an organized struggle against this vandal invader. It is an event worthy of commemoration. The new century will witness nobler things in the redemption of our country from this curse. By resolution of the preachers' meeting the New Orleans Methodist pastors will make this the theme of pulpit discourse next Sabbath.

The Administration of Foreign Missions.

Of almost equal importance with the educated spirit of missions and liberal offerings therefor is the question of administration. With generous giving there must be wise and economical appropriations. Every farthing of the Lord's money should assure the largest possible returns. Misappropriations or excessive appropriations are to be deplored. Business methods must be as rigidly applied in the disbursements of mission funds as in the management of any purely secular enterprise. This the church has a right to and does demand. While the grace of liberality will not fail of its reward whatever the use or misuse of our offerings, we do not like to put money in a bag with holes. It is, therefore, with great satisfaction that we publish an article in another column from Dr. Kelley, our missionary treasurer. He gives concisely and clearly the history of the Board's administration for several years and the present condition of the treasury. The principles on which they proceeded, their reasonable faith in the church, the growing demands of our widening fields and the annual receipts are all succinctly stated.

In the office administration of foreign missions one of two lines of policy must be pursued—either appropriate money only after it is collected or venture on the probable offerings of the church. The first, so far as we know, is not adopted absolutely by any church or Board of Missions in the world. The second, however, is variously modified. Within conservative limits it is the proper plan. The other offers no field for expansion, no stimulus to larger and grander things. There must be the courage that ventures into doors opened by Providence in order to develop greater zeal and liberality at home. To this policy are we indebted for the growth of our foreign missions within the past seven years.
